But here is the trouble. Brethren grow impatient to have the work move on, but yet it is better to delay than to crowd, hence this article. We know that if all the ways and means that are suggested for the progress of the missionary work were at once enforced, it would cause no small amount of trouble. In many cases elders know the sentiment of their congregation and think it prudent to wait for a change of sentiment. In other churches the elders have not been educated to think as Annual Meeting thinks on this subject; hence all crowding or compulsory movement only gives offense. Yet such brethren are often unjustly censured, for, while they may oppose some good measures, they are trying to keep the church as it was when they accepted their office.

Perhaps the prosperity of the church needs the restraining influence of these calmer minds, and we should not be too impulsive in our thoughts and actions. Aaron was a great help to Moses, as a spokesman, but when left to himself, he soon had the people worshiping calves, and if over-zealous and impulsive natured brethren always had their own way, we might see Aaron's error repeated in another form. Let this be a lesson for us, and let reason and moderation be manifest in all our actions. Let us not be headstrong and willful, but let us always work with an eye single to the glory of God. The crowding, drive-ahead spirit that will have things our own way, regardless of our brethren's feeling, is not the right spirit to accomplish good, and is not in harmony with the Bible, charity, or reason.

CHARITY.—1 Cor. 13.

BY JAS. H. LARKINS.

CHARITY, like the dew from heaven, falls gently on the drooping flowers in the stillness of night. Its refreshing and revivifying effects are felt, seen and admired. It flows from a good heart and looks beyond the skies for approval and reward. It never opens but seeks to heal the wounds inflicted by misfortune. It never harrows up, but strives to calm, the troubled mind.

Charity is another name for disinterested love,—the human, sympathetic feeling, that which seeks the good of others, that which would pour out, from the treasures of its munificence, gifts of good things upon all. It is that feeling that leads on the reformer, which inspires the philanthropist, which blesses and curses not. It is the "Good Samaritan" of the heart. It is that which thinketh no evil and is kind, which hopeth all things, endureth all things, believeth all things. It is the angel of mercy which forgives seventy and seven times and still is rich in the treasure of pardon.

Charity visits the sick, soothes the pillow of the dying, drops a tear with the mourner, buries the dead and cares for the orphan. It delights to do offices of good to those who are cast down, to relieve the suffering of the oppressed and distressed, and to proclaim the Gospel to the poor. Its words are more precious than rubies, its voice is sweeter than honey; its hand is softer than down, its step as gentle as love.

Whoever would be respected and beloved, whoever would be useful and remembered with pleasure when life is over, must cherish this virtue. Whoever would be truly happy and feel the real charms of goodness, must cultivate this affection. It becomes, if possible, more glorious when we consider the number and extent of its objects. It is as wide as the world of suffering, deep as the heart of sorrow, extensive as the wants of creation, and boundless as the kingdom of need. Its spirit is the messenger of peace, holding out to quarreling humanity the flag of truce. It is needed everywhere, in all times and places, in all trades, professions and callings of profit or honor which men can pursue in the home life.

There is too often a lack of charity. It should be considered as a sacred duty, long and well to cultivate it, to exercise it daily and to guard well its growth. The peace and happiness of the world depend greatly upon it. Nothing gives a sweeter charm to youth than an active charity, a disposition kind to all who can properly estimate the powers and sweetness of an active charity. He who carries ever with him the spirit of boundless charity to man, often does good when he knows not of it,—an influence seems to go forth from him which soothes the distressed, encourages the drooping, stimulates afresh the love of virtue and begets its own image and likeness in all beholders. Without the exercise of this grace, it is impossible to make domestic and social life delightful.

Deeds and words of conventional courtesy, grown familiar, are comparatively empty forms. The charitable soul carries with it a charmed atmosphere of peace and love, breathing which, all who come within its benign influence, unfold their noblest qualities and develop their most amiable traits. Inharmonious influences are neutralized, the harsh discipline of life is changed to wholesome training, the crooked places are made straight and the rough smooth. The uncharitable and censorious are generally found among the narrow and bigoted, and those who have never read the full page of their own heart, or been subject to various and crucial tests.

How can a man, whose temper is phlegmatic, judge justly of him whose blood is fiery, whose nature is tropical and whose passions mount in an instant and as quickly subside? How can one, in the seclusion of private life, accurately measure the force of the influence those are subjected to, who live and act in the center of vast and powerful civil and social circles? The more you mix with men, the less you will be disposed to quarrel, and the more charitable and liberal will you become. The fact that you do not understand another is quite as likely to be your fault as his. There are many chances in favor of the conclusion that when you feel a lack of charitable feeling, it is through your own ignorance and illiberality. This will disappear as your knowledge of men grows more and more complete. Hence keep your heart open for everybody and you may be sure that you shall have your reward. You will find a jewel under the most uncouth exterior, and associated with comeliest manners and the oddest ways and the ugliest faces you will find rare virtues, fragrant little humanities and inspiring heroisms.

How glorious the thought of the universal triumph of charity, how grand and comprehensive the theme! The subject commands the profound attention of good men and of angels. Under the direful influence of its antagonistic principle, man has trampled upon the rights of fellow-men and waded through rivers of human blood to satisfy his thirst for vengeance. Its footsteps have been marked with the blood of slaughtered millions, its power has shivered kingdoms and destroyed empires.

When men shall be brought into subjection to the law of charity, the angel of peace will take up its abode with the children of men. Wars and rumors of wars will cease. Envy and revenge will hide their diminished heads. Falsehood and slander will be unknown. Sectarian walls will crumble to dust. Then this world will be transformed into a paradise in which everything that is beautiful and lovely shall grow and bloom. Disinterested and benevolent acts will abound. Sorrow and disappointments will flee away, and peace, sunshine and joy will beautify and adorn life.

Death always makes a beautiful appeal to charity when we look upon the dead form so composed and still. The kindness and the love that are in us all come forth. The grave covers every error, buries every defect, extinguishes every resentment. From its peaceful bosom spring none but fond regrets and tender recollections. Who can look upon the grave even of an enemy and not feel a compunctious throb that he should ever have warred with the poor handful of dust that lies moldering before him?

Charity stowed away in the heart, like rose leaves in a drawer, sweetens all the daily acts of life. Little drops of rain brighten the meadow,—acts of charity brighten the world.

We can conceive of nothing more attractive than the heart, when filled with the spirit of charity. Certainly nothing so embellishes human nature as the practice of this virtue. A sentiment so genial and so excellent ought to be emblazoned upon every thought and act of our life. This principle underlies the whole theory of Christianity, and in no other person do we find it more happily exemplified than in the life of our Savior who, while on earth, went about doing good.

THE SAME GOD.

BY J. M. FREDERICK.

IN 1 Corinthians 12: 6 we have the following words: "And there are diversities of operations, but it is the same God, which worketh all in all," as much as to say that God has many different ways to perform his many wonders.

We believe we are too often negligent on our part to improve our talents; thinking that we can do but little in our weakness, not being gifted as well as others.

How often do we hear it said, "If I could preach, pray or sing as this one or that one can, I would not mind taking part in the work." At the same time, should we stop to think but one moment, we would know very well that the ones of whom we speak, have not attained to that development of mental power at the first effort, although we will admit that it is much easier for some to express their sentiments publicly, than for others, it being more a natural gift. While this is a fact, let us remember that "the pen is mightier than the sword."

Continual efforts oftentimes come out victorious as in the case of Daniel Webster, who, in his youth could not get up to speak before his class, but by perseverance he became one of America's greatest orators. So then, if we do our part, hoping and trusting faithfully in the same God, we will reap the bountiful reward; "as he worketh all in all."

We often leave golden opportunities pass by unheeded, where, had they been heeded, they would have glorified God and increased our spiritual strength, for we learn that God always giveth the increase. Let us, then, improve the talent with which we are entrusted, that we may hear that welcome plaudit: "Thou hast been faithful over a few things; I will make thee ruler over many things, enter thou into the joy of thy Lord."

ON TRIAL.

BY SOLOMON SCHUBERT.

THE Bible conveys to us the idea that this life on earth is one of probation. It is here that we are to prepare ourselves for another, which will be one of everlasting joy or one of eternal chastisement. God has pointed out to us the road that leads to this happy land, and all will find the way who stand the trial which is to prove if we are worthy of this future home of eternal bliss. Although the trial may seem a fiery one, it is better by far to go boldly through this life, which is, at best, but a span, than to lose the prize of eternal glory, set apart for us after the battle is won.

Postponement in preparing to lead this life is dangerous. Now is the time to resolve to examine and detect what is wrong and then perfect it, that we may accomplish the mighty purposes for which our powers are designed. The greatest aim of every one should be to combine business with religion and keep up a spirit of serious piety amid the stir of our busy and active lives, and be "not slothful in business, but fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Rom. 12: 11.

FAITHFULNESS.

Synopsis of a Farewell Sermon by D. L. Miller, College Chapel, Mt. Morris, Ill., June 7, 1891.

"Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life."—Rev. 2: 10.

I AM to talk to you this evening, dear Christian friends, perhaps for the last time. In a few days many of you will leave this place and go to your homes in various parts of the country, and in a few weeks, if the Lord will, wife and I start on our long journey which will take us across the broad Atlantic, to Europe, Asia and Africa. As we take the parting hand at this time it means more to us than under ordinary circumstances. This much I do know, we shall not meet again in this world as we have met to-night, and it may be said of many of us that we shall see each others' faces no more. We fully realize the fact, that should God prosper our journey and we be permitted to return again to the home we love, and to those with whom we have labored so many years, and have learned to love so well, that some of these seats will be made vacant by death, and that we shall see each other's faces no more on this side of the grave.

Before parting I felt that I would like to talk to you about being faithful, and that not so much in the line of a sermon as in a plain, simple, practical talk about the duties we owe to one another, to the church, and to our Blessed Master whose cause we have espoused, and whose name we have taken upon ourselves. You have heard me read a portion of the message that was sent by the Spirit to the church at Smyrna. You have heard something of her trials, her temptations, and her tribulations. You have heard of her cruel persecutions, of the imprisonment and martyrdom of some of the members, but the words of the Spirit spoken through John are full of encouragement and comfort. "Be thou faithful unto death and I will give thee a crown of life."

FAITHFULNESS IS ADMIRED BY ALL.

1. The subject of Christian faithfulness cannot be too often impressed upon our minds. It is a subject that always and on all occasions is full of interest. We speak of faithful men and women in every department of life, and it carries with it a thought that is pleasing, and an idea that we love to think about. We love to think about faithful men and faithful women. When you are looking around to engage some one to do a piece of work, the first thing you want to know is, Is that man faithful, and can he be trusted? Can I depend upon him in my business? Is he the man that in my absence from home will do the work faithfully as I direct him? We speak of faithful children and who does not admire, respect, and love a faithful son or daughter? There is nothing that so gladdens the hearts of father and mother as to know that their children are true and faithful. We speak of a faithful husband, a faithful wife, a faithful minister, a faithful teacher, a faithful laborer, and we place a high estimate upon the quality of faithfulness.

Men in all ages have admired faithfulness. Poets have sung in its praise and authors have written page after page extolling this Christian virtue. We all remember the sad story of Evangeline, woven into beautiful lines of imagery by the poet Longfellow,—how two loving hearts with pledged troth were driven in exile from their beautiful Arcadian home and were by the hand of fate separated from each other; how the faithful girl followed her lost Gabriel to America, through the glades of the South to the snow-capped mountains of the West, her search all unavailing, until finally, in the City of Brotherly Love, when old age had come upon her, giving her life for the lives of others, she finds the object of her search dying in a hospital:

"And, as she pressed once more the lifeless head to her bosom, Meekly she bowed her own, and murmured,
'Father, I thank thee.'"

The world is made better by such an example of devotion and faithfulness. We remember too the words that Tennyson puts in the mouth of the peasant when he addressed the proud lady of exalted birth:

"How'er it be, it seems to me,
'Tis only noble to be good.
Kind hearts are more than coronets
And simple faith than Norman blood."

How true it is that the simple faith, which makes faithful is more than coronets and titles worn by kings and queens!

2. Faithfulness makes us true in our affections to those to whom we are bound by ties of love and vows of constancy.

We have seen that faithfulness in the secular affairs of life is highly commended and admired by all, and while it is important that we be faithful in all the ordinary concerns of life, it is still more important that we be faithful to our Master, Jesus Christ. When it comes to our higher relations, to our duties to each other, the church and to the great Head of the church, then it is that above all things we want to have manifested in our lives Christian faithfulness. We have taken upon ourselves vows of the most sacred character known to humanity. When we went down into the limpid stream, bowing before God with uplifted eyes, we promised, before heaven and a host of witnesses to live faithful unto death. We took upon ourselves freely and without constraint the name of Christ and pledged ourselves by the most solemn obligations to renounce the world with all its sinful pleasures and cleave only to our Master; and upon taking these vows, and making these promises we were baptized unto Christ. Thus we are bound to him who died for us and faithfulness will keep us true in our affections to him.

3. Faithfulness will keep us firm and true in the observance of all the obligations and promises taken upon ourselves.

How often men and women forget their promises, and it seems that this evil is growing among us. There was a time when it could be truthfully said that "our word was as good as our bond," but are we not retrograding in this respect? It seems to me that he who breaks his promise and forfeits his word with his fellow cannot be true to a promise made to God; we ought to be especially careful as to keeping our word and fulfilling our promises. A promise made to another should be regarded as sacred and inviolable, and the faithful Christian will so regard all his promises. His word will pass without protest, his "yea will be yea and his nay, nay." And while he is true to his promises to men he will most surely be true to Christ and the church. When we united with the church we voluntarily took upon ourselves certain duties, we promised to live according to the teachings of Christ, and if we are faithful we will not be found trying to shirk our duty or trying to get away from our promises, but we will stand firmly, fairly, and squarely on the platform occupied by the church and labor zealously for her advancement.

4. Faithfulness will keep us always in the line of duty.

On the shields of the kings of England between two rampant lions are seen these words: "God and my right." Upon the shield of every Christian should be the words: "God and my duty." When we once come to searching out what our duty is towards God, rather than asserting our rights in this world, we will find enough to do, and we will find the right road to success. You need not be so much troubled about what your rights are, and what humanity owes to you in this world; but be concerned as to what your duties are, what you owe to humanity, to the church and to God. Your rights will in God's own good time follow a faithful discharge of your duties.

The motive that should prompt us in the discharge of our duties is love. We want to remember that duty only becomes pleasing to God as we are moved to its performance by love in the heart. We obey God because we love him. We follow in the footsteps of our Blessed Savior because we love him and because the love of God has been shed abroad in our hearts. When we obey from the heart the form of doctrine to which we have been delivered, it will be when our hearts are filled with love for our dear Master who died for us. And this love dwells only in the hearts of the children of God, and it brings with it faithfulness and a willing, cheerful obedience to all the commandments. It makes duty a pleasure and lightens all the burdens of life. The Master says: "Take my yoke upon you". . . For my yoke is easy and my burden is light." The yoke of Christ is intended to lighten burdens, and if you would make life's heavy burdens easy, take his yoke upon you. A duty lovingly performed is lifted above the realms of labor and of burden and becomes a glorious privilege, so that the Christian may reach that higher degree of experience where he can rejoice that he is found worthy to suffer for Christ's sake.

Faithfulness begotten of love makes the cross light. Willing cross bearing always makes light cross bearing. You know when Christ bore the heavy cross up the steep, rugged side of Calvary he fell beneath its weight; and they laid it upon Simon the Cyrenian, and "him they compel to bear it." When you are compelled to bear a cross it is always heavy. You will never find the cross of Christ easy to bear unless you take it upon yourselves lovingly and willingly. It is love in the heart that makes the cross light. In 1 Cor. 13, Paul contrasts faith with love. He says, "Though I have all faith, so that I could remove mountains and have not love I am nothing." The more of this love we can have in our hearts, the more faith we will have and the easier it will be for us to bear all the burdens of life.

5. The limit of our faithfulness. "Be thou faithful unto death." The words imply that we shall be faithful not only until death comes to us in regular order of human events, but that we shall be faithful even if it brings death upon us in the shape of martyrdom. When we were at Smyrna they pointed out to us the place where Polycarp, the first Bishop of that church, was burned at the stake. The words of the Spirit to the church at that place had a deeper meaning than it has for us to-day. We know nothing about persecutions. I sometimes think a little persecution would be good for us. It would lead us closer to God.

Let us remember, beloved, that we have entered into this army and into this fight for the entire war. We have enlisted under the blood-stained banner of King Jesus, and we have given him our name; we have given him our hands and our hearts, and it is for life; until death shall relieve us, and the Blessed Master shall say, "It is enough; come up higher." We should still struggle on, aiming and trying to be faithful to our calling in Christ, and when we have lived faithful all along the journey of life, when our lives have been filled to the full measure, and our responsibility shall have been met, then it is that we may be released from the struggle, and go home to rest.

6. The reward of faithfulness. "And I will give thee a crown of life." The reward comes after the life of faithfulness and how great is the reward! Not a crown of glittering gold, but a crown of righteousness,—a crown of Eternal Life. This crown shall be ours if we live faithful unto death.

And now let me exhort you all to a life of faithfulness. Here are elders whom the Holy Ghost hath made overseers over the flock. A great responsibility rests upon you. You will be called upon in the judgment to give an account of men's souls. God help you to be faithful to the great trust placed in your hands. Here are younger men in the ministry. God has called you, through the church, to the ministry of the Word. He has given in your hands a great work; placed in your hands the ministry of the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Upon you and your labor depends the future of the church. Will you not be faithful in the discharge of your duties? Live that all men may know that you have been with Christ and have learned of him. Let your lives be faithful examples to those round and about you. Remember you are called out from the congregation to minister in holy things as examples to the flock, and when you remember this and the responsibility that rests upon you, let it bear heavily upon your souls. Go to God and ask him to help you that you may bear the responsibility and may be faithful to your calling. And here are the deacon brethren. You have mighty responsibilities resting upon you. Much of the success of the church depends upon your labors and your efforts. God has given this work into your hands and the words of our text come to you, "Be ye faithful."

And finally to one and all, elders, ministers, deacons and lay members, "Be ye faithful unto death." We cannot afford to be unfaithful. Soon we shall be called to our home above and then will come the reward of faithful living. May God help us, beloved, to keep far away from the world. Let us make the line that separates us from the world so marked and so distinct that all who see us may know that we are in the church of Christ, and that we are faithful, consistent members of his body. And above all, let us have a full measure of the love of God in our hearts; then will we obey him because we love him, duty will become a blessed privilege and faithfulness will be our only desire.

And now I refer very briefly to our proposed journey. You have heard us talk of going away, and if the Lord will, we expect to leave our home here in a few weeks on our way to Europe. We expect to visit the churches in Denmark and Sweden, and if time permits, go up into Norway, the land of the "Midnight Sun." Thence we go to visit the seven churches of Asia, going down into Egypt, up the Nile and across the desert to Mt. Sinai and so on to Jerusalem.

Thus far our plans have been laid out; whether we will be permitted to carry them out the Lord only knows. We have talked about this matter, my wife and I, and have prayed over it. We have placed the matter entirely in the hands of the Lord. We have been asked whether we did not dread the trip, and our answer has been, "We have placed the matter in the hands of the Lord, and we go trusting in him. Whether we are allowed to come home and be with you again I do not know; one thing we do know, if we are faithful it will not matter whether our last resting place shall be in Europe, in Asia, or whether it will be on the Nile, or in the City of Jerusalem. If we are but faithful all will be well; this we know, and it gladdens our hearts. This may be the last time I shall speak to you, and if it is, let me beseech you to be faithful until death. Remember you have taken upon yourselves these duties. May God be with you and bless you, and keep you faithful until the end. And if we meet no more in this world, may we be found so faithful that we may meet around God's throne in heaven. Amen!

"THE WAYSIDE INNS ARE MANY BUT THE HOMES ARE FEW."

BY FANNY MORROW.

A CONTRAST is drawn in this subject between the two words, "inn," and "home." An inn is a place of shelter, for lodging, and a general provision for the supply of bodily wants, the former easily defined; but when we try to define the latter, words fail to express the higher, finer, subtler sense which the mind comprehends at the bare thought of home.

The fact may be easily observed that wayside inns are many,—the world is full of houses, but, alas, not every house is a home. Turn where you will and you will see a mansion, a cottage, or tent. Thousands of places called home,—places where people stop for rest and refreshment of body, and spend, perhaps, the greater part of their time,—in reality possess but little, if any, of the true home element. Money will purchase broad acres, erect grand edifices, supply costly furniture, and bring in viands rich and rare. It will array the inmates with purple and gold, and lay at their feet every luxury the world can afford; and yet the place be a house, and no more,—a wayside inn, where gay scenes may be enacted, and the sounds of mirth and revelry be heard. Self is the object of adoration; this world engrosses all their thoughts, their time and talent.

There is not heard in these wayside inns the voice of prayer or praise. The Bible has no place there. Often the foe that "biteth like a serpent and stingeth like an adder" is tolerated, cherished and finally adored,—the god of this world rules. Examine the common court reports and you will see by the number of divorce cases on record how his hellish nature is gloating over the ruin he has wrought. Divorced people are the graduates from wayside inns, not homes. From the time of the first home in Eden until the present time God's blessing rests upon the home and, by his blessing, honor, morality, strength of character, correct principles should possess every inmate of the home. What is the chief charm that constitutes the pleasures of home? Is it not the society of those we love? Father, mother, brothers, sisters, sweet associations, kindred ties, God-given loves. Why does the sweet word home always bring to the true heart a thought of heaven? Is it not because love is the golden chain that binds the Christian home on earth to the eternal home on high? It is home where the Bible is studied loved and obeyed, mutual forbearance and sympathy are there, and help to lighten every load, to sweeten every bitter cup and every inmate finds a peaceful haven, a place to grow stronger for the conflict with evil. The benediction of Christ's presence is there, to turn life's lessons into channels leading the soul up higher. If a grandfather or grandmother are "waiting" in such a home, or an aunt is working there, all, all will share the mutual blessings promised unto a home where love is clean, pure, and strong in the strength of the eternal Love. As well might we expect an apple tree to bear thistles, or to see the sun shine at midnight, as to hear of divorce cases coming from such a place.

"A home must be warmed with the emblems of love,
Which none from its hearthstone may ever remove;
And be lighted at eve with a heart-kindled smile,
Which a breast, though in sorrow of woe may beguile.
'Tis in vain to describe what it means to a heart,
Which can live out its life on the bubbles of art.
It may be a palace, it may be a cot,
It matters not which and it matters not what,
'Tis a dwelling perfumed with the incense of love,
From which to its owner 'tis death to remove."

Osborne, Kans.

THE STANDARD OF RIGHT.

THERE is only one true standard of right in the universe, and every individual ought to conform his conduct to that standard. But, with this world as it is, men generally have one standard for themselves and one standard for others, in their estimate of the ordinary conduct of life.

The man who deliberately does wrong himself, and who finds—as every wrong-doer is sure to find—an excuse for his wrong-doing, judges other men by a higher standard than that to which his life is conformed. If he persistently lies, and feels justified in lying, he thinks it is very wrong for another man to lie. If he steals, he does not think it is right for others to steal. He never falls so low in crime that he does not deem it the duty of others to live a life of uprightness quite above his own endeavors.

On the other hand, he who holds himself to the highest standard of morals does not always expect others to do the same. He views their shortcomings with a charity to which he does not deem himself entitled. And so it is that most men have one standard by which they judge their own conduct, and another by which they judge others.

It is peculiarly important, therefore, for those who recognize the highest standard as their own, to bear in mind that they will be held to and judged by that standard, by those who make no pretense of conforming to it themselves. If ever a man would think of lowering his standard of conduct in the hope of being judged charitably for his failure, let him know that the last person to look leniently on his offense is the man who is himself an evil-doer in the very line of this failure. – Sel.

"EVERY one must select his own ideals or standards in life; but in selecting he must not forget that there is an ideal for ideals, a standard for standards. A Christian has no right to decide to take another Christian as his model because that other Christian is lax in some of his practices. Because a man is worthy of being held up as a model in some things, it does not make him worthy of being held up as a model in all things. His right-doing cannot make any wrong-doing of his right. "That man suits me exactly," says one; "he is so good, and he does this and that,—which some others are a little too good to do,—and that is just what I want." But has a Christian a right to decide, first that he wants to be lax in some things, and then to accept, as his ideal or model in life, another who is just so far lax? That only is a rightful and lawful ideal to any one, which demands his upward striving to reach it. But carelessness, laxity, defection, demands no striving. Human nature gravitates that way, unaided. Our human ideals must be Christ-ward, and not world-ward,—pinnacles to climb up to, not chasms to fall into. He who is willing to take another as his model, because of that other's short-comings, will be sure to come short of his model in everything—but the shortcomings."

IN Rev. 2: 8 mention is made of the church at Smyrna. Polycarp, a noted pupil of the apostle John, was the elder for many years. The Disciples have lately erected a chapel in the City, and have gathered a little band of members. The building is known as the "Isaac Errett Memorial Chapel," and will seat about 120 persons. Quite an interesting account of it is given in the Christian Standard.

PEOPLE WHO ARE BENT DOWN.

BY J. R. MILLER.

In one of our Lord's miracles a woman who was bent together was made straight. The human form is made for erectness. This is one of the marks of nobility in man, in contrast with the downward bending and looking of other animals. Man is the only creature that bears this erect form. It is part of the image of God upon him. It tells of his hope and home above the earth. Says an old writer: "God gave to man a face directed upwards, and bade him look at the heavens, and raise his uplifted countenance toward the stars." The Greek word for "man" meant the upward looking. The bending of the form and face downward, toward the earth, has always been the symbol of a soul turned unworthily toward lower things, forgetful of its true home.

Yet there are a great many bent people in the world. Physical bending may be caused by accident or disease. Many a deformed body is the home of a noble and holy soul, with eyes and aspirations turned upward toward God. But there are souls that are bent. This may be the case even while the body is straight as an arrow. There are men and women whose forms are admired for their erectness, their graceful proportions, their lithe movements, their lovely features, yet whose souls are debased, whose desires are groveling, whose characters are sadly misshapen and deformed.

Sin always bends the soul. Many a young man comes out from a holy home in the beauty and strength of youth, wearing the unsullied robes of innocence, with eye clear and uplifted, with aspirations for noble things, with hopes that are exalted; but a few years later he appears a debased and ruined man, with soul bent downward.

A stage-driver had held the lines for many years, and when he grew old, his hands were crooked into hooks, and his fingers were so stiffened that they could not be straightened out. There is a similar process that goes on in men's souls when they continue to do the same things over and over. One whose mind turns to debasing things, things unholy, unclean, will find his whole soul bending and growing toward the earth in permanent moral curvature.

There is also a bending of the life by sorrow. The experience of sorrow is scarcely less perilous than that of temptation. The common belief is that grief always makes people better. If the sufferer submits to God with loving confidence, and is victorious through faith, this is sorrow's outcome. But many are crushed by it. They yield to it, and it bears them down beneath its weight. They turn their face away from heaven's blue and the light of God toward the grave's darkness, and their souls grow toward the gloom.

There is a mother who several years since lost by death a beautiful daughter. The mother was a Christian woman, and her child was also a Christian, dying in sweet hope. Yet never since that coffin was closed has the mother lifted up her eyes toward God in submission and hope. She visits the cemetery on Sundays, but never the church. She goes with downcast look about her home, weeping whenever her daughter's name is mentioned, and complains of God's hardness and unkindness in taking away her child. She is bent down with her eyes to the earth, and sees only the clods and the dust, and the grave's gloom, and sees not the blue sky, the bright stars, and the sweet face of the Father. So long has she now been thus bowed down in the habit of sadness and grieving, that she can in no wise lift herself up.

Those who are called to meet sorrow should mark well this lesson, and keep their faces lifted up toward God in every experience of grief. In the sick-room of a happy Christian woman there was a little potted rose-bush. A length one little rose came out, and turned its face toward the window where the light shone in. The sick woman and the watchers in her room noticed this, and sometimes one of them would turn it back toward the darkness; but in a little while it would bend itself around again to face the light. The rose thus preached its little sermon; and its story is told again that it may go on preaching its sermon, though it has long since faded. No matter how dark and sorrowful your experiences, do not let your eye linger a moment on the gloom. Turn it persistently toward the blessed face of Christ, and let the light of his love shine ever upon you. Then your soul will grow continually toward the light and into the light.

Then there are lives that are bowed down by toil and care. Life's burdens are very heavy for many people. There are fathers of large families who sometimes find their load almost more than they can bear, in their effort to provide for those who are dear to them. There are mothers, who, under their burdens of household care, at times feel themselves bowed down and scarcely able longer to go on. In all places of responsibility, where men are called to stand, the load many times grows very heavy, and stalwart forms bend under it. This world's work is hard for most of us. Life is not play to any who take it earnestly.

And many persons yield to the weight of duty, and let themselves be bent down under it. We see men bowing under their load until their very body grows crooked, and they can look only downward. We see them become prematurely old. The light goes out of their eyes, the freshness fades out of their cheeks, the sweetness leaves their spirit. Few things in life are sadder than the way some people let themselves be crushed by their load of duty or care. There really is no reason why this should be so. God never puts any greater burden upon any of us than we are able to bear with the help he is ready to give. Christ stands ever close beside us, willing to carry the heavy end of every load that is laid upon us.

Men never break down so long as they keep a happy, joyous heart. It is the sad heart that tires. Whatever our load, we should always keep a songful spirit in our breast. An English writer tells us of the two birds, the starling and the canary, and the different ways in which they endure imprisonment. The starling, when put in the cage, flies against the bars, and bruises its little body, and batters its poor wings till they bleed, in unavailing efforts to escape. The canary, on the other hand, finding itself a prisoner, lifts up its head and sings. These two birds represent two ways in which men and women meet the experiences of life which are hard. There are those who rebel and chafe and wear out their strength in vain struggles. There are those who accept the hardness of their lot with faith and cheerfulness. The former grow old at mid-life; the latter keep a young, happy heart into old age.

The true way to live is to yield to no burden, to carry the heaviest load with courage and gladness, never to let one's eyes be turned downward toward the earth, but to keep them ever lifted up to the hills. Men whose work requires them to stoop all the time, to work in a bent posture, every now and then may be seen straightening themselves up, taking a long, deep breath of air, and looking up toward the skies. Thus their bodies are preserved in health and in erectness in spite of their work. If, however, they never straighten up, they soon grow into the bent form in which they have to work. Whatever their toil or burden, men should train themselves to look often upward, to stand erect and get a glimpse of the sky of God's love, and a breath of heaven's pure, sweet air. Thus they will keep their souls erect under the heaviest load of work or care.

The miracle of the straightening of the woman who was bent double, has its Gospel of precious hope for any who may have failed to learn earlier the lesson of keeping straight. The bowed down may yet be lifted up. The curvature of eighteen years' growth and stiffening was cured in a moment. The woman who for so long had not been able to look up, went away with her eyes upturned to God in praise. This same miracle Christ is able to work now upon souls that are bent, whether by sin, by sorrow, or by life's load of toil. He can undo sin's terrible work, and restore the Divine image to the soul. He can give such comfort to the sad heart that eyes long downcast shall be lifted up to look upon God's face in loving submission and joy. He can put such songs into the hearts of the weary and overwrought that the crooked form shall grow straight again, and brightness shall come again into the tired face.—S. S. Times.

THE CHRISTIAN INVITATION.

BY J. L. SNAVELY.

"We are journeying unto the place of which the Lord said, I will give it you: come thou with us, and we will do thee good: for the Lord hath spoken good concerning Israel" Num. 10: 29.

Such is the language of Moses to his father-in-law which, no doubt, proceeded from faith in God and a desire that his father-in-law might enjoy the promised rest. God's people all feel it their duty to invite others to journey with them to the promised land, hence they say, "Come thou with us." This implies that there are many who are not in the way to this goodly land. This is obvious from Scripture and observation. "The world lieth in wickedness," "wide is the gate," etc. God's people are anxious that others should join them in their way to heaven, and in proportion to the amount of faith they exercise in God and his Word, will they use their influence to prevail with those around them to accompany them.

If an individual, after conversion, is more or less undecided in reference to the doctrine of Christ, and the outgrowth of his teaching, his invitation, "Come thou with us," practically has but little influence to constrain others to accompany him. It is possible that our involuntary acts and our insincerity in our Christian duties is a source of declension in religious work in the world, a man being in a measure faithless in his work of teaching and preaching to the extent that but a small and trifling difficulty or discouragement would cause him to dissent from his faith. Such would be a great barrier in the way of others, to accept the truth, but a powerful influence to allure men and women further into the ways of the world, and keep them on the downward course they are already traveling. To do good is the truest pleasure and the highest dignity of which the human mind is capable. The "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good," is a perfect transcript of the Divine mind. The sphere of goodness, in the sense of the text, is more extensive than many apprehend, or are willing to allow.

There are many to whom this sphere of goodness may be extended usefully and satisfactorily. The denominations of to-day, with but few exceptions, while giving the invitation, "Come thou with us," as a rule mean it for those who are outside the limits of any church, or who have never started on a supposed journey to the Heavenly Canaan. The idea seems prevalent that every man should be a member of some church, and then he is practically regarded as safe. The popular theory is, "Convert men and women," and then let them unite with the church of their choice. As long as such a state of things exists, and is believed to be sound doctrine, we can never expect to have our crop of faithless and insincere professors diminished.

There is a kind of process going on in our churches by which a compromise is made of their Christian principles, and it cannot successfully be denied but what the present theology has decidedly become of the "broad gauge." type, and that their principles of interpretation have about culminated in a platform, broad enough, and a door opened wide enough for the entrance and accommodation of every hue and grade.

It has been stated, again and again, through the press and pulpit, by the different faiths and sects, what their principles are. They say, "We believe in equality and in the independence of each heart before God, in the freedom of conscience, in the doctrine of soul liberty and universal toleration. This is construed to mean that all sects are in the hands of him who taught the purest truth and who is kind, merciful and forbearing to all who erringly, yet sincerely, try to follow him. They say we can all hope to be like him and see him as he is. Their sermons, letters and introductions are prefaced with the "holy salutation," "Brethren in Christ." Often these words are added: "Our misconception of our spiritual relations does not destroy the fact of our Brotherhood." At the same time, there are bodies of men, of the different beliefs, who believe and assert that errors are practiced in the different churches. Yet such will go (and they claim conscientiously) to another denomination, and commune with those who practice what they esteem errors, and no one cares to object or assail the practice of another, however great the error may be regarded.

Here we are forced to call the attention of the reader to the inconsistency of the idea of those who say that they have taken Christ as "the way, the truth and the life," to partake in the Communion with those who practice and tolerate such forms, as are a most direct and open violation of their principles. To illustrate we ask, What would be the effect if the Brethren, or Dunkard church, would attend a Communion in a Pedo-Baptist church? Would it not naturally lend those who witness it to believe that we are also advocates of infant baptism, or any other disorder that might be practiced? Would we not thereby indirectly, if not directly, approve of an act, that we look upon as denying the example and teaching of Christ? We fail to see how a consistent profession or professor can thus compromise his Christian principles. Would it not be better for us to give a reason for our faith and practice to those who practice so strangely, than to go and compromise our principles?

Here our liberalism often gets in and says, "To those who so strangely practice, we must grant the largest liberty, and ask the same indulgence for ourselves. While we regret that we do not all see alike and that all do not take the open Bible as their only guide, yet we feel to grant them the privilege of being guided by their own spiritual light."

We feel to admonish, however, that we, as a church, openly and fearlessly present the Gospel, and try by Word, precept and action to make clear to the minds and consciences of men, their duty and the commands of God, and that we herald forth our invitation, "Come thou with us," to all that are not journeying to the celestial city, be it a professor or non-professor."

If we are faithful to our profession, we are journeying to the Heavenly Canaan. This journey commenced at the day of conversion. Then it was that the course of sin and misery was abandoned. We continue this journey by advancing in knowledge and in the love of God, by the mortifying of the flesh and the continual crucifixion of the old man with his deeds. The end of the journey is at death. The former Canaan was prepared for and bestowed upon the believing posterity of Abraham. So all who possess the faith of Abraham and who are thus his spiritual seed, shall inherit the Canaan above. Fear not, little flock; it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." "Come thou with us," implies that there is room and freedom for all who desire to go to heaven. The way is too narrow to admit of sin, but in point of room wide enough for all who will humble themselves in obedience to the Gospel. The invitation to all is, "Come thou with us." The Spirit and the bride say, Come, and all that will may come, and take of the Water of Life freely. The Savior says, "All that come to me I will in no wise cast out," but in all our coming, let us not deny the rectitude of the Lord God Almighty.

FELLOWSHIP.

BY SARAH M. SAUNDERS.

THE word selected for our title carries with it a strong significance, as its primary meaning is society, companionship, intercourse, and brings to our minds the idea of great happiness or felicity with persons of congenial tastes, habits and feelings,—a union of hearts, bound together by the tender chords of mutual love, a harmonious combination of beings of like sentiments and aspirations, more especially applied to the Christian fraternity. We speak of extending the right hand of fellowship to persons who may come among us, bringing the proper credentials as to their unity in faith and practice with us. We extend greetings as a token of our love and union, and harmony and fidelity to our common interests in the cause of our Master. "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another, and the blood of Jesus Christ his Son cleanseth us from all sin." 1 John 1: 7.

In the epistle of the Apostle Paul to the brethren at Philippi, he testifies his thankfulness to God, and his love toward them, praying for their increase in grace. After pronouncing a benediction upon the church, with the bishops and deacons, he says: "I thank my God upon every remembrance of you, always in every prayer of mine for you all making request with joy, for your fellowship in the Gospel from the first day until now." Philpp. 1: 3, 4, 5.

Where this apostolic fellowship abounds, there is of necessity a union and a communion, a tie of fraternal love, stronger than death. When we read the epistles of Paul, especially the one to the Philippian brethren we are forcibly impressed with the fervency of his love for the church, and the anxiety he manifested for their salvation, and while he was absent from them in person, yet he maintained a longing desire for their spiritual welfare, exhorting them to "do all things without murmurings and disputings; and that they might walk blameless and harmless, the sons of God, without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse nation, among whom ye shine as lights in the world." Philpp. 2: 14, 15.

This tie of Christian affection is so much stronger than the ties of consanguinity, although, as the poet has said, "that is almost heaven," in speaking of those ties of nature. The ties of Christian fellowship afford a sure evidence of the love of God, the Father, as manifested unto us by the offering up of his only begotten Son for the sake of the world, thus encouraging us to continue steadfastly in the apostles' doctrine and fellowship. Acts 2: 42.

OBEDIENCE, MERCY AND LOVE.

BY GEORGE S. GRIM.

THESE are three of the great fundamental principles which Christ has set forth in the New Testament, to be practiced and carried out by the true Christian.

Christ said, "A new commandment I give unto you, That ye love one another; as I have loved you, that ye also love one another." John 13: 34. This is a command which implies obedience, and surely we, as Christian believers who are sincere in the faith, have no authority or right to set it to one side.

Christ also tells us to love one another as he has loved us. How can we love him except we first obey him from the heart? And how can we love one another except we obey Christ? Shall we give over to the dictates of man that which is not in harmony with the unity of Christ? Does that make love one to another?

I trow not. We must obey Christ at all times and under all circumstances in order to bring about that love, and if man comes up and dictates to us contrary to the will of Christ, we must reject them, and thereby we love them.

Again he says in regard to mercy, "Go ye and learn what that meaneth, I will have mercy, and not sacrifice." Matt. 9: 13; 12: 7.

Christ also is merciful. Were it not for his great mercy and love, we, as Christians, would be eternally doomed to be lost. But he is come to call sinners to repentance and does not wish any to go to destruction, for all are invited to accept the overtures of mercy.

Therefore, as God is merciful, we also shall be merciful as well as obedient.

Again he says, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." John 13: 35. This will bind the three together in one, if we have true, Christian love one for another. We see, then, that as Christians we should have,

1. Implicit obedience to Christ.

2. Feelings of mercy towards fallen and degraded humanity.

3. True Christian love one to another. "By this," Christ says, "shall all men know that ye are my disciples."

Thus we can all give evidence to the world whether we are true Christians or not.

"THE mere lapse of years is not life. To eat, drink, and sleep—to be exposed to darkness and the light—to pace round in the mill of habit, and turn thought into an implement of trade—this is not life. In all this, but a poor fraction of the conscientiousness of humanity is awakened, and the sanctities still slumber which make it worth while to be. Knowledge, truth, love, beauty, goodness, faith, alone can give vitality to the mechanism of existence. The laugh of mirth that vibrates through the heart—the tears that freshen the dry wastes within—the music that brings childhood back—the prayer that calls the future near—the doubt which makes us meditate—the death which startles us with mystery—the hardship which forces us to struggle—the anxiety which ends in trust—are the true nourishment of our natural being."

"SIN has a great many tools; but a lie is the handle which fits them all."

The Gospel Messenger

Is the recognized organ of the German Baptist or Brethren's church, and advocates the form of doctrine taught in the New Testament and pleads for a return to apostolic and primitive Christianity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and maintains that Faith toward God, Repentance from dead works, Regeneration of the heart and mind, baptism by Trine Immersion for remission of sins unto the reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, are the means of adoption into the household of God,—the church militant.

It also maintains that Feet-washing, as taught in John 13, both by example and command of Jesus, should be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper, instituted by Christ and as universally observed by the apostles and the early Christians, is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening or after the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ.

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That the principle of Plain Dressing and of Non-conformity to the world, as taught in the New Testament, should be observed by the followers of Christ.

That the Scriptural duty of Anointing the Sick with Oil, in the Name of the Lord, James 5: 14, is binding upon all Christians.

It also advocates the church's duty to support Missionary and Tract Work, thus giving to the Lord for the spread of the Gospel and for the conversion of sinners.

In short, it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discords of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe.

Mount Morris, Ill., - - - - - June 23, 1891

KIND words cost nothing but an effort, and they do a world of good.

COL. WHITNEY, of Franklin Grove, Illinois, recently died at the ripe old age of 101 years.

BRO. J. S. FLORY reports the work progressing encouragingly in California. There is a move on foot to organize a new congregation with about forty members.

IN the Almanac the address of Noah Fisher, Foreman and Treasurer of the Board of Orphans' and Old Folks' Home should be Perrysburg, Ind. His correspondents should make a note of this.

BRO. E. S. YOUNG is with us again. He has been at Yale for some time, preparing himself in the languages for further work in the Bible Department. We have not yet learned his plans for the future. Bro. D. E. Brubaker also returned from his work on the mission field in Wisconsin.

ENCOURAGING news comes from Idaho, indicating that the work is progressing, souls being added to the church, and another minister called to the work. The field is a large one, much work is needed, and we are pleased to learn that our people are striving for a firm foothold in that part of the Far West.

IN our Annual Meeting News we stated that the Emergency Tent on the Conference ground was placed there by the B. & O. R. R. In this we were mistaken, for we are informed that it was erected by the Cumberland & Virginia R. R. We gladly make the correction. One thing we do know, the tent was greatly appreciated.

It is reported that the Russian Government is expelling all the Jews living beyond the Caspian Sea. Surely, God's once favored people are suffering for their disobedience in rejecting the Messiah. Of course the Jews are living in hope, expecting that the land of Palestine will soon be opened to them, and they can return to their earthly Jerusalem.

THE Brethren's Missionary Committee held their quarterly meeting here last week. We have not space in this issue to say anything about their work, but may have something to say next week. We were also favored with a score or more of visitors, among them brethren Enoch Eby, Daniel Vaniman, S. W. Hoover, J. C. Lahman, Levi Eby and D. B. Eby. We certainly appreciated their calls, and only regret that our duties in the office did not permit us to give them more attention.

ELD. JAMES R. GISH, who is now at work on the western mission field in Arkansas, has just paid over to the Southern District of Illinois five hundred dollars, the interest of which is to be used for missionary purposes. This is certainly a commendable act, and shows that Bro. Gish, being a missionary himself, knows the value of missionary work, and is willing not only to give much of his time to the service, but his money also. The more our people become acquainted with missionary work, the more will they feel inclined to give for its support.

THE Commencement Exercises in the College came off last Tuesday, June 16th, and were indeed a pleasant affair. The exercises were largely attended. The town seemed to be full of visitors. Everything passed off very pleasantly, save that the weather was a little too warm for comfort. There were nine graduates, two being in the Seminary Department, and the others in the Academic. Quite a number of others finished their work in other departments, and also received diplomas. Bro. J. G. Royer's closing address to the students was full of good counsel. This has been a most successful year for the Mt. Morris College.

NONE should conclude that the MESSENGER stands alone in its opposition to the general use of tobacco. The New York Independent, one of the most scholarly religious journals in the world, says that those using "tobacco ought to know what a disinterested authority says about the effect of the weed on health. The authority is J. W. Seaver, college physician and instructor in athletics at Yale. As the result of his observations for four years he shows that of the members of the senior class, the increase of the lung capacity of non-users of tobacco is ten per cent greater than that of users; and that the percentage of increase in height and weight is also in favor of the non-users. It is so clear that the habit is harmful, that young men who contract it do a very foolish as well as sinful thing."

IN our list of the members of the Standing Committee, Eld. J. F. Oller's name was unintentionally omitted, much to our regret, as well as the regrets of his many friends. It is one of these annoying mistakes that we have no way of accounting for. Bro. Oller represented the Middle District of Pennsylvania on the Standing Committee of the Annual Meeting at Hagerstown, and is the elder of a large and prosperous church at Waynesborough, Pa.

THE Annual Meeting has made it the duty of the clerk of each District Meeting, to send the names and addresses of the housekeeper of each local congregation, in their respective Districts to Bro. D. L. Miller, Writing Clerk of Annual Meeting, stating how many copies of the Minutes are needed to supply each family of members with a copy. This should be done at once, so the Minutes may be mailed as early as possible. The Annual Meeting did some very important work this year, -work that in a large measure concerns every member in the church. There are also a number of very important papers deferred, that should be carefully studied before the next Annual Meeting. Hence all our members should receive a copy of these Minutes, in order that they may learn just what our growin gBrotherhood is doing.

THE attendance at the Mt. Morris Sunday-school, from September to June, foots up 9,887, being an average of about 241 for each Sunday. The largest attendance any one Sunday was 327, and the smallest 178. The amount collected for missionary work during that time was $152.10 in addition to what was raised privately to defray the expenses of the school. All the money raised in this school is turned over to the Mission Fund, while the money for the expenses of the school is raised privately. It will be observed that the amount raised per capita for missionary work, is about sixty-three cents in nine months, or at the rate of nearly eighty cents per year. Through the instrumentality of the school, a number have united with the church, and carry home with them, we sincerely trust, a deep and well-seated conviction, that it is their further duty to more fully consecrate themselves, and all they have, to the service of the Lord.

SUNDAY, June 14th, was a day of special interest in Mt. Morris, that being the time set for the dedicatory services in the College Chapel. The Chapel is a large room, connected with the new College building that has just been completed, and is so constructed that, by the opening of folding doors, two other large rooms may be used for the congregation within good hearing distance of the speaker, thus giving a seating capacity for nearly one thousand persons. It is in this Chapel that we will hold all our meetings and other religious exercises. Bro. Enoch Eby preached the dedicatory sermon to a densely packed house of interested listeners. His subject was the building of Solomon's Temple. Many practical thoughts were brought out concerning the special arrangements made by David in gathering the material for the Temple, and his charge to Solomon, as well as the charge to the elders of Israel. Bro. Eby said that he was glad that the material for this new building at Mt. Morris was dedicated before the house was erected, and that there were no debts against it. Bro. Daniel Vaniman closed the services with appropriate remarks. In the evening Bro. J. G. Royer preached his last sermon to the students, in the presence of a very large congregation. He dwelt impressively on the friendship of David and Jonathan, and spoke of the value of true friendship, and the necessity of cultivating a higher order of Christian friendship.

FULL REPORT By the time this paper reaches our readers the Report will be ready for mailing, and all orders received will be filled at once. Parties desiring a copy of the work will please send in their orders immediately. It will contain much valuable matter, and is well worth the price and the care of a careful perusal. Price, 25 cents; 6 copies, $1.25; 12 copies, $2.50.

THE Independent says that a tragedy from which a very important lesson can be learned by parents, occurred the past week in New York. A boy, ten years old, was an hour late at school, and was required to report the fact to his father. He was afraid to do it, stayed out from school a day or two, and then drowned himself. A father that allows his children to be in terror of him needs to learn Christianity and humanity.

IT would be well for all our ministers to occasionally preach a good sermon on the anointing of the sick, for the purpose of instructing the members, as well as others concerning the anointing services. Hundreds of members never heard a sermon preached on that subject, and many of them do not fully understand the nature of the ceremony. We are just in receipt of a letter from a sister, who is laboring under the impression that it is the duty of our elders to anoint any one who calls on them, regardless of their church relationship, or spiritual condition. It is well to understand that we anoint only sick members, who call for the elders. It is the privilege of all members, when sick, to thus call for the elders and be anointed. Furthermore, we regard it as a clear Christian duty, concerning which our members ought to be carefully instructed. There is much spiritual food for the soul in the anointing services, and it is no more than right that Christians be permitted to enjoy all the good there is in religion.

WESTWARD the star of empire took its flight when Abraham left his native land in Ur of the Chaldees, and took his departure for the land of Canaan. In the track of that man followed the mighty empires of earth. He laid the foundation for the great Jewish race, which gave to the world the Old Testament, and the only divine form of civil and religious government. Westward the knowledge spread. From amidst the ruins of the Jewish religion came the Christian church, with Christ as its founder. Westward Christianity also spread, until it has well nigh encircled the earth. Many devout Christians are now turning their faces Eastward towards the cradle of Christianity, desiring to re-establish the Master's cause in the cities, formerly noted for strong Christian communities, but now given over to idolatrous worship. Not a few are visiting the locations of the seven churches of Asia, as well as other once noted Christian points. At many places schools and churches are being established by money and energies from the West. It begins to look like a re-action. It is the rising generations sending the Old Gospel back to revive Christianity in the fields where it once flourished centuries ago. As the tide of Christianity and civilization rolls back over the East, we may look for encouraging development, and also the opening up of new and enlarged fields for Christian work.

OUR CONTEMPLATED JOURNEY TO EUROPE AND THE EAST.

FOR several years the Brethren assembled in District Meeting in Denmark and Sweden have requested, through our Annual Meeting, that Bro. Hope and ourself should visit and spend some time with them. They feel the need of help in becoming more fully instructed in the principles of the Gospel, as believed and practiced by the Brethren's church. These requests were referred by the Conference to the General Missionary Committee, and at one time partial arrangements had been made to have Bro. Hope go, but the way did not seem to open, and up to this time the call from the churches in Europe for ministerial help from America has not been filled. We have felt that some one ought to go, and encourage the struggling churches in Denmark and Sweden, but as to our going, there were hinderances in the way that were not to be easily removed.

But now the way seems to be made clear, and if the Lord will, wife and I expect to leave our home July 6, on a mission of love to the members in Denmark and Sweden. And lest there be misapprehension on the part of some, we wish to state, that we do not go out at the expense of the Missionary Committee. The Committee has requested us to visit the churches, and while we go under their authority, yet we are in no way chargeable to them. The committee suggested that at least the actual expenses, incurred in visiting the churches, after we reach Denmark, should be paid, but that is a matter for future consideration.

If our journey be prospered, we expect to reach Copenhagen, Denmark, early in August, and then travel northward through Sweden and Norway, the land of the "Midnight Sun." We hope to visit all the churches and members in these countries. After spending some time with them, we expect to go to Rome, stopping at London, Paris, and other places of interest on the way. At Rome we will have before us the scene of Paul's labors in the great missionary work of the apostolic church among the Romans. From Rome we go by way of Herculaneum, Pompeii, Brindisi, where we take ship for Smyrna. Our object in going again to Asia Minor is to visit the Seven Churches of Asia, and to gather such information as to their adherence to the practice of primitive Christianity, as it is only possible to obtain by visiting the places and interviewing the bishops of the various churches. With this object in view, if God prospers our journey, we will land at Smyrna, and then go to Ephesus, Pergamos, Thyatira, Sardis, Philadelphia and Laodicea.

When Bro. R. H. Miller held his debate with Eld. Sommer, we consulted about a visit to these churches for the purpose of obtaining the information above referred to, and brethren Miller, Enoch Eby, S. S. Mohler and others thought that important facts might be obtained. Bro. Miller especially urged us to make the trip, if possible.

From Smyrna we will set sail for Alexandria, Egypt, where we expect to spend sometime. We will go to Cairo, visit the Pyramids and the Land of Goshen, where the son of Jacob dwelt, and where they were evil entreated and held in bondage by the Pharaohs. Then, after ascending the Nile to the first cataract, visiting Luxor, Thebes and other places of interest, we will follow the route of the exodus of the children of Israel across the desert to Mount Sinai, amidst whose thunders and lightnings God gave the Law to Moses. From this point we expect to go on to Canaan, thus literally making the journey from the "Land of Bondage" to the promised land of freedom.

We will spend sometime in the ancient City of Jerusalem, and by travel, research and investigation, become better acquainted with the "Lands of the Bible." The time in which we live demands the strongest possible proofs of the truth of God's Book. Into this line of work we seem to have been led by the hand of the Lord, and it is with the hope that we may be more helpful in furthering the Truth, that we undertake this long and, in some respects, dangerous journey.

It is by no means a pleasure trip. Travelling in the East, as we have learned by past experience, is anything but pleasant. Crossing the desert on camels, horseback-riding in Asia Minor and in Palestine, dwelling in tents, surrounded by the half-civilized tribes of the desert, is not like taking a trip in a vestibuled train of palace coaches, with dining car attachments, across the American continent. The idea of pleasure must be left out of the calculation, and that of sacrifice, danger and hard work taken in. Were it not for the sacred associations, connected with the lands of the Bible, and the importance of the facts to be gathered there, showing the truth of God's Book, we could not be induced to undertake the journey; but with this object in view, we go, trusting in the Lord.

Some have asked us: "Do you not dread the trip?—and our answer has been: "Wife and I have considered the matter well. We have prayed over it, and have taken the whole matter to the Lord, and there we leave it, trusting in him." We have no dread in going. True, it is hard to separate from those we love so well, not knowing whether we shall ever meet again in this world, but we go full of hope, that, if we do not return to our home and to the church we love so well, we may be counted worthy to unite with the church of the First-born above. It matters not whether death shall come to us at our home, and our dying pillow be smoothed by loving, tender hands, whether we shall be called to our long home in Asia or Africa, or whether we shall fill a lonely grave on the desert, or under the shadow of Mount Sinai, or be laid to rest on the banks of the Nile, only so that when the message comes we shall be found faithful, and ready to go home. If we are found in the line of our duty, all will be well.

As we journey from land to land, we expect to give to the readers of the MESSENGER the result of our researches and investigations in a series of editorial letters, which will be published at least as often as one every two weeks, and possibly oftener, when we reach the more interesting portions of our journey.

And now, as we go away from our dear native land, and from our church, and all her privileges, we ask an interest in the prayers of our brethren and sisters. Since we returned from the trip we made eight years ago, we have often met and conversed with brethren and sisters who said: "We prayed for you often while you were away on your dangerous journey." And wife often said: "If I had known that so many Christians were praying for us, I would not have dreaded the trip as much as I did." We believe now, as we go away, we shall have the prayers of God's people in our behalf, and trusting in him we feel entirely safe. For if it be his will that we shall return no more to our home and those we love, we are ready to say, "Thy will be done," and if we are permitted to return, by his blessing, it shall be only to give the years which may be vouchsafed to us, more fully to his service. THE MISSIONARY OUTLOOK.

BY G. B. ROYER.

THE outlook is encouraging. We say this because the number of brethren and sisters who love to speak of mission work, and hear of its progress is rapidly increasing; because many are making noble sacrifices for the cause; because at our last Conference the collection for the Mission and Tract Work was 33 per cent greater than one year ago. The collection this year was taken in the afternoon of the same day on which, in the forenoon, a collection was made for the Orphan's Home at Hagerstown, Md. The two collections amounted to over $500.

A brother came to us at Annual Meeting and said, "Here is $8.00 for the Mission Fund. This is the proceeds of Sunday eggs for the last six months. For the preceding six months we sent in $5.00. I remember that before the suggestion to give to the Lord the proceeds of the eggs laid on Sunday was made, we used to give about $3 a year, and thought we were doing well. Now I see we are giving over four times that amount."

This is the result of systematic giving. The brother and his family were doing very well when they gave $3.00 per year, and we are safe in saying, if each family would do as well, the Mission Board would have an income of not less than $45,000 or $50,000 per year. But let every family begin to give systematically, as our brother and his family have done, and the result would reach near $100,000.

Further, one-seventh of the eggs laid by a farmer's hens is certainly a very small portion of his income. If an actual tenth of each brother's and each sister's income were given to the Lord in a cheerful and prayerful spirit, the Lord's treasury would be full, houses of worship would be built, and many would hear the Gospel who have not heard it yet.

Compare this fair estimate of what we might do with the $7,000 given this year, or about eleven and two-thirds cents per member, and then let each member ask himself, "Am I doing all I can to obey the great commission?" "Will the Lord, when he comes again, call me a faithful steward?"

Would it not be a blessing to the church, a benefit to our heathen neighbors, and a glory to God, if each individual member of the church recognized his debt as did Paul? He says in Rom. 1: 14, 15, "I am debtor both to the Greeks and to the barbarians; both to the wise, and to the unwise. So, as much as in me is, I am ready to preach the Gospel to you that are at Rome also."

Paul acknowledged fully his debt and labored to cancel it. He did not go at it in a half-hearted or indifferent manner; he did not say that the church was in debt; neither did he say that there was hope for the Greeks and the Barbarians without Christ, or that all nations heard the Gospel on Pentecost, and that he was not under obligations to serve them. The facts are simply these: He acknowledged the debt, and labored earnestly and faithfully until death to remove it.

Those who in a measure are doubting their indebtedness want to remember that Paul was especially called, that he was an inspired writer, and that he had a clear understanding of a Christian's duty and work. And it is important, dear brethren and sisters, that we study his life and labors, pattern our lives in accordance with Christ's and his teachings, accept the debt standing against each one of us to-day, and do "as much as in me is" to remove it. How many are doing it!

A FEW MYSTERIES.

BY SADIE BRALLIER NOFFSINGER.

—I CANNOT understand why some of our sisters engage in prayer, without covering their heads, as Paul has commanded them to do. It is a feature that is becoming noticeable in the church, and exists, even, among some of our ministers' wives and daughters. Does it not seem strange, indeed?

—Nor can I understand how men and women can pray God to bless the mission cause, and then refuse to even touch their purse, when called upon for means to forward it. The idea seems so strange, and at the same time so ridiculous, that many of the MESSENGER readers, perhaps, will scarcely believe it to be true. And yet I have known just such men and women.

—Then here is another thing that puzzles me: That men and women, whose "bodies are temples of the Holy Ghost," defile those sacred tabernacles with the filthy tobacco weed! We are commanded to continue in "whatsoever things are pure" and "whatsoever things are lovely," but in whatsoever things are filthy—never! Since God's church is to be "without spot," surely the polluting weed should be thrown away forever; for it has caused more spots than one to blur the chastity of the fair elect. O, for shame, that any who have named the name of Christ, should indulge in a habit so disgusting! Why is it so? I have racked my brain in trying to solve the problem, but it is something I absolutely cannot understand.

—Surely this is a world of mysteries, but these are a few that completely bewilder and perplex my mind. Will not some one of those, who, by experience, understand them well, take up the pen, and make them plain to me?

WHAT COMPANIONS HAS MY CHILD?

BY H. J. H.

IN a recent number of the MESSENGER we noticed an article on "Instruct the Children." While reading it the following question presented itself to us. While we are trying to teach the children the ways of truth, and taking them to Sunday-school and church, are we sure that they have not also other teachers that are able to do them more harm in an hour than we can do them good in a month? I wish every parent, who reads this, would ask himself the question, What companions has my child? Let not one be satisfied by simply asking himself the question, but let all go to work at once and find out, if they do not already know, and act accordingly.

When help is needed in the house, on the farm, or in the shop, what are the considerations that generally enter into the selection of a person to fill the place? The first one generally is, "Is he a strong, healthy person, capable of doing the the greatest possible amount of work?" The next is: "How cheap can I hire him?" And last, possibly, "Is he a moral or Christian man?" But too often the last is left entirely unconsidered.

Now, which of these considerations is the most important? If you have children that will in any way associate with your servants, undoubtedly the last one is the most important. The amount of evil influences wrought upon children by servants cannot be expressed. Many a child is ruined for life by wicked servants, before it is six years old. This may be an alarming statement, yet only too true. I myself was made acquainted with more vile stories, etc., before I was seven years of age, than I will be able to forget in a lifetime. But how and by whom? By servants,—not only young men, but those of forty and fifty, whose greatest delight seemed to be to teach me the vilest stuff that even the devil himself could invent, and have me repeat it. Do I blame my parents? No, for I suppose they did not think, but, after all, will that really excuse parents? Is it not their Christian duty to think on these things?

But not only do servants lead astray the children, but other companions as well. Next to servants, the associations at the public schools are perhaps, the most harmful. With our present system of public schools this can probably not be fully remedied. Yet we believe that by proper selection of teachers this evil can be much reduced. Those living in cities and towns have special temptations, there being even more danger of bad companions, etc., than in the country, but in general, if parents were more careful in selecting servants, if they would talk more freely to their children about Christ and their souls, teach them to pray, take them to Sunday-school and church, make their homes pleasant and attractive, furnish them plenty of the best and most interesting literature suited to their age, and in general see that they have the best companions possible, much might be done to bring them into the church and have them grow up good, noble, influential men and women.

Above all things, take an interest in your children, and make them feel that you are really and earnestly interested in them, and be a companion to your children as well as a teacher and master. Let it not be said of you as it was said of a certain woman whose boy was met on the street dirty, ragged, hair unkempt, etc. He was asked "Does your mother know that you are out?" "Oh, yes," said he, "she does. She is down at the Missionary Sewing Circle at Mrs. —— making clothes for little heathens."

Let parents attend to their own children first. They are their special care, and they should not try to convert foreign heathens while they are raising a lot of heathens themselves. Let no one be satisfied unless they know who are the associates of their children, and be sure that those associates are of unquestionable character.

"WHEN the sun of virtue is set, the blush of shame is the twilight. When that dies, all is darkness."

FACTS ABOUT THE BIBLE.

THE number of letters in the Bible is 3,586,489; words, 773,692; verses, 31,173; chapters, 1,189: books, 66. The longest book in the Old Testament is Psalms, it having 150 chapters; the shortest is Obadiah, it having but one chapter of only twenty-one verses. The longest books in the New Testament are Matthew and the Acts, each of which consists of twenty-eight chapters, although Luke contains more verses and words. Third John is the shortest, containing one chapter of fourteen verses and 296 words. The longest chapter in the Old Testament is the 119th Psalm, which contains 176 verses. The shortest chapter is the 117th Psalm; it contains but two verses. The longest chapter in the New Testament is the first chapter of Luke; it contains eighty verses. The shortest is 1 John, first chapter; it contains ten verses. The longest verse in the Old Testament is the ninth verse of the eighth chapter of Esther; it contains ninety words, composed of 426 letters. The shortest verse is the twenty-fifth verse of the first chapter of 1 Chronicles, consisting of twelve letters and three words. The middle verse is the eighth verse of the 118th Psalm. The nineteenth chapter of 2 Kings and thirty-seventh chapter of Isaiah read alike. The 8th, 15th, 21st and 31st verses of the 105th Psalm are alike. The book of Job is the oldest book in the Bible, and the 21st verse of the 7th chapter of Ezra contains all the letters of the alphabet with the exception of "j." The 35th verse, 11th chapter, of John, is the shortest in the Bible.

HOW TO READ THE BIBLE.

YOU cannot be holy, my brethren, unless you do in secret live upon the blessed Word of God, and you will not live on it unless it comes to you as the sacred Word of his mouth. It is very sweet to get a letter from home when you are far away; it is like a bunch of fresh flowers in winter time. A letter from the dear one at home is as music heard over the water: but half-a-dozen words from that dear mouth are better than a score pages of manuscript, for there is a sweetness about the look and tone which paper cannot carry.

Now I want you to get the Bible to be not a book only, but a speaking trumpet, through which God speaks from afar to you, so that you may catch the very tones of his voice. You must read the Word of God to this end, for it is while reading, meditating, and studying, and seeking to dip yourselves into its spirit, that it seems suddenly to change from a written book into a talking book or phonograph; it whispers to you or thunders at you as though God had hidden himself among its leaves and spoken to your condition, as though Jesus, who feedeth among the lilies, had made the chapter to be lily beds, and had come to feed there. Ask Jesus to cause his Word to come fresh from his own mouth to your soul; and if it be so, and you thus live in daily communion with a personal Christ, you will then with your feet take hold upon his steps; then you will keep his way; then you will never decline to go back from his commandments, but you will make good speed in your pilgrim way to the eternal city.—Sel.

ARE YOU HAPPY?

OLD Mr. Rothchild, who was supposed to be the richest man in the world, was once asked this simple question: "Are you happy?"

"Happy," he answered, "when, just as you are going to dinner, you have a letter placed in your hand, saying, 'If you don't lend me five hundred pounds, I will blow your brains out!' Happy when you have to sleep with pistols under your pillow? No, indeed—I am not happy!"

Mr. Astor, another very rich man, was once asked the same question. "Ah!" he answered, "I must leave it all when I die. It won't buy off death." And so, it was plain to me, he was not happy.

But I went once to see a poor, lame and aged woman, by the name of Lydia Jones. She lived in one small room, and earned a part of her scanty living by knitting; for the rest she had to depend upon the kindness of others. I asked this same question: "Lydia, are you happy?" "Happy?" she answered, with a beaming face; "I am just as full as I can be. I don't believe I could hold another drop of joy."

"But why?" I asked. "You are sick and alone, and have almost nothing to live upon."

"But have you never read that," said she, pointing to the Bible, "All things are yours; and ye are Christ's, and Christ is God's?" And again: "Ask and receive, that your joy may be full?"

DO YOUR DUTY.

Do you exhort in prayer-meeting? Be short and be spirited. Do you teach in Bible class? Though you have to study every night, be interesting. Do you accost people on the subject of religion in their homes or in public places? Study adroitness and use common sense. The most graceful and most beautiful thing on the earth is the religion of Jesus Christ, and if you awkwardly present it, it is defamation. We must do our work rapidly, and we must do it effectively. Soon our time for work will be gone.

A dying Christian took out his watch and gave it to a friend, and said: "Take that watch; I have no more use for it." Oh, my friends, when our watch has ticked away for us the last moment, and our clock has struck for us the last hour, may it be found we did our work well, that we did it in the very best way, and whether we preached the Gospel in pulpits or taught Sabbath classes, or administered to the sick as physicians, or bargained as merchants, or pleaded the law as attorneys, or were busy as artisans, or husbandmen, or as mechanics, or were, like Martha, called to give a meal to a hungry Christ, or, like Hannah, to make a coat for a prophet, or, like Deborah, to rouse the courage of some timid Barak, in the Lord's conflict, we did our work in such a way that it will stand the test of the judgment. And in the long procession of the redeemed, that march around the throne, may it be found that there are many there brought to God through our instrumentality, and in whose rescue we exult.—Ex.

SOME THINGS THAT JESUS WAS NOT.

A CHRISTIAN is a follower of Jesus. The actions of some of his professed followers suggest that they need to be reminded that Jesus

Was not a Formalist. He neither read his prayers nor his sermons, and held his most important meetings out of doors.

Was not a Politician. Though great issues were at stake in his nation, he insisted that his kingdom was not of this world. There is no doubt, however, that had he lived in this day and nation, he would have been active in all great moral questions.

Was not Wealthy. His wealth was not of this world, and he brought to light riches likened to which all earthly gain is dross.

Was not Popular with the so-called "Higher Classes." Not many of the rulers believed on him. Much of the favor shown by rich people now comes not because the world is better, but because of a spurious Christianity which Satan seeks to have substituted for the genuine.

Was not Conformed to this World. There is no evidence to show that he ever united with any of the secular societies of his day, that he ever even entered a lodge room of any order, except the "secret place of the Most High."—Sel.

The Aged Pilgrims.

THIS, the 1st day of April, 1891, is my birthday, also my wife's. I am eighty-four years old, while my wife is seventy. I was born in Huntingdon County, Pennsylvania, near a little town called Frankstown. When I was six years old my parents emigrated to Ohio, and settled nine miles west of Dayton. It seems to me that I can look back and see many things as they were seventy-eight years ago. Our cabin was in the woods, at the foot of a large hill. My parents were poor, hence they had to settle right in the thick woods. At that time the woods abounded in all kinds of wild animals, such as bears, wolves, and deer. They would sometimes come in sight of the cabin in the day-time. I sometimes wish I could see how it looks now. At that time Dayton was a small village, made up of log houses. We all know what it is now.

My wife was born in Union County, Pennsylvania seventy years ago. It certainly would afford us great pleasure to visit our birth-places, but we now look in another direction to that heavenly country where sickness, sorrow and death will never disturb us, where we can meet our Blessed Savior, and many of our dear friends, brethren and sisters, who have gone before us. May God help us all to be prepared for that happy home in heaven! During the last four weeks I have suffered much with neuralgia and La Grippe, but I am now better. My wife's health is good. We earnestly desire the prayers of the members everywhere. We know there is power in the prayer of faith.

SAMUEL MURRAY.

A Pleasant Season.

AFTER having enjoyed the blessed communion once more with my dear Brethren on different occasions during the Annual Meeting, my spirit has been stirred, my heart has been made glad, the soul has been fed and made satisfied. With six days' most wholesome teaching, both in speaking and council, and the spirit of love manifested, such as characterizes the followers of Christ, I was made to feel that it was none other than the house of God, and the gate to heaven. The people of God endeavored to walk in the light as Jesus walked in the light, hence the fellowship enjoyed among the saints which insures the cleansing of the soul.

I was also much pleased with the improvement manifested in our church work. If we would be wise after God's order, which, I believe, the church is endeavoring to do, we should always be willing to use the best means to attain unto the best ends, and such is life eternal. I am glad to see brethren alive to the fact that system in our missionary work, as well as in all other church work, is quite necessary. I am glad to see a greater degree of Holy Ghost religion and that we all may be workers and co-workers together, the power used being that which came from God. May we all work for an increase of holiness within ourselves and others!

JACOB KURTZ.

Clay Hill, Pa.

From the Shoal Creek Church, Newton Co., Mo.

Our quarterly council-meeting occurred June 6. All the business was disposed of in a Christian spirit. We were sorry the church was not as well represented as it should have been, but hope we will not neglect the duty we owe to the church and our God. This church decided to hold a harvest meeting July 25, and extends a hearty welcome to all, especially the ministering brethren.

Our elder, James P. Harris, intends to leave us this fall. We feel loath to part with him, but hope that the Lord will bless his labors wherever his lot may be cast, to the upbuilding of his cause, and the spreading of the borders of Zion. His leaving will cause us to realize more than ever our need of ministerial aid. Who will help us?

Bro. C. Holdeman gave us a call May 31, and preached two practical sermons to good congregations. His help was very much appreciated by all. Matilda Holderread.

Ergo, Mo., June 7.

From the Brownsville Church, Md.

Our Communion meeting, May 28, was a pleasant event to all. Though the weather was gloomy and threatening, yet a goodly number gathered together from far and near. The ministerial force was well supplied. Among the many present were brethren I. J. Rosenberger, of Ohio; H. C. Early, of Virginia; M. S. Newcomer, of Illinois, and others. Over 200 members communed.

On Friday morning after the Communion, Bro. H. C. Early preached to us from the text, "Blessed is the man that endureth temptation." He showed the necessity of temptation, and that Christians must be tempted to prove them. There is in every man a mighty warfare between the spirit and the flesh. Man, of himself, is not able to grapple with such a formidable enemy as the devil, but if we feel our own weakness and depend upon the strength of Jesus, we shall be able to stand. His sermon throughout was filled with beautiful allegory.

We have, in this part of God's great family here on earth some that are babes in Christ, for whom we feel a deep concern, and we have some, also, that are young and strong in the service of God. We pray that God will keep them faithful to their covenant until death. Others have labored long and arduously and their work will soon be done. The Lord be with them in their last days! Geo. W. Kaetzel.

Annual Meeting Notes.

The following items are clipped from the Hagerstown Daily Globe. They will doubtless prove interesting to many of our readers.

—The singing in the Tabernacle at the evening service is remarkable for its purity and volume. The absence of artificial accompaniment and the simplicity of the hymns are highly enchanting.

—The Brethren all possess unusually strong voices and can be heard distinctly in all parts of the large Tabernacle.

—The adjournment of Conference was hastened Wednesday evening. Between 4 and 5 o'clock, the dull roll of distant thunder attracted people's attention to a mass of ugly, black-hued clouds advancing from the West with rapid progress. The grounds presented a wonderful spectacle a few moments before the storm broke. The Tabernacle was emptying itself of the immense throng of 6,000 persons who, combined with the crowds on the grounds, rushed toward the entrance. Men, women and children all ran at full speed towards the city, the gusts of wind tossing away hats, turning umbrellas, and casting clouds of flying dust in the faces of the frightened pedestrians. Such a scene as was presented is rarely witnessed and many who were unable to escape in time to shelter were thoroughly drenched by the descending torrents.

—Any one who attended these meetings could not help being impressed by the harmony that pervades all the deliberations and the thorough acquaintance the delegates have with the Bible. Many of the delegates in their speeches quote passages of Scripture—passage after passage—and always give the exact reference of book, chapter and verse. The ease with which many of the older men present speak is also notable. They have strong, clear voices and can always make themselves heard.

—Elder Isaac Frantz, of Pleasant Hill, Ohio, baptized a young lady of Cumberland County, Pa. The baptism took place in the run in the rear of the Orphan's Home, and the ceremony was witnessed by a large gathering of people.

—During prayer, everybody kneels. Every gentleman's head is bared during devotional and religious services, while the ladies wear their pretty, becoming caps.

Echoes from the Highways.

Our Communion meeting, May 30, in the new meeting-house, at Tropico, was truly an enjoyable season for all who took part in it. This locality is in the western part of the Covina congregation, about thirty miles from the latter place, and six miles from Los Angeles City. About sixty members communed. On Sunday morning, before regular services, one hour was spent in social singing and short talks by brethren and sisters. This feast was the fourth one held in Southern California since last fall.

A movement is on foot, preparatory to the organizing of a new congregation out of the Covina congregation. Tropico will be the central point in the territory. Over forty members live in the proposed new district. Thus the good work is moving on and may the day soon come when there may be a score of churches in this part of the State. Every indication is favorable for many members to move here within the year.

A Voice from the Far West.

Our Communion meeting occurred June 6. It was the most orderly, soul-refreshing season, that it has been our privilege to enjoy. It was the verdict of all present, "What a good meeting!" It had been some years since there was a Communion at this place. Some had been members of the church for several years, but had never had the privilege of communing. To all such it was a special season of refreshing. Forty-one members were seated at the tables. Feeling the great necessity of more laborers in the ministry, we met next morning to consider the propriety of choosing a brother to labor in the ministry. The lot fell on Bro Jacob Gwinn. May God bless him in the work! Three were received by letter, and one was restored to the fold again. Upon the whole we are well pleased and much encouraged with the Lord's work at Moscow. Sidney Hodgden.

Moscow, Idaho, June 8.

From Philadelphia, Pa.

Our first love-feast in the new church, June 11, will long be remembered by our brethren and sisters. It was a very orderly and impressive occasion. Too often is the solemnity of our Communion services broken by unnecessary noise and confusion. It should be a special time for feasting on heavenly things and communing with our dear Savior. Bro J. T. Myers, of the Green Tree church, was with us and officiated.

Bro. J. M. Snyder, of McPherson, Kansas, stopped with us after Annual Meeting and preached for us on Sunday, June 7. Come again, Bro. J. M.

Since we are here we have had five additions to the church,—three by letter and two by baptism. The members seem encouraged and built up, and manifest a desire to work for the good of the cause. Surely the Lord is blessing us. May we render to him true service! T. T. Myers.

Chips from the Work-house.

After the close of Annual Meeting wife and I were induced to accompany a party of Western brethren and sisters on a trip to Washington, and a boat-ride down the historic Potomac, and over Chesapeake Bay to old Point Comfort; now called Fortress Monroe. There we visited the North Hampton Normal and Industrial Institute, and found about six hundred and fifty colored and Indian students in attendance. This institution seems to be doing a noble work. It is supported not by the Government, but by the hand of charity. Over sixty thousand dollars are annually raised for the support of this school. We attended the Sunday-school and preaching services, and were much impressed with the perfect order, and the proficiency attained in answering the Sunday-school questions, propounded by the teachers. Over seven hundred acres of land belongs to the school, and many of the boys are taught practical lessons in farming, while the girls are taught how to cut, fit and make garments, and also approved methods of cooking, baking, etc. We also visited the Soldiers' Home, where thousands of soldiers are cared for by the Government.

From the top of the old seminary building, now used for the comfort of the soldiers, we were shown that part of the bay where occurred the memorable conflict between the "Monitor" and the "Merrimac," wherein all the powers, at command of each, were brought into action to deal destruction and death to the other.

While sitting upon comfortable seats, and seeing the soldiers march in such perfect uniformity and order, the mind began to contrast the work of an army, thus taught to deal out destruction and death, with the army of our Lord, taught only to bless and to save. The one is composed only of able-bodied males, the other of the aged, the middle-aged and the young, both male and female. All of them will be rewarded for every kind word or act, even to the giving of a cup of water in the name of a disciple. The one is seeking for earthly fame and the glory of man, which fades away like the flower of the grass,—the other after the glory of God and the crown of life which fadeth not away. The one is seen with much parade and display, studying the best methods to deal out destruction and death, the other goes quietly everywhere, studying and developing the best methods to elevate, ennoble, to bless and to save. The one meets destruction and disappointment, the other will come off conqueror and more than conqueror through him that loved us. The one is never safe, the other always safe, even in the hour of dissolution. The one submits his will to a weak, fallible human commander, who may, in a moment, rush him into the jaws of destruction,—the other yields himself to an Infallible Leader who, with infallible certainty, leads on to victory. The one is yielding and using his powers to destroy,—the other always seeks to elevate, to bless and to save.

The Annual Meeting for 1891.

THIS Meeting is now in the past. It was undecided for a long time, whether it would be at Hagerstown or not. I now believe it was under the influence of a Higher Power, that it was decided in the way it was. I also believe it was from the same Source that so many went to see for themselves. I am glad it is so. All prejudices were laid aside, and every one seemed to see aright.

A policeman was heard to say, "If everybody was half as good as these people, we would not need such big court-houses." "No," said the man addressed, "one, two by four, would be large enough." "Plenty," said the policeman.

The daily papers declare the Meeting was a marvel. The evening meetings in the tabernacle were described as being strikingly impressive. The council was spoken of in this way: "Any one attending these meetings could not help being impressed by the harmony that pervades all the deliberations, and the thorough acquaintance the delegates have with the Bible."

Many of the leading men of other churches attended the Meeting. I believe if some one had asked them who we as a people are, they would have said, "They are Christians." If we would care less about the name, and be true disciples, then the world, from our conduct, would call us Christians and there would be no need of explanation. The name "Dunkard" is good enough, until the world, from our works, calls us something better. If our meetings are announced, and the place named, will not God put it into the hearts of the people to go as of old? What was it that prompted the people to go to John's baptism, even though it was a new thing? I am sure, if we but do our part, God will see to it that his name is glorified and the cause furthered.

Of Interest to All.

THE advisory committees who were appointed to watch over the moral and religious influence of our schools, met at the Annual Meeting at Hagerstown, Md.

All the schools were represented, and after due deliberation the following was accepted as the bond of union in their work in the different schools, and as it is important for all to know what is expected of them—both parents and teachers,—it was thought best to publish what was done.

The visiting committee adopted the following:

1. To see that the teachers and managers of the schools are in the order of our General Brotherhood.

2. To see that they are willing to encourage and maintain, as far as possible, the order of the church in dress and in everything else among the members and members' children under their charge.

3. To see that the church, where the schools are located, be relieved, as far as possible, of all trouble relating to receiving certificates, fitness of membership of those who are in the schools from other districts, and in securing the proper order to be observed in the religious exercises of the schools.

4. The principles and practice of our church, as defined by Annual Meeting, shall be the one rule by which the visiting board will secure a oneness in all the schools.

A joint meeting was then held by the committees and as many of the faculties as were present at Annual Meeting. After some explanations and and definitions of the rules were given, all expressed themselves satisfied with the work of the committees, and the representatives from the different schools passed the following resolution:

"Resolved, that we appreciate the interest our advisory committees take in our schools and thankfully receive their counsel and shall try to carry their fatherly advice into our work."

The meeting passed off most harmoniously and we regretted that the time was so limited that we could not talk more of other departments of our school work. Nothing will tell so powerfully on the future of our church as the schools, and they should work in perfect harmony with the church. We have much reason to be devoutly grateful that our schools are in the hands of Brethren who appreciate their responsibility and the interests of the church.

The department of Bible study demands and deserves the support of all. JAS. A. SELL.

From Cartersville, Va.

WE were made happy June 5, by a visit from some of our brethren and sisters, of Ohio, on their return from the Annual Meeting. Among others we mention Bro. John Bowser and daughter, Bro. Filbrum, Bro. Denlinger, wife and daughter, Bro. Martin Hahn and Bro. Yertie. Bro. Hahn preached for us on Sunday morning and Monday night. Bro. B. F. Moomaw came on the evening of June 8. On the 9th we gathered around the tables of the Lord. The occasion was greatly enjoyed. We expected Bro. Henry Frantz and wife with us, but as he was sick, he did not arrive until June 10. Bro. Moomaw preached that evening and left yesterday morning. Bro. Frantz preached last night and expects to preach his last sermon to-night. He will leave us to-morrow. Some of the brethren and sisters had to leave us before the love-feast, which we regretted very much. Bro. Bowser was advanced to the second degree of the ministry. He is a zealous brother and may the Lord, the giver of every good gift, give him grace sufficient to bear the burden and do the duties devolving upon him!

This was Bro. Hahn's first visit, but we earnestly trust it will not be the last. He preached the Word in its truth and purity, being instant in season and out of season. He left us June 10.

The Christian work is great, but what a grand hope is set before us! It should encourage us to fight on until we can gain the victory. Our brethren gave us good admonition, exhorting us to be faithful. How glad we were, once more to see the bright face of our elder, Bro. B. F. Moomaw! It is now four years since he last visited us, and we were greatly encouraged by the good admonition of our dear brother.

Let us all remember our brother, whose responsibilities are great and let us all try to help him bear the burden. He cannot do the work by himself, neither can we work by ourselves, but if we all help each other (by God's assistance), the work will prosper. There is work for us all and none can be exempt. FLORIDA J. E. ETTER.

From Dayton, Ohio.

ELD. A. HUTCHISON, of Kansas, preached for us in the East Dayton church, May 25, continuing the meetings until the 29th. Although the attendance was not large, yet by the Word, so plainly presented, saints were confirmed, and sinners were made to feel that they must be born again.

Brethren L. West and J. Holler continued the meetings over Sunday. Jacob Holler baptized one applicant June 7, and more are almost persuaded. Three years ago our number was from six to ten, but to-day we have a membership of about thirty members. Any of the brethren, passing through the city will be gladly received, as the harvest is great and the laborers are few.

We organized a Sunday-school June 14. Jacob Holler was elected Superintendent; Samuel Rodefer, Assistant. May our school be a success in this place, and may many more learn the way of the Lord. SAMUEL RODEFER.

Notes from Our Correspondents.

"As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

THREE ADDED TO THE CHURCH.—I just closed a short series of meetings in the Clear Creek congregation, Ind. I baptized two and reclaimed one, but more might have been accomplished if the meetings had not stopped, just as the interest was greatest. Annual Meeting and other matters caused a discontinuance of our services.—D. B. Gibson, Cerro Gordo, Ill., June 6.

INTERESTING MEETINGS. Brethren Jerry Katherman and John H. Christian came to us May 16, and began a short series of meetings. They remained with us until May 25, preaching in all eleven sermons. Their Christian courtesy made them many friends in this community, and I long to see the time when they will come back and preach for us again. There are but few of us in number, but most of us are trying to work in the vineyard of the Lord.—Cora B. Barnhart, Snowville, Ohio, June 6.

CHURCH COUNCIL.—The Brethren of the Chippewa Valley church held their council-meeting June 5. Quite an amount of business came before the meeting, but all was adjusted satisfactorily. After meeting we repaired to the water, where one dear soul was buried with Christ in baptism. May 17 we organized our Sunday-school. All the officers and teachers are members of the church. Bro. E. E. Joyce is our Superintendent and Bro. Geo. Hower, Assistant. We have thirty-three scholars enrolled.—Katie Joyce, Red Cedar, Wis., June 8.

INTERESTING MEETINGS.—The series of meetings, which was held at this place by Bro. D. H. Walker, of Luli, Somerset Co., June 4 to 10, was a success. The order and attendance were excellent. Bro. David Clapper and wife stopped off on their way home from Annual Meeting. Bro. Clapper preached on Sunday night. His discourse was very good. He explained to the people the importance of the Christian life, and warned them of the dangers that await them, if their lives are not in the service of God.—F. S. Bowen, Hyndman, Pa.

A LARGE DONATION.—At the meeting of the Missionary Committee of this District yesterday, the Foreman reported the receipt of $500 from Bro. James R. Gish, as an endowment, from which the interest is to be used for the mission work of the District.—G. W. Gibson, Girard, Ill., June 11.

ONE BAPTIZED.—We just received one into our church by baptism. The dear sister's husband said he would come this week. Her daughter and son-in-law have given us a promise to go with us. Information in regard to our country is gladly furnished. — Allen Cripe, Wallace, Nebr., June 7.

PLEASANT LOVE-FEAST. — This church met in council June 6. There was not much business before the meeting, and everything passed off in love and union. There was a choice held for two deacons. The lot fell on brethren Benjamin Shrock, and John S. Fike, and they were installed into their office. The same day we lost three of our deacons,—one by death, the other two moved to other churches. We decided to hold our love-feast Sept. 19. Eleven of our brethren and sisters have moved to other churches during this year. We regretted to see them go. We received six members by letter during this year. One was reclaimed and two have left the church. Four were received by baptism, and four were taken away by death. We were sorry to part with those that were so near to us in Christian love, but we have this hope, that if we never meet on earth, we can meet in heaven, where all is joy, peace and love. Bro. Jonas Lichty and wife, of Waterloo, Iowa, stopped with us on their way to Annual Meeting. Bro. Lichty preached for us on Sunday, May 31. — Rachel Weimer, Eglon, W. Va.

Literary Notes.

Abraham Lincoln, The Liberator: A Biographical Sketch. By Charles Wallace French. Cloth, 12mo, 398 pp. With Portrait, $1.50. Funk & Wagnalls, New York, London, etc.

Numerous so-called biographies of Abraham Lincoln have been published, but many of them lack the true spirit of biography, because the man is merged into exciting times in which he moved—the principal figure and his personality is often lost in the events in which he participated. Many of these works are histories of the Civil War, rather than biographies of the man of the war, the great President — histories of the emancipation of the slave rather than biographies of "Lincoln the man who freed the slave." While his personality is presented, perhaps, on a scale commensurate with its importance as the principal figure in the great historical picture, yet, his true character as a man is often overlooked as we fasten our gaze upon the many personages that gather around him. This biography of Abraham Lincoln subordinates all environing conditions to their proper functions of presenting the personality of the subject in its true light. Abraham Lincoln's personality was so unique, so grand, so strong, that it not only opens up a vast field of research, which the author has explored carefully and lovingly, but also furnishes one of the most interesting ideals of true American manhood This book tells the story of his life, that life, in its simplicity and grandeur, hardly ever equalled, never excelled.

MATRIMONIAL.

"What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

FESLER—LAYCOOK. Bro. Peter F. Fesler and sister Ida M. Laycook, both of Longmont, Colo. G. W. FESLER.

FALLEN ASLEEP

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

BUTTERBAUGH. In the Eel River church, Kosciusko Co, Ind, Jan. 9, 1892, of stomach and liver trouble, Noah Butterbaugh, aged 36 years, 11 months and 28 days.

Deceased was a faithful member of the German Baptist church. He was married to Minerva Frantz, daughter of Bro. Christian and sister Mary Frantz, Sept. 29, 1878. He leaves a wife and four children, two sons and two daughters, a mother, four brothers, two sisters and many friends to mourn his departure.

He, with his family, moved near Warsaw, Ind., but only lived there a few weeks, until he was taken away by the resistless hand of death. His remains were taken to the new cemetery, two miles west of North Manchester on Sunday, Jan. 11, 1891, in the presence of a large number of friends.

Funeral services were held by brethren R. H. Miller and L. W. Teeter, from Job 19: 25, "For I know that my Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand at the latter day upon the earth." ALTHA BUTTERBAUGH.

CLAAR. In the Claar congregation, Blair Co, Pa., June 2, 1891, of cancer of stomach, sister Esther Claar, aged 75 years, 11 months and 13 days.

Sister Claar was a faithful and consistent member of the Brethren church of this place. Her suffering, during the last four months of her stay on earth was great, but she bore her suffering with a Christian fortitude and a strong faith in a Redeemer's saving blood. Her desire was to be absent from the body and to be present with the Lord. She was the mother of twelve children who are all members of the church. She leaves eighty-two grandchildren and forty-five great-grandchildren. Five sons and four daughters survive her to mourn the loss of a kind and loving mother. Funeral services conducted by brethren John L. Holsinger and James D. Brumbaugh, of Woodbury, Pa, from Rev. 14: 13, to a large circle of sympathizing friends and neighbors. F. C. DIVELY.

EBY.—In the asylum at Elgin, Ill., May 24, sister Elizabeth Eby, aged 22 years, 9 months and 17 days.

Deceased united with the church when quite young, and lived true and faithful until death. About three years ago she lost the use of her mind, and was sent to the asylum for treatment, but did not receive any benefit. Finally that dread disease, consumption, entered her system, and she became its victim soon after.

While many have had brighter chances than she had, we believe she is now enjoying that rest that is prepared for all of God's children. Her remains were brought to her house in the Yellow Creek church, Ill., for burial. Funeral services were conducted by Eld. D. B. Eby. LEWIS E. KELTNER.

GIVLER.— In the Ephratah church, Pa, May 29, 1891, at the residence of her sister,—Mrs. Hiram Snyder,—sister Lucinda Givler, aged 53 years, 1 month and 25 days.

Deceased was a faithful member of the church for nearly twenty-five years, and died in good hope. She was an invalid for the last six years, suffering of nerve disease of which she became quite helpless. For the past two years she had to be waited on like a child. At last she grew weaker and weaker, and calmly fell asleep in Jesus to await the glorious resurrection. Her remains were taken to the Middle Creek church for burial. Funeral discourse from 2 Tim. 4: 6, 7, 8, by brethren Isaac Keller and John Myers. SUSIE B SNYDER.

PARISH. In the Beaver Run congregation, near Kyser, Mineral County, W. Va, May 18, 1891, Michael Parish, aged about 61 years

Deceased had been afflicted for thirty-one years with rheumatism and influenza, which took him away. He was a faithful and consistent member of the German Baptist church for over three years, and while he leaves a large family to mourn their loss, we are comforted that it is his great gain.

Funeral services from 1 Thess. 4: 13, by the writer. GEORGE W. LEATHERMAN.

SHEAFFER.—In the Waddam's Grove church, Ill., May 30, 1891, sister Leah Sheaffer, aged 71 years, 6 months and 23 days.

Sister Sheaffer was a consistent member of the Brethren church for many years. We will miss her, as her seat was seldom vacant in the church. She was present at our love-feast, just one week before her death. Funeral services by the Brethren.

A. H. LUTZ.

MAYSILLES. — In Pine Creek church, Ogle Co., Ill., May 31, 1891, Reno Walter Maysilles, aged 18 years, 1 month and 27 days.

Dropsy, resulting from scarlet fever, was the cause of death. Thus, in a little over four months, the mother, one son, and two daughters are taken from the family circle, while only the father, one daughter and three sons remain. Walter's death was very unexpected. His father and sister were East at the time to visit, and attend Annual Meeting, where they received the sad message on Sunday.

Though a dutiful son, he had as yet neglected the one thing needful. May his companions take warning. Services by the writer and Bro. H. M. Barwick from 2 Sam. 14: 14.

D. L. FORNEY.

WATTS —At her home in North Lawrence, Kansas, May 13, 1891, Ida B. Watts, beloved wife of George Watts, and daughter of D. K and Drusilla P. Rankin, aged 24 years, 7 months and 27 days.

Deceased leaves a sorrowing husband, father, mother, six brothers and three sisters. Her remains were brought home and buried in the Brethren's cemetery near Dorrance, in the presence of relatives and a large number of friends. The funeral discourse was conducted by brethren John Newcomer and Jacob Harnish, from Heb. 13: 14

REBECCA RANKIN.

BROWN. -In the Rockton congregation, Clearfield Co., Pa, Bro. Samuel Brown, aged 84 years. J. H. BEER.

WOODLING. — In the Hurricane Creek church, Ill, June 1, of heart failure, sister Sarah Woodling, aged 78 years, 2 months and 11 days.

She was born in Union County, Pa, March 20, 1823. She was married to Abraham Woodling, Jan. 3, 1838, who died forty-three years ago. She was baptized by Eld. D. B. Sturgis, thirty three years ago, since which she has lived a faithful Christian life. Thus a mother in Israel is gone Funeral services by Eld. D. B. Sturgis, assisted by the writer from Rev. 14: 13. JOSEPH JONES.

LONGLEY.—In the St. Joe Valley church, Ind., April 26, 1891, Sarah Longley, aged 78 years, 4 months and 14 days.

Deceased was born in Wayne County, Ind, and moved to St. Joe County, when eighteen years of age. She was married to Philip Hardman in 1834. He died in 1852, leaving her and eight children, five of whom are living; also two brothers, three sisters, and twenty-three grandchildren. She was married to Thomas Longley over twenty-four years ago. She was killed while on her way to church. In crossing the street-car track in South Bend, Ind, the buggy broke down, causing dislocation of the neck and shoulder by the sudden fall. She had many trials in her latter days, but proved a faithful member of the Brethren church for over thirty years. Her funeral was largely attended. Funeral discourse by brethren Daniel Whitmer and Hiram Kreighbaum. CANNON SMITH.

MAYO.—In the Hurricane Creek church, Bond County, Ill, May 29, 1891, of cancer, Mr. Benjamin F. Mayo, aged 80 years, 10 months and 24 days.

Mr. Mayo was born in the city of Boston, Mass., July 5, 1810. He was a brother to ex-mayor Mayo of that city. Deceased was married to sister Elizabeth Distch, April 1, 1854. Funeral services by Eld. Joshua Kessler of the Old Order Disciplef, assisted by the writer, to a large concourse of sympathizing friends. JOSEPH JONES.

KREIDER. — In the Lower Cumberland church, Pa., June 3, 1891, sister Sarah Kreider, aged 73 years, 11 months and 27 days.

Her Christian influence was such as should have a salutary effect on those around her. She was in possession of "a meek and quiet spirit, which, in the sight of God, is of great price." We hope that in the five years of her Christian life, her example in her family of one son and four daughters may have been such as to influence them all to follow her in that way which leadeth unto eternal life, for we have reason to believe that their loss of a kind mother is her eternal gain. Services at her late home in Mechanicsburg, by Bro. Levi S. Mohler and the writer from 2 Cor. 5: 1, 2, 3, assisted by the Methodist minister. Interment at the Baker church.

HARRY BEELMAN.

ZOOK.—Near Baker's Summit, Bedford Co, Pa., within the bounds of the Woodbury church, May 27, 1891, Bro. Jacob Zook, aged 71 years, 11 months and 17 days.

Deceased was the only son of Daniel Zook. Deceased, leaves behind him a wife and five children to mourn their loss. He had been a sufferer from kidney and gravel trouble for five years or more. He was buried in the Holsinger grave-yard. Funeral services by the Brethren, assisted by Rev. Dutt (Lutheran) to a sympathizing congregation of friends. Text, "Thanks be to God who has given us the victory." D. S. REPLOGLE.

JOHNSON. In the Sandy church, Columbiana Co., Ohio, May 30, 1891, sister Maria Johnson, aged 69 years, 8 months and 29 days.

The deceased was a consistent member of the Brethren church for many years. She was the mother of five children, of whom three have preceded her to the spirit world. Her remains were interred in the Homeworth cemetery. Funeral services in the Presbyterian church by the writer, assisted by Bro. Eli Stroup, from Heb. 4: 9.

J. J. HOOVER.

WELLS.—At the home of his son-in-law, Jacob Shoemaker, in the Cowanshannock congregation, Armstrong County, Pa., May 27, 1891, Bro. William Wells, aged 77 years and 8 days.

La Grippe and spinal disease caused his death. Bro. William was a steadfast member of the Brethren church for a number of years. Funeral occasion by the writer from Job 16: 22. ISAAC SECRIST.

HALL.— At Irvington, Nebr., March 14, 1891, of membranous croup, Olive Merle Hall, aged 5 years, 6 months and 14 days.

Some three weeks before her death she got the Bible, took it to her mother, and requested her to gather the family together and have family prayer, and she continued to do this every evening till she was taken sick.

The memory of this is a very pleasant one to her friends, and it makes the Savior so near and his love so real, for evidently he came to this little child by his Holy Spirit and laid his hands on her, as really as he did on those who were brought to him while he was on earth, and blessed her by turning her heart to heavenly things, which she was so soon to see. The funeral services were conducted by the pastor of the Congregational church. I. T. OTIS.

An Expert Opinion.

THE "Medical and Surgical Journal" for March 1891, says editorially:

"This pretty little city of Idaho Springs, Colorado, is situated in a beautiful park about 37 miles from Denver, and is about 7,500 feet above sea level. It is thrifty, prosperous, and has become noted for its hot and cold mineral springs, which contain medicinal properties of extraordinary value. Idaho Springs as a health resort cannot be excelled this side of the world-renowned Carlsbad Springs of Germany, whose waters and the waters found at Idaho Springs bear almost an identical chemical analysis.

"In the early stages of consumption these waters, combined with the invigorating air of this beautiful climate, are almost a specific. We take pleasure in recommending these waters to all suffering from coughs and catarrhal affections. It is the best place to go to for the cure of phthisis. Those of our colleagues who have been sending their patients to this grand health resort all join in praising the satisfactory results received from the invigorating waters and climate. We would therefore urge physicians to advise their patients, threatened with consumption, not to procrastinate, but to try, before it is too late, the salutary effects of the waters of Idaho Springs. The Union Pacific are making special efforts to carry the public to and from this famous resort, with all the modern comfort and ease which the tourist seeking health and pleasure can desire." 22-34.

Grand Excursion to Yellowstone National Park and Other Western Resorts.

THE Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," proposes to run, in July, 1891, a grand excursion from Omaha to Yellowstone National Park, Great Shoshone Falls, Idaho, Ogden, Salt Lake City, Garfield Beach, Denver, Clear Creek Canon, the famous Loop, and other points of interest. The Union Pacific will furnish six horse Concord Coaches, which will carry the party from Beaver Canon, Idaho, to and through Yellowstone National Park. These Coaches will also be taken to Shoshone Station, and used for the ride to Great Shoshone Falls.

From Beaver Canon to Yellowstone National Park, the trip will occupy three days going, three days returning, and eight days will be spent in the park. Excellent tents and good equipment for camping out will be furnished by the Union Pacific, en route from Beaver Canon to the Park, and while in the Park the tourists will be quartered at the various hotels.

The very low rate of $250.00 per passenger has been made from Omaha. This rate includes Railroad, Pullman, and Stage Fare, Meals and Hotel bills from the time of leaving Omaha until the return of the excursion, in all 30 days. No half fare rates.

Only thirty-five passengers can be accommodated, and as accommodations are limited EARLY APPLICATION for same should be made.

In ordering tickets, send money for same by express, to Harry P. Deuel, City Ticket Agent, U. P. System, 1302 Farnam St., Omaha, Nebraska.

No children will be allowed on this trip. For further information relative to this excursion and itinerary, apply to

Garfield Beach on Great Salt Lake, Utah.

THE famous health resort, Garfield Beach, on Great Salt Lake, 18 miles from Salt Lake City, is reached via the Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," and is now open for the season.

This is the only real sand beach on Great Salt Lake, and is one of the finest bathing and pleasure resorts in the West. Owing to the stimulating effect of the brine on the skin, or the saline air upon the lungs the appetite is stimulated, and after a bath, the bathers are ready for a hearty meal, and feel greatly invigorated.

Fine bath-houses, accommodating 400 people, have been erected at Garfield Beach, in connection with which there is a first-class restaurant and a fine, large pavillion built out over the lake. All of these are run by the Union Pacific, which guarantees a first-class resort in every respect.

For complete description of Garfield Beach and Great Salt Lake, send to E. L. Lomax, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent, Omaha, for copies of "Sights and Scenes in Utah," or "A Glimpse of Great Salt Lake." 22-34.

Gospel Chimes!

BY WM. BEERY.

THIS little book has been selling more rapidly than the publishers anticipated. The first edition was almost exhausted in the first two months. A second edition is now printed.

Following are a few of the good words received from brethren and other competent judges:

"An Excellent Book for Sunday-schools."

"After having carefully examined "Gospel Chimes" I can pronounce it an excellent book for Sunday-schools, and hope all the schools of the Brethren will adopt the same Our church is conceded to have the best congregational singing of any denomination, and if it is improved, as it can be, by the use of 'Gospel Chimes,' the power for good will be surprising."—GEO. B. HOLSINGER, Teacher of Music, Bridgewater College, Va.

"Fresh and Pleasing Melodies; Thoughtful, Spiritual, and Poetical Words."

"It gives me pleasure to speak in terms of praise of your new book, 'Gospel Chimes.' It contains many fresh and pleasing melodies to which are wedded thoughtful, spiritual and poetical words. I trust it will hold its own in competition with the numerous books now in the market and find a large sale."—T. M. TOWNE, Chicago, Ill., one of America's best writers of Sunday-school music.

"Better than Many Similar Publications."

"Copy of your new book received. It contains some very pleasing and useful music, while it is to be commended especially for the selection of hymns. Good Sunday-school hymns are in great demand in Sunday-school work, and in this particular 'Gospel Chimes' is better than many similar publications."—A. J. SHOWALTER, the leading writer and publisher of Sunday-school and church music in the South.

"An Excellent Collection."

"I have carefully examined your late Sunday-school singing book, 'Gospel Chimes' and find it to be an excellent collection for the purpose designed, both in words and music."—S. W. STRAUB, Chicago, Ill., the popular Western writer and publisher of Sunday-school music.

Bro. Beery has had a large experience in Sunday-school work, and the book which we offer to the brethren, and the public in general, evinces the exercise of talent as well as good judgment. The religious purity of the hymns contributed by sister Beery adds much to the excellence of the book.

Price per single copy, 30 cts.; per dozen by mail, $3.00; by express, $2.60. Lots of more than a dozen must be sent by express.

BRO. CHR. HANSEN has changed his address from Hordum to Augustegade 26, 1 Sal., Amager, Copenhagen, Denmark.

"IN spite of the treaty of Berlin, which prohibits war vessels passing through the Dardanelles, Russia has succeeded in assembling thirty or forty war vessels on the Black Sea. Most of them were taken through the Dardanelles in sections as merchandise and put together at the Russian navy yard at Odessa. Others were taken through as merchant vessels and transformed into war vessels after arrival. Thomas A. Heenan, United States consul at Odessa, thinks that war will soon break out in Europe."

THE Californian makes a good point against those who never look at themselves for the source of all their trouble. It might be well for others, besides tigers, to run against a glass. "In India a tiger came out of a jungle, and on entering a tent was confronted by a looking-glass. He looked in the glass and growled and grew angry: the tiger in the glass growled and looked angry, and this so enraged the tiger, whose own image he saw, that he jumped into the glass and broke it in pieces, and becoming frightened he ran away. If angry persons would only cure themselves in that way they would save themselves and others much trouble."

ONE good and honest life contains more solid arguments in favor of Christianity than a library full of theological books.

WILLINGNESS TO DO LITTLE THINGS.

THERE are some Christians to whom the words of the servant of Naaman might well be applied. The captain of the host of the King of Syria was very angry because the prophet Elisha had told him to do a thing that seemed so small as to be ridiculous and contemptible. He felt himself too great a man to do such a simple thing as to wash in the Jordan, but his servant wisely said, "My father, if the prophet had bid thee do some great thing, wouldst thou not have done it?" That is just the way hundreds are about feet-washing. If the Lord had commanded them to do some great thing they could do it with ease, but because it is a very humble act they will not stoop to it. There is much inclination to look too high upon the part of professing Christians. They want to do some great thing.

THE POWER OF THE CHURCH.

MR. MOODY has well said: "I am a thousand times more anxious for the purification of the church than for the conversion of sinners. There will be no trouble in securing the conviction of sinners when the church can show a clean record." And that is the secret of all soul-saving success. If we are to have the power which Jesus promised his disciples, it must come down from heaven in the form of "tongues of fire."

Just in proportion to the holiness of the church is her power. Men may reason about Christianity, may reason powerfully and truthfully, so as to sweep away all opposing arguments, and yet these arguments may not affect the conscience and the heart. But there is a moral power in holiness that disarms argument. All the vigor of the soundest logic may be rejected, but there is a moral power in the personal experience of salvation that must produce conviction in spite of everything.

Well did Christ say to Peter, "When thou art converted, strengthen thy brethren." There are thousands of people in the church who ought to take this matter personally home to themselves. We need more of that heart religion that will make better men and women in every-day life. When we get the light to shining aright in the church, there will be little trouble in converting sinners.

"JUST AS YOU THINK."

THE hue and cry has gone forth and is uttered by many tongues—"It is just as you think." "If you think a certain thing right, that makes it right for you; it is just as you believe about it." "It seems to me it is not necessary to be so particular." "I think I can get to heaven without doing these things. I am honest and sincere. I can bid all denominations God-speed."

The above are a few quotations, often used as arguments against the ordinances of the house of God. We affirm that honesty and sincerity in any work does not prove that work to be right. Paul was just as honest and sincere, while persecuting the followers of Christ as he was when he preached the Gospel, and persuaded all men to become Christians. He says, "I have lived in all good conscience before God until this day. I verily thought with myself that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth."

Paul's conscience did not condemn him in the wrong he was doing, because he "thought" he was doing right. If it is just as men think, regardless of the requirements of the Gospel, then murder is right. "Yea the time cometh that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service."

You hear people say "just as you think" to get rid of doing the very things God commands them to do. They set up their "thinking" against the written Word, just as though their thoughts were higher than God's thoughts. It is all right if we do as we think and then think as the written Word says.

BE COURTEOUS.

IT is a nice thing to be a "perfect" Christian gentleman. But, to "be courteous," is as much a duty as any other Bible precept. All the standard rules of politeness, governing social intercourse, are found to be based upon laws of kindness, modesty, and unselfishness, whether observed from such motives by society devotees or not; and holy people, of all others, should not treat them with contempt. Members of the church should be polite towards each other, and so should the members of the family do likewise. There is nothing lost by being polite, but there is much to be gained.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

THERE are a great many prayers said, but of all the said prayers there are none so badly said as the Lord's Prayer. We are sometimes almost made to shiver at the manner in which this prayer of all prayers is repeated. We say "repeated," because such is the right name for it, in the manner in which it is often used.

In its being used we are sometimes reminded of children who are made to say their prayers under protest. It is gone through with as a regularly imposed duty, without any reference whatever, as to its intention. To many it has become a mere mechanical habit, with as little of the true spirit in it as if it were done by a machine. Is not such praying, to say the best, irreverence?

It may be said that the church has adopted it as a part of the service. Suppose it has, does that fact give any excuse for using it as a mere form? Not any more than that our regular stated prayers should be lowered down to a lifeless form, which, we fear, is sometimes done. Why not fill these words with spirit and power, as well as any other words we use in prayer? The trouble may be that we have, to some extent, lost the intent and purpose of prayer. As soon as prayer becomes a mere exercise of form, the power is lost. Our Heavenly Father does not want us to ask of him for the sake of asking. If we do not need anything,—do not want anything, -we should not pray. A real prayer is asking for what we want, and this is what God wants us to do, no more, no less.

John's disciples, though in a sense converted, had not gotten far enough away from Jewish ritualism to rely on the Spirit. And as the new religion, which they had embraced, brought them into a new relation with God, as their Father, they begged of him a form of addressing or praying to him. The disciples of Christ, knowing this, reminded him that John taught his disciples to pray and asked of him that he should teach them to pray, and as a response to this request, the church has the beautiful, expressive and comprehensive prayer which we have become accustomed to call the "Lord's Prayer."

Whether we, as a church, use it too much, we shall not now discuss. Perhaps we say it too much and pray it too little. A proper use of it seems to us to be very appropriate, and we would be sorry to abandon its use, but are exceedingly anxious that we all, in its use, get more of the true spirit in it. Do not say it as a form, but pray it as a prayer.

We have known brethren- yes, ministers who seemed to pray with fervency until they had asked God for everything known, and some things unknown, in heaven and on earth, and then, when coming to the Lord's Prayer, would rattle it off like a school-boy "saying his piece."

In all the prayers we use, there are none that we should pray with so much reverence and feeling as this one. It is a most wonderful prayer, full and complete within itself and can often be used with great profit alone, as in a very complete way it includes every want of a praying soul.

Leaving the intent and purpose of the prayer, we wish to suggest a few thoughts on the wording of it. It appears to us that in our using it there should be a greater uniformity in its wording, as, strange to say, only a very few use it correctly, as given by either of the evangelists. By some large liberties are taken in divergencies, and only a very few use the same words. If we intend to use it as the "Lord's Prayer," it seems to us that it would be much better, in many ways, if we would use the exact wording as given in Matthew, where we have it full and complete. It is a prayer in which we all should unite, if not audibly, in mind and spirit, and this can be done more freely if we all endeavor to use the same form and words. This applies especially when used in our Sunday-schools where the children and scholars are expected to repeat it audibly, after the leader, and we remember of times when our old brethren and sisters did so in the family prayers, and some do it in the public services.

The manner in which some word it and blunder over it would make it almost impossible for a congregation, or any part of it, to follow. It seems to us, and on general principles, we should all learn to use the "Lord's Prayer" reverently, understandingly and properly.

ESSAYS.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God; a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth."

MY IDEAL.

(Addressed to E. K., Johnsville, Ohio.)

You would have me "tell our honored mothers
In the pages of the MESSENGER we love,
How to clothe their little ones for heaven—
How to keep them for the Savior we adore."
Mother, do you know you ask a lesson
Printed in unfading letters which shall stand
In God's great record for me or against me,
When we stand before his judgment throne?
Prostrate in the dust I lie! How can I impart
Such knowledge—love so vast, subline and high—
I, who never by the cradle watched the Slumbering of my child? O! my heart in Tender yearning bendeth lower than my knees;
While unbidden tears are mingling with my prayer
Heavenward sent for aid divine!

Once I dreamed
Of little fingers in my own by love entwined,
And of footfalls, soft as angels, which fell
Side by side with mine, as I journeyed o'er
Life's pathway rugged, steep and thorn-bestrewn.
Oft the little feet grew weary; oft that tender clasp
Beloved and the baby prattler murmured
For a smoother path to tread. Then I told
The old sweet story of the Babe, the cross,
The throne, till content, again we traveled onward,
Toward our final home. A faithful watch
I kept along the way, lest those tender feet
So pure and undefiled should stray adown
The inviting by-ways leading into worldly honor,
Through the shaded labyrinths of pride.

For, though those ways look fair and pleasant to Overwearied travelers, sin and temptation hide
Within their beauty rare, and he who turns
Aside to enter them, leaves innocence behind.
This is the price the Tempter claims for pleasures
Sought in his domain. By firm control and mild
Those guileless feet were kept from venturing in
The darkest streams of sin, whose turbid waters
Rise to overflow and stain the snowy chastity
Of souls that dare to stem its current swift and strong.
My feet, I firmly planted in the footprints
Which the Master's feet had left, that my own
Might never stumble nor forsake the way he trod.
Tongue and action well I guarded; each wild
Passion, prayer subdued; calmed each strife
And fretful accent into peace and softened tone;
Teaching thus the way to conquer self and sin.

With zealous care I pointed out
The finger-marks of the Divine, in every opening bud
And flower which blossomed on our way. In sun
And moon and clouds and leafy woods, in rock
And lofty mountain, spreading vale and green-clad
Hill, and silvery lake and rivulet,
In ocean's ever restless beat, in shell
And pebble on the shore, in chirp of insects,
Thrilling note of bird, I traced decisive marks
Of architectural genius, far Excelling human skill. Thus early on the Expanding mind was pressed, the wisdom and the grandeur
Of the Infinite. The care he hath for All his handiwork, and his sublime compassion
For his masterpiece—mankind—was duly taught,
While the unfolding intellect was free from taint
And blight of worldly love.

When the shadow of God's wings
Hung like a misty veil about the lowly earth,
Gently draping mountain peak and star-lit dome
In purple shades of night, on my bosom
Love o'erflowing, the tired head I fondly pressed,
Murmuring low some sacred story from the Bible's
Lavish store, till the soul-lit eyes grew dreamy
In the charm. With a mother's holy kisses
Drooping eyelids I caressed, while my arduous
Care and yearnings down at Jesus' feet I lay,
As I laid the precious slumberer in
Our Father's gracious care until morning beams
Unsealed the azure eyes.

O! sweet the fragrant morn
When baby knees bent low beside my own;
And baby hands were lifted heavenward, clasped
In prayer! Sweet the lips which prayed "Our Father"
As dear Jesus taught his followers long ago.
Like the breath of holy incense upward borne
On angel pinions, to Jehovah's waiting ear
Rose our prayers each blessed dawn amidst
The praiseful song of birds. Then the Father's great Compassion opened wide his lavish store-house
To replenish us with vigor for another day of toil.
Thus renewed by grace divine, we set out to win
The goal; plodding, working, ever upward
Till upon our ardent vision shone the prize
Of precious promise set in heaven's jeweled crown.
Many days we toiled and journeyed, hand in hand
Through sun and storm, ere the fadeless glory of fair
Heaven-land beamed on our way, hastening
Wearied, lagging feet. We were no more babe
And mother, fair in youthful womanhood,
When we stood in anxious waiting for the angels
To unlatch the Gates of Pearl. But, a Christian
Grand and valiant in his Gospel Armor bright,
And an aged, tottering pilgrim bowing low
Upon her Christian staff.

So, while I dreamed
A flower within my bosom bloomed, shedding Fragrance of maternal bliss. But ideals vanish
Like the desert's visionary scene; and Hope's florets
Often wither in Disappointment's searing blast,
Like the bloom of summer fades when touched by Autumn frost. And to-day no child's sweet
Prattle breaks the stillness while I write.
God with other labor now my hands has filled.
But, should he lay upon my bosom such Ornaments of home as the darlings whom
You cherish as bright jewels from his hand,
I should wake their understanding of the Good,
The Pure, the Beautiful and True, by the sweetest songs
Of Zion mortal tongue have ever sung;
And twine for their fair brows a wreath of jewels
Coined from the sacred mine, heaven's well-beloved
Has opened for our use; and clothe them in the pure
White vesture, gemmed with pearls of righteousness
Embellished with humility and love.

And their hearts should be all garnished with
The Savior's thrilling words, ere their lips
Had uttered the name, "Mother" dear and renowned,
Beneath the genial influence of a life
Adorned by piety their souls should bask,
Expand and ripen into holiness, true fitness
For the Master's use. By affection's hallowed ties
Messiah kept his followers, adoring
Worshipers; and by example led them
To the blessed Port of Peace. Thus, through love's magic Power, strengthened by prayer and judgment, rightly Divided and applied, I should strive to keep
The children God had given as pure as when
They drew life's first and vital breath; and teach Them how to climb the lofty hights which lead
To triumphs won in Jesus' service sweet,
By mounting up myself before them to Elysian
Fields, kept green and fair by sparkling dews
From heaven's fount of smiles.

FAITH.

BY JESSE CROSSWHITE.

THE subject of faith is as old as the Bible. We find, right at the threshold of the Divine Record, an allusion to the subject in the case of Cain and Abel. Paul says that "by faith Abel offered unto God a more acceptable sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained evidence that he was righteous," etc. Now, while this is one of the oldest subjects treated of in the Bible, it seems to be one of the least understood by the masses of the people. And yet it is the one the most often preached about, talked about, and written about. Nevertheless, as old and familiar as the subject seems to be, it is, however, one worthy of our most earnest and careful contemplation.

The apostle Paul tells us in Heb. 11: 1, that "faith is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." From this we learn two things:

That faith is a fervent desire and expectation for something which we do not see, and the possession of which is only made known to us by our confidence in the integrity and veracity of the one who has promised us the bestowment of the coveted prize.

I think I can better make my ideas clear to the mind of the reader by the rehearsal of a conversation which I had with one of my neighbors, the other day, on the subject. The neighbor asked me how he might know positively that his sins were pardoned. I asked him if he believed positively that all of God's Word was true, and that he was able to do everything he promised to do. Receiving an affirmative answer, I then went on to tell him that it was through faith that we were enabled to "overcome the world," and I then went on to illustrate the subject thus: Suppose I tell you that I have a piece of work that I wish to employ some one to do, and for which I am willing to pay the sum of ten dollars as soon as the work is done according to my orders,—that I will give the workman a written specification just how I want the work done,—that the applicant can have a copy of these specifications and study them carefully before he begins the work, and then he can also have them constantly at hand while he is engaged on the job, so as to avoid the possibility of making any mistake in the doing of the work. I ask the man if he is willing to undertake the job. He asks to be allowed to examine the specifications. After a satisfactory examination he announces his willingness to undertake the work. I now tell him that there is another condition in the matter, that, as the means by which I purpose to liquidate my promise to him, must consist in something which he cannot see at the time he receives it, he must believe, nevertheless, that I have made good my promise to him, and to doubt which will be an offense to me, that I will surely put something into his pocket, which, when the occasion arises which necessitates its use, he will surely find in his possession, and available to him to the value of ten dollars.

With this promise on my part, the man goes on and performs the work assigned him, all the while examining the specifications to make sure that he makes no mistake. When the work is completed, the man is quite sure that he has done it according to my directions, and hence he confidently expects his reward. I, according to my promise, slip a check into his pocket,—good at any bank in the world, for ten dollars. The man having thus completed his job and received his reward, "goes on his way rejoicing" in the fact that he is this much the richer. By and by he meets a neighbor who asks him if he got his pay for the work he did. He confidently replies, "Yes, I got what I was promised,—ten dollars." The neighbor says, "Where is your money?" The man replies, "In my pocket." The neighbor says, "What is the color of your money?" The other replies, "I never saw the money, but I know I have it, for the person for whom I did the work would not deceive me." The other replies, "You might be deceived nevertheless; put your hand in your pocket and see if it is there."

Now, if the man would yield to this temptation, it would at least imply a doubt, on his part, of my veracity. Confidingly trusting in my word, he refuses to test the matter by an examination of the contents of his pockets. The result is that he goes on about his business from day to day, month to month, and from year to year. All the while his wants are being supplied, so that he has no necessity for using his "ten dollar check," but in process of time his physical strength begins to fail, so that he begins to find it somewhat harder to procure those things which are necessary for his present wants, but even now his friends supply what his own physical strength is unable to procure for him.

But the time ultimately comes, that even those earthly friends fail him, and he is left to battle alone with those privations and pressing wants which he feels are coming upon him. He lies, feeble and emaciated, on a bed of sickness and pain. No kind hand even puts a cooling draught of water to his fever-parched and burning lips. In his agony he cries out, "Ten dollars for a cup of ice-cold water to slake my burning thirst!" "That Friend that sticketh closer than a brother" immediately applies the cooling draught to his fever-parched lips. The man, in grateful acknowledgment for the inestimable boon, draws forth his long-cherished check, and presents it to his Benefactor, when, lo, his eyes are opened, and he beholds in this Friend, in this, the hour of his extremity, the same person who gave him the check years ago! The Benefactor says to him, "Well done, thou good and faithful servant, inasmuch as thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joys of thy Lord."

This is the illustration which I gave my neighbor in answer to his query, "How may I know positively that my sins are pardoned?" He expressed himself as being satisfied. May others feel likewise!

"THE PROMISE OF THE FATHER."

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

HUNDREDS of God's people greeted me with joyful faces at our late Conference, acknowledging the helpfulness of my silent ministry as regards the apprehension of a Personal Christ, and the realization of 1 John 1: 3. I do not claim to write my own cogitation, knowing that I was not taught it by man, and am not in the least surprised that it proves to be meat for those who have in very truth been born of God, and know Him as their Father in the conscious witness of the Holy Ghost.

The word which we read through our eyes and ears, and pronounce with our lips, is not the WORD we find in John 1: 1, 2, 3, 4. "The WORD is GOD," and "was made flesh," and is re-incarnate in every heart that receives Him by faith. Less than this God has not promised, and less than this can bring no abiding peace. "God is Love," and when this is "shed abroad in the heart by the Holy Ghost," fear is cast out. Rom. 5: 5; 1 John 4: 16, 17, 18. Not only does faith in Jesus establish a filial relation, but it inspires filial confidence, so that we know that John 17: 21, 22, 23, is a blessed, present, living reality. "WE KNOW" is the distinguishing characteristic of a truly regenerate state. The dual commandment in 1 John 3: 23 includes all that God has done for us, all that He has promised, all we are to believe, and all we can enjoy in this life and the next.

"Exceeding great and precious promises are given unto us," according as the all-power of the Godman "hath given unto us all things that pertain unto life and Godliness." 2 Pet. 1: 3, 4. But here is a promise inclusive of all others: "Behold, I send THE PROMISE OF MY FATHER upon you." Luke 24: 49. Nothing needs to be more profoundly studied, prayed and hoped for, realized and exemplified, than this "enduement of power from on high." This letter is intended for the entire "commonwealth of Israel," for all need it, but is especially designed for those who have more or less opened their hearts to me during the session of Conference, whose presence and words I will not soon forget. Never can I tell what emotions thrilled my inner being to meet so many with whose hearts my own has been sweetly knit through many years of separation. Especially was my heart set on fire with gratitude and Christian affection to behold for the first time so many of Christ's dear and faithful embassadors, "whose names are in the Book of Life," and whose labors and sacrifices for Jesus are so familiar to the church. Truly the people described in 1 Pet. 2: 5, 9, are only a militant colony of the glorious assembly portrayed in Heb. 12: 22, 23, 24.

That there is a wide disparity between God's provision for us in Christ, and general Christian experience, is painfully apparent. "If any man have not the Spirit of Christ, he is none of His," is a declaration that may well startle us. What the Spirit of Christ is, and what the evidence of His indwelling, is the open secret of the Bible.

From the first quiver of life in the vestal germ to the last quiver of life on the Cross, the whole being of Emmanuel in all its elements and activities, organic and voluntary, was under the absolute dominance of the Holy Ghost. The passive verb of faith in Luke 1: 38, was the amalgamation of divinity and humanity. "That which is CONCEIVED IN HER is of the HOLY GHOST," "GOD MANIFESTED IN THE FLESH." Matt. 1: 20; 1 Tim. 3: 16. "And the child grew, and waxed strong in spirit, filled with wisdom; and the grace of God was upon Him." Luke 2: 40. Thus he passed on and up through His divine apprenticeship to the perfect ingrowing and unfolding of the Godhead in a sin-conditioned, sin-limited body "made of a woman under the law." Rom. 8: 3; Gal. 4: 4.

When he had reached the appointed stature and wisdom, He went forth to His public consecration in the Jordan, to receive a verbal and visible display of the great fact of His life from its genesis. Matt. 3: 16, 17. "Anointed with the Holy Ghost and with power, HE WENT ABOUT DOING GOOD, and healing all that were oppressed of the devil: FOR GOD WAS WITH HIM." Acts 10: 38. Such a birth, and such a life, and such a ministry, qualified Him to "offer Himself without spot to God through the Eternal Spirit." Heb. 9: 14. And through this same blood of the everlasting covenant, the God of peace brought again from the dead our Lord Jesus, that Great Shepherd of the sheep. Heb. 13: 20. In all this plentitude of divinity and perfection of humanity, He sits today "on the right hand of the Majesty on high," where "He ever liveth TO MAKE INTERCESSION FOR US," our Elder Brother and Omnipotent Melchisedec. Heb. 1: 3, and 6: 20, and 7: 25.

This very Holy Ghost, the very essence and personality of Jehovah, is the promise of the Father to the Son FOR ALL BELIEVERS. "Verily, verily, I say unto you, he that believeth on me, the works that I do shall he do also; and greater than these shall he do." Why? "Because I go unto my Father" to send unto you that "Other Paraclete" which has been the supreme object of my Incarnation. John 14: 12, 26, and 15: 26.

Ponder especially the "because" in John 7: 39, and the "all things" in 14: 26, and 16: 15; and with this couple the "all grace," "always," "all-sufficiency," "all things," and "every," in 2 Cor. 9: 8. Has not Paul well said, "that the man of God may be perfect," being so "thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. 3: 17. We receive the Spirit of God expressly "that we might KNOW the things that are freely given to us of God." 1 Cor. 2: 12. We have become so lost in the letter, and in the symbol, and in the scaffolding, that we shrink from that simple, direct personal testimony of an indwelling Christ which is the power and the glory of Christianity. The believer KNOWS that Christ is in him the "hope of glory," as truly as Christ knew that He was the embodiment of the Father. Col. 1: 27; John 6: 56, 57. To fail here is to fail fatally.

I have recently read a prize essay, entitled, "Prayer as a Theory and Fact," in which are many glorious things beautifully said, and not a few which no unbiased believer in revelation can read without sadness. It is amazing and heart-sickening how the author plays with the words of inspiration, distorts facts, stultifies himself, and shakes hands with infidels to empty the "whatsoever" in John 14: 13, of God's meaning. What Christ is, He is for us; and ONLY according to our FAITH, His representation of us as a sin-bearer, and his representation of us as an advocate, are a perfect equation. And it is "the promise of the Father" to give us the position of the risen Savior by transferring to us through faith the righteousness He wrought in life, death, and resurrection as our Substitute. And this wholly "through the operation of God," by the spirit. Col. 2: 12; 2 Cor. 3: 18.

It is through our perfect identification with the cross and the throne that Jesus is made unto us of God all that is signified by 1 Cor. 1: 24, 30. Jehovah has deposited "all the fulness of the Godhead," in "the Man Christ Jesus:" and not one particle of that "fullness of grace and truth" will we receive save by the Spirit, and not one particle will the Spirit communicate save to faith. This is the divine, inexorable order of salvation, and to transpose any point would nullify the whole scheme of redemption.

Pentecost is to faith an every-day fact. The Christian life is essentially eucharistic. "At that day," when the promise of the Father shall be fulfilled, "ye shall KNOW that I AM IN MY FATHER, and ye in me, and I IN YOU." John 14: 20. "These things have I spoken unto you, that MY JOY might REMAIN in you and that your joy might BE FULL." John 15: 11. Do we realize this? How few can honestly answer in the affirmative. How sensitive many of us are in relation to ordinances, God-made and man-made!

How rigidly punctual in the observance of ecclesiastical minutiæ, while the crooked serpent of self draws its slimy folds over acts, and words, and looks, without the rebuke that is meted out to a sister with a capstring of deeper dye than tradition justifies. The promise of the Father not only eradicates pride, but it makes us gentle and pacific, and sweet and patient, and long-suffering as He is. It is large enough to gratify His own boundless love for sinners, and fill the ever-expanding soul of the believer forever with the grace and peace and blessedness of Jehovah-Jesus. The office of Emmanuel is an everlasting priesthood, an eternal link of our relation and condition, and the ministry of the Holy Spirit is an eternal Apocalypse of Jesus Christ. Melchisedec was first king of righteousness, then king of peace. Heb. 7: 2.

Grace must reign through righteousness UNTO ETERNAL LIFE BY JESUS CHRIST OUR LORD. Rom. 5: 21. This is the order of Melchisedec. The Comforter, the Promised Substitute and Revealer of Jesus, will not only testify to the complete reconciliation of the world unto God by the blood of the cross, but "He will show us things to come," and as long as Incarnate Deity has a fullness of life and light, and joy and glory, which our redeemed humanity has not yet apprehended. John 16: 13. The face of Jesus Christ is the reading of the redeemed in the world to come no less than in this. 2 Cor. 4: 6; Rev. 22: 4. The "may" in Philpp. 3: 12, is a verb for eternal conjugation.

Not until the dewdrop can swallow all the oceans of the universe, will the ransomed, adoring, God-associating soul learn to know God as He knows Himself, or outgrow his dependence on the didactic function of the Holy Spirit; and that will be—never. As the inworking Spirit fashioned a new, faultless human being out of the old, sin-stained material of the Virgin's organism, so the same Spirit, by faith, lays our whole composite nature under contribution for the perfecting of our sainthood according to the pattern of God in the flesh. Truly it doth not yet appear what we shall be; but WE KNOW. Let this be our blessed antepast. 1 John 3: 2. WE KNOW.

PRIVATE COMMUNIONS.

BY E. C. MOOMAW.

SOME of the Virginia churches have a custom of holding love-feasts in the spring of the year, one of which it was my privilege to attend a few days ago. It was the first we had ever seen, and it was so much more satisfactory than the public, crowded meetings, generally held in the autumn, that we feel to commend it to the notice of the Brotherhood. First, in looking for Scriptural authority for private love-feasts we do not find any particular instruction anywhere, saying in so many words that these meetings shall or shall not be private or public. But we do find the practice of the Savior and the apostles, also of the primitive church, set forth in the clearest manner. At the "Last Supper," when the ordinances were instituted by the Master, there were present only Jesus and the disciples. No curious, noisy, and irreverent multitude gazed upon that sacred scene. The very idea is repugnant to the mind, just as it is repugnant to conceive of a crowd of strangers gazing upon the privacy of a family.

The Savior went with his disciples, the twelve alone, to the large upper room where he performed his last office of love, gave them his last words, and told them to follow his example.

Again, in 1 Cor. 11, we have a plain reference to a love-feast service. There is no hint of a mixed multitude, but every evidence that none but Christians were present. This is confirmed by the testimony both by the Fathers and of contemporaneous pagan historians, who testify that the love-feasts of the early Christians were held in private.

And is this not eminently fitting when the church meets to have holy communion with her Divine Head? Should the mind of the communicant be distracted by the presence of the crowd, the shuffling of feet over benches and floors, the gaze of the curious, the jests of the careless, and the shouts of the outside rowdy? What good can the preaching do when no one can listen to it?

Frequently the preacher himself can scarcely hear his own voice. It is said that the public are admitted to these meetings so that they can see the example. Jesus did not admit them for that purpose. With him it was a sacred family affair, a holy service for the eyes and hearts of believers alone, and so it should be with us.

This is the right view of the case theologically. There is not a single instance in the whole New Testament Scriptures where any evangelist or apostle preached the ordinances or order of the church to the unconverted multitude,—not one.

What did they preach? To the strictly unconverted they invariably preached repentance and faith,—"repentance toward God and faith toward the Lord Jesus Christ." They preached Jesus,—his life, his death, and his resurrection.

These are the grand themes of the true preacher. When any one was manifestly converted, as in the case of the centurion, or the Philippian jailer, the next teaching in order was baptism; and after that the remaining ordinances and precepts. The ordinances were not intended for a display or exhibition to the outside world as if we were calling upon them to behold our devotion and obedience, but were intended for the exclusive benefit of believers.

This should always be kept in view. We make a serious mistake when we reverse the divine order of preaching, as we do in our public Communion meetings, and in much of our missionary and tract work, holding forth the ordinances to the unconverted multitude.

First of all the disposition of obedience must be produced, which is nothing less than the NEW CREATURE, but before there can be any acceptable obedience "FROM THE HEART." To accomplish this fundamental result, the apostles invariably preached a crucified and risen Christ, crucified for our sins, thus producing conviction; "risen for our justification," thus giving us peace with God, through faith.

In another article we will discuss more fully the divine order of preaching. It is evident that the proper practice of the ordinances is in the sacred privacy of the church when she is alone with her Lord. They are intended to promote growth in grace, and to cultivate in the heart and in the daily life the various and blessed fruits of the Spirit. Of course no unconverted person can comprehend these things because they are spiritually discerned. Let the preacher learn how to divide the Word aright, giving to every one his portion of meat in due season,—to the unconverted those portions which are divinely ordained for their conviction and conversion; to the converted those portions suited to their condition,—milk for babes, and strong meat for the mature and experienced Christian.

DAVID.

BY IDA M. WAGNER.

EVERY Bible reader loves to think of David as the sweet singer of Israel. However comforting and inspiring this thought may be, we will consider for a few moments the circumstances which led him to that elevated position.

Let us go out on the hills of Judea and visit him as the shepherd boy. We find him a handsome youth with a staff in his hand and a scrip or wallet at his side. Notice his short stature and red hair. It is said that the color of his hair is frequently observed among his countrymen at the present day. His bright eyes and graceful figure attract our attention. His frank, open countenance and ruddy complexion prove that he was not nurtured within four close walls. We inquire if his strength is equal to his appearance, and he replies in the Psalms: "He maketh my feet like hinds' feet, and setteth me upon my high places. He teacheth my hands to war, so that a bow of steel is broken by mine arms." His faithfulness to duty and his remarkable strength are shown in his exploit with the lion and bear, while tending his father's flock.

We watch him going from place to place and wish to know the charm of his solitary life. We glance at his flock, observe the surrounding country and after taking another look at the lad we remark, Why further concern? He is but a shepherd boy! But wait a moment, methinks I see a harp by his side. I look again and, lo, he is ready to play. We draw nearer and as we approach, we catch the sweet strains of music which echo and re-echo with the sweetest melody. The harmony of the music and the pleasant scenes of nature, with their soothing influence, make us wish that we, too, could live the life of a shepherd. When we think of his favored place of instruction, having Nature as his teacher and intimate companion, we are not surprised at his playing the harp so melodiously.

Later his skill in music was the means of subduing the paroxysms of Saul's insanity. While thus absorbed in the duties of a shepherd boy and thinking of the watchful care of the True Shepherd, we wish that each person might say with David, "The Lord is my shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures; he leadeth me beside the still waters."

We would gladly remain with David and his flock to learn more of the secret of his enviable condition but, however loth we are to leave the place, we must pass on to follow him in his future charge. While the Israelites under Saul are fighting against the Philistines, David is instructed to carry provision to his brethren and to learn of their welfare. Leaving the sheep with a keeper, he willingly goes. While among the army he hears the war cry of the Philistines, the challenge of whom, it is said, had been made for the fortieth time. His martial spirit is aroused and, regardless of the reprimand received from his brother, he rushes forward, ready to engage in the conflict. We still see him as the shepherd boy. He is equipped with the shepherd's sling, with five smooth stones in his shepherd's bag and his staff in his hand. When we think of him going forth in the strength of the Living God, his victory does not seem so marvelous, yet history records no case equal to it.

David's victory over Goliath was the turning point in his career. He was taken to the court of Saul, became armor bearer, minstrel, and, through Saul's jealousy and hatred, a fugitive. He rises step by step till he becomes king.

During his fugitive life Jonathan's warning and Michal's assistance are effective in his making several hair-breadth escapes. In proportion as David is hated by the father, he is loved by the son and daughter.

David's life would be incomplete without special mention of the exemplary character of his protector. In referring to the friendship of Jonathan and David we often ascribe more praise to the latter than is justly due him. Think of the kindness and brotherly love received at his hands. We are told that, "Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his garments, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle." Why this honor conferred upon David? "Because Jonathan loved him as his own soul." Jonathan's love was of the practical kind, for it was shown by works as well as by faith, and through it David's safety was insured.

When David first sought refuge, he fled to Samuel in Naioth which was his first meeting with the prophet since his boyhood at Bethlehem. Saul's pursuit at this place was the occasion of the words, "Is Saul also among the prophets?" The renewal of the covenant between Jonathan and David shows the depth of sympathy between them.

When Jonathan's father turns against him and throws a javelin at him Jonathan is convinced that David is no longer safe in his presence. We hear him say, "Go in peace and the Lord be between me and thee." David goes. But previous to his becoming an outlaw, he visits Nob and during his interview with the high-priest, he receives the hallowed bread and the sword of Goliath. From here he escapes from Achish by feigning madness. As we follow him to the cave of Adullam we are reminded of the Blessed Savior who had not where to lay his head. His family who join him here seem to be analogous to Christ's disciples. David's attendants now number 400. While at Engedi he places himself under the care of the king of Moab, the home of his grandmother, Ruth. He also spares the life of Saul in the cave and cuts off a part of his robe. Saul admits of David's uprightness, but he still continues to seek his life. Being warned by the prophet Gad, David now flees to the forest of Hareth where Abithar comes to his rescue. The number of his army has swelled from 400 to 600. Henceforth his wanderings cannot be traced with any degree of precision. During his seclusion in the wilderness of Ziph, Jonathan comes to strengthen his hand in God. Here occurs their last meeting. Jonathan expresses his desire to have David king and his willingness to be next in rank. When we think of Jonathan's unselfish nature there is no surprise at David's words, "Thy love to me was wonderful, passing the love of women."

After David's life as a fugitive we no longer find him among the conquered, but as the conqueror. He reigns as king, with his capital at Hebron, where he ruled seven and one-half years, the last two of which were disturbed by the ruling of Ishbosheth over Israel. Abner also revolted, and finally he and Ishbosheth were slain. At this juncture the throne was vacant and David hears the united call of Israel to become shepherd of the royal flock. He has not lost the true qualities of his shepherd life, for whenever an enemy approaches he is ever on the alert to defend his subjects. A third time he is anointed, and a great festival of three days' duration is made in honor of the occasion.

His first step is to make an assault on the stronghold of Jebus. David offers the captainship to the one striking the first blow at the Jebusites and Joab wins the prize. After this victory he looks well to the foundations of the city. Fortifications are made, and Tyre, for the first time, assists Israel by sending cedar wood to build the new capital. The ark, which had remained at Kirjath-jearim for twenty years, is removed to Jerusalem. David's desire to build the house of God is approved by the Lord, but when he is not allowed to execute his plans, he does not complain. Instead of murmuring he offers a prayer of thanksgiving, showing his implicit confidence and submissive spirit. We, as brethren, might learn a lesson from this circumstance. We incline to the idea that we cannot succeed in cities as do other denominations. We can rest assured that if we will do the preparatory work, as did David, the Lord will build us an house, or have it built by our efforts.

David executed the commands of the Lord till he finally conquered the Philistines, Amalekites, Edomites, Moabites, Ammonites, and, after a long war, the Syrians. He became a supreme ruler like the great rulers of Egypt and Persia. After making all these conquests and attaining his greatness and power we still find him weak, for he failed to conquer self. His great sin was doubly wicked in implicating the character of Bathsheba and causing the murder of her husband, Uriah. David's confession was not simply an emotional work, for he said, "My sin is continually before me."

Alongside of David's great sin stands out in bold relief his magnanimous repentance. But this does not blot out the punishment, for he is told that, "the sword shall never depart from his house." The prophecy is fulfilled and the last years of his life are much disturbed. The murder of his eldest son, Ammon, and the revolt of his best-beloved son, Absalom, brought much sorrow to his heart. As David ascends Mt. Olivet he is not arrayed in pomp and glory; his heart is bleeding because of the wickedness of a rebellious son. He is accompanied by a procession which is overcome with grief. As they advance, they are met by Shimei whose cursing David receives as a reprimand from God. After David's exile from Jerusalem, he returns, and immediately afterwards we have Sheba's revolt, the three years' famine and the census of the people. His last act is building an altar to the Lord. Upon this same spot the Temple was erected, and some contend it is what is now known as the "Dome of the Rock."

History records David's death at the age of seventy and states that he was buried in the city of David. The precious words of his last poem are worthy of imitation. "He hath made with me an everlasting covenant, ordered in all things, and sure: for this is all my salvation, and all my desire." Thus closes the life of a great and good man, "one after God's own heart."

THE GARDEN.

BY F. J. E. ETTER.

THE Lord planted a garden, eastward in Eden, where he put man, whom he had formed. He has made a garden for us to work in, and in all our labors Christ is to be our Leader or Master.

A garden will furnish us the necessaries of life, but it requires great work and care to keep everything in growing order, and so it is in the church. The obnoxious weeds will grow up, and unless we keep them plucked out by the root, they will choke out the good seed that we sow. Both cannot grow together, for the evil is sure to rise above the good and choke it out; both cannot thrive together. We must keep a constant watch so as to keep down the evil weed. We must remove the roots, or the weeds will spring up and be as bad, or worse, than if we did not pluck them out at all.

We, who have experience in gardening, know that we must prepare the soil and get it in good order before we begin to sow the seed. So it is with us as members of the church; we must repent and become thoroughly regenerated before we are fit subjects for God's work. We must fight hard to keep down the obnoxious seed of pride, intemperance, covetousness, etc.

Looking at the parable of the sower who went forth to sow the seed, we see that some fell by the wayside, and the fowls of the air came and devoured them up. Others had not much earth and were scorched by the heat of the sun and soon burned out. Having no root, they withered away. Some fell among thorns, but was choked out.

If we let the soil get hard and do not prepare it before we sow the seed, it will lie broad-cast on the ground, to be destroyed by the enemy. The serpent was more subtile than any beast of the field, and so he is to-day. He is constantly at work, sowing tares among our seed, and it requires great care to keep our land in good cultivation, and to see that the seed may fall into well-prepared soil. We must use the implements of the Spirit, such as faith, patience, brotherly kindness, love, charity, energy. To keep everything in good growing order, we need showers of rain to revive our spiritual gardens. We must watch the obnoxious plants and nip all the weeds in the bud, and we shall have no trouble. We need the Spirit of God to renew our minds; we must pray and work, and when we are done with the work assigned us here, we shall reap our everlasting reward.

"IN order to turn all this weariness and languor to good account, so that it may advance the love of God in our hearts, it is needful to face it honestly, and to accept, and even love, the humiliation it brings. By so doing you will change the heavy, leaden weight which oppresses you, into gold, and that a finer gold, too, than anything you have known in your brightest hours. So, be patient with yourself."

STRANGE, STRANGE!

BY CYRUS BUCHER.

"Beloved, think it not strange concerning the fiery trial which is to try you, as though some strange thing happened unto you." 1 Pet. 4: 12.

A THING is strange that is not known or only partly known. And what may be, and is, strange to one person is very well known to another. The man who first sees a steam engine would not know (if he were not instructed beforehand of its use) whether it were best to run away from it or not. Another man who knows the engine and every separate part of it, makes it do its work to the good of society, while in the hands of a novice it might bring destruction in place of doing service. For this reason those that run engines study their parts, and by doing so become competent workmen, while, if they do careless work, they "must be ashamed" and deserve censure.

Just so it is with the Christian. If we think it strange, because the trials of life beset us on every hand, we have not yet been instructed in this Christian art by our Teacher. Being ignorant of the uses and benefits of these trials, we cannot make them serve us to our salvation, and we must often take the apostle's advice, when he speaks of hope,—we must with patience wait for the good it will work in us, and take the advice of the little Scotch girl, who, when asked what patience was, replied, "To wait a wee and dinna weary." The apostle Peter wants to comfort us when he says in 1 Pet. 4, "But rejoice, inasmuch as ye are partakers of Christ's sufferings, that when his glory shall be revealed, ye may be glad also with exceeding joy."

Brethren, we know the sufferings of Christ. Can we, too, suffer and in hope look forward to the glory that shall be revealed? We need encouragement in life, but to kill selfishness and make us humble in the sight of God, and fit us for the Master's use, I believe it is better for us to have trials, the refining work of the Good Master, to purify us, to cleanse us from the pollutions and evils of this present world.

These trials come in different forms, and while the devil tempts one with a fine horse or farm, he comes to another with an article of outward adorning, or a flattering tongue. As it is the little pebble and not the big rock that causes the horse to fall, so often these little things are held out as baits to try us, and, by degrees to lead us to do great wrongs which, at first, we would shrink to think of.

Sickness, poverty, family trials and troubles, neighborhood and church troubles,—these seem to be the fate of all to a greater or less degree, and if all these things can be wisely applied, we will receive benefit. This often brings to mind the words of the poet:

"God moves in a mysterious way,
His wonders to perform;
He plants his foot-steps in the sea
And rides upon the storm.

Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take,
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and shall break
In blessings on your head."

How, then, can we make these trials serve us? They are like malignant, contagious diseases,—always most acute when they attack us. No suffering, when present, seems joyous, but it brings pain. No chastening seems joyous, but, brethren, it is profitable, and in our worldly matters we count not the tired limbs, the weary mind and body, but the profit. Our suffering here below is only for a few days. After awhile we may be partakers of this holiness. This is time,—that is eternity. This is a part of duration,—that is duration itself. According to the words and life of Christ, and all the apostles and holy men of God, their very lives condemned sin in others, causing enmity between right and wrong.

While in this world the wrong sometimes overcomes right, or, at least, throws many obstacles in its way. This strife causes trials and sufferings and opposition to all that is good. For this cause Christ says, "Love your enemies." Do not be an enemy, not give cause for enmity, unless doing right makes enemies. Opposition aroused in that way, is no new thing. Christ, the apostles and the men of God in all ages had to contend with it. Even God himself has a powerful adversary in the form of the devil himself, opposing all good. Yet the time will come when "the Lord cometh with ten thousand of his saints, to execute judgment upon all, and to convince all that are ungodly among them of their ungodly deeds which they have ungodly committed, and of all their hard speeches which ungodly sinners have spoken against him." Jude 1: 14, 15. Then will the explanation be given, "What are these which are arrayed in white robes and whence came they? These are they which come out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb."

"O may I bear some humble part
In that immortal song!
Wonder and joy shall tune my heart,
And love command my tongue."

Do not, brethren and sisters, let us be strangers to these trials, but let us act as pilgrims on the journey heavenward. Let us shoulder our load and bear our cross! In doing this let us keep our own faults in front of us, and those of others behind, and the load will become easier because it will make us charitable, and "charity covereth a multitude of sins." It makes life less of a burden and the hope of the beyond more of a reality already in this life. When we come home, all these trials will be forgotten. Nothing but joy unspeakable will be ours.

"THE LIFE-GIVING WORD."

BY SOLOMON SCHUBERT.

My attention was attracted to the above words a short time ago, and while thinking of that Word and its life-giving power, these words came to mind: "I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth in me, though he were dead, yet shall he live." John 11: 25.

What a light! what a voice this is, breaking over this dark world of ours, which for six thousand years has been a dormitory of sin, sorrow and death! For four thousand years heathendom could see no light through the bars of the grave: her oracles were dumb on the great doctrine of a future state, and especially regarding the body's resurrection. Even the Jewish church, under the Old Testament dispensation, seemed to enjoy little more than fitful and uncertain glimmerings, like men groping in the dark. How dark, how uncertain must the condition of men have been without that light, without that comfort given in this "Word of Jesus!"

The human heart craves something better than this world can give. But for this light,—this lamp,—to guide our weary feet, we would have no place of refuge and comfort. When crosses and trials are to be borne, we can find a solace and a balm for every wound. If called upon to stand at the grave of one that is dear to us, or to bid farewell to one we love, the voice of Jesus whispers into our ear, "Weep not; lo, I am with you always," and "I go to prepare a place for you."

Happy thought,—"meet again never to part!" Yes, meet again in the "golden hereafter,"—"in that land where no farewell tear is shed," where loved ones are not "torn from our embrace," in the elysian land, where congregations never break up, where Sabbaths have no end."

Precious truth! This "word of Jesus" spans like a "celestial rainbow the entrance to the dark valley." He has robbed death of its sting, and the grave of its victory. Though trials come and bring with them crosses, hard to be borne, we know that Jesus says, "Only a little while" until time shall be merged into the great abyss of eternity. Let us take comfort, only a short time to bear trials here. Then "we shall go to him." Bereaved and afflicted ones,—you who may be mourning in bitterness,—rejoice through your tears in this hope full of immortality. In death the silver cord is only loosed, not broken. Perchance, as you stand in the chamber of death, in depths of that awful solitude and silence which reigns around, this may be your plaintive and mournful soliloquy, "Shall the dust praise thee?" Yes, it shall! This very dust that now lies unmoved by thy tears, shall, through eternity, praise its redeeming God. It shall proclaim his truth.

"LIMITATIONS are often deemed a hindrance, when they might be a help, to enjoyment and to power. Every man's life has its own peculiar and inevitable limitations. If he works cheerfully within them, he can be happy and successful. If he does not accept them, but chafes himself against them as the pining canary frets herself against the iron bars of her cage, he will be miserably unhappy, and will accomplish nothing. We may be hopelessly cut off from the very things we long for most. We may see the very avenue on which we had proposed to achieve splendid success, being closed before our eyes. We may not possess the iron constitution and physical strength, or the well-stocked and magnificent library, or the magnetic voice, or the abundant leisure, or the affluent imagination, or the influential connections, or the prestige of blood or wealth, which we are deeming so essential to our welfare; and yet, without them, and within our own peculiar limits, there are wonderful opportunities for doing great things with what we have, and there is wonderful happiness, after we have made up our minds not to cast covetous eyes on what it is not ours to possess, in using those powers which the Lord has placed at our disposal. Both success and happiness will crown our life if there be a cheerful acceptance of life's limits, and a faithful service within those limits."

"How much misery may be abated, how much suffering may be removed, by the simple tone and expression of the human voice! Upon the heart that is lone and desolate, how sweetly falls the voice of sympathy and consolation! Why is it, then, since everything proves, and none are ignorant of the fact, that all must lie down in mother earth together, since all are travelers in this highway to death—why is it that each should be so sparing of that which costs him nothing, but which might raise the drooping spirits of his neighbor, and cheer him on his journey—a few kind words and kindly looks?"

"IF we were to make our own choice at this moment, whether we should live or die, be sick or well, have poverty or abundance, be in public favor or in general disrepute, we might choose that which would be the worst thing possible for us, although it seemed the thing most to be desired. But if God were to choose for us, he would make no mistake. Which, then, is better,—to choose for ourselves, or to ask God to choose for us?"

HEROISM OF MODERN MISSIONS.

BY W. B. STOVER.

THE peaceful starry night that retreated before the advancing dawn of the nineteenth century, gave birth to the greatest hundred years the world has ever seen. Wonderful is written on every hand. Mechanics and inventions have made greater strides during these years than in all the history of the world before. The people, as individuals, have raised their literary lamps so high that the face of the earth glitters with their brilliant light. No longer, as in the days of our fathers, do a few men tower head and shoulders above the rest, for the people of to-day stand where yesterday stood the few.

This zeal has taken hold of the church. A spark has burst into a flame of religious enthusiasm. This is not the blind enthusiasm of the Crusades, but simple love mingled with a calm determination that Truth and the Author of Truth shall be more widely known.

The most successful church, and the most successful Christian of to-day is the one who has the cause of missions nearest his heart. God has ever been the missionary's fort, and men are finding it out. It is pleasure to work in any cause when the whole force of heaven is working with you. It is pleasure to labor when you may see glorious results as the fruit of your efforts. It is pleasure to know that the powers of the earth yield to the powers of the unseen world. These are facts that combine to call forth heroes in the age of modern missions.

The closed doors of the world are now open to the Gospel teacher. For thirty years Japan has had a warm heart for Western civilization and Western religion. The great wall about the Chinese kingdom is thrown down, and nearly four hundred millions of souls are now accessible for the missionary. Dr. Livingstone and Henry M. Stanley have made paths through the great dark continent from which the rays of light may penetrate farther into the jungles. Thirteen years ago in India sixty thousand people turned from idols to seek the Gospel light. South America and Mexico question the right of the Pope and his party to regulate the conscience of the people. The islands of the sea are raising up men and women to go abroad and live for the sake of more benighted souls. With a knowledge of the facts, and the least acquaintance with God, is it any wonder that men and women every-where are rising from the bended knee, and clamoring to join the royal band in pushing forth the mighty proclamation? These are modern heroines. These are modern heroes. And the history of their devoted lives is one continuous record of true heroism.

Men call Grant and Sherman, and Lee and Johnston, heroes of the battlefield, but how else can you speak of William Carey, Adoniram Judson Robert Morrison and Robert Moffat, than to call them greater heroes of greater fields? Carey in India, Judson in Burmah, Moffat in Africa with extreme apathy in their native lands, and antipathy in the lands of their adoption, under the most straitening circumstances they labored each seven years without seeing even the signs of Christian grace entering the heart of a man. To-day their memories are freighted with garlands.

What was it that induced John E. Clough, only a civil engineer, to lay down his work, and go to a mission field that the mission societies had voted to abandon?

What was it that induced Father Damien to exchange a pleasant home for a scanty life among a leprous community, there to become a leper, there to live a leper, there to die a leper?

What was it that induced Ann Haseltine to leave her father's home in Massachusetts to share the trials of a missionary's life under the scorching sun of a southern sky?

What was it that induced Fidelia Fisk and Mary Lyon to abandon the protected homes of their childhood, and go alone half way round the world, there to spend their years in elevating most degraded humanity?

Ah, 'twas courage, fearlessness of danger; 'twas fortitude, bearing up nobly under trials; 'twas gallantry, dashing into the thickest of the battle; 'twas love for humanity, overflowing the heart; 'twas a combination of all these this is what we choose to call missionary heroism.

When a good, grand worker falls in the field, his post is not deserted. A dozen rise up to fill the vacancy, and the work is pushed on more vigorously than before. Opportunities make men. Men make opportunities. These laborers come from Christian homes. From their infancy they knew only pious parents. They come from schools whose very atmosphere breathes religion into the soul. They come from circles of the utmost refinement and highest culture. They come from the humbler callings of life. They enroll from almost every avocation, and with hero hearts they come to stay. At the present time the missionary is the subject of much criticism. The columns of the great journals are open, and an occasional article finds its way there, attacking the missionary from every conceivable standpoint, but in the midst of it all that consecrated soul moves quietly on at his work. The effects of his labors are telling in a wondrous manner. The convert who lays aside his idols and idol worship, who finds light in the Book of books, who realizes there is a loving, Supreme Being, and that he has found him, counts not his change of faith child's play. He accepts the conditions of eternal life with all the consideration of any American. He comes resolved to yield his life ere he shall retrace his steps. His new religion is his gem of greatest price. Do you look upon Alexander the Great as a hero? Do you look upon Napoleon as a hero? Talk not to me of heroism. Look yonder, a few years ago, at a little church established in darkest Africa. A hot persecution arose against the believers. Fourteen at one time were led to the stake, and, amid the black smoke, arising from the burning fagots and towering high into the skies, could be heard only songs of joy and gladness issuing from the lips of those dying Christians, as they waited the approaching moment when their happy souls, free now forever, should take one grand flight toward the eternal throne!

Across the Mozambique channel, on the Island of Madagascar, witness, several years ago, a precipice 150 feet high, near the royal palace, where the simple converts captured were taken, and, after being entreated to recant and so save their lives, hurled over its awful edge, bounding from ledge to ledge until they were broken on the ragged rocks below, and sometimes singing as they fell!

Behold on the islands of the sea where fifty years ago the inhabitants devoured the inmates of the Gospel ship that dared to enter a harbor, now standing chapels here and there as memorials, in which these very men gather to worship the Father of all!

These are results of the labors of heroes, and all the world shall resound their names, and they shall live forever. Their heroism is contagious. It is a grand thing. The millions might be Christians to-day were every Christian heart aglow with the heroism of modern missions.

WHAT RELIGION ISN'T.

SELECTED BY A. J. SMITH.

IT isn't going to church to see what the people wear, or to find fault with the preacher.

It isn't running in debt for things you don't need, and never paying for them.

It isn't giving away a great deal of money publicly, simply that people may speak well of you.

It isn't staying away from church when you know a special collection is going to be taken.

It isn't leaving one church and joining another whenever you do not like the preacher.

It isn't reading so many chapters a day, or saying one prayer over and over.

It isn't sitting in the house and looking solemn, and refusing to eat anything cooked on Sunday.

It isn't putting all the big, sound apples on the top of the measure, and the little and rotten ones on the bottom.

It isn't telling other people what to do in prayer-meeting, and letting the devil tell you what to do in business matters.

It isn't whipping your boy for smoking while you have a cigar in your own mouth.

It isn't telling the servant to say, "Not at home."

Adrian, Ohio.

"A GENTLEMAN visited an unhappy man in jail awaiting his trial. 'Sir,' said the prisoner, 'I had a good home education. My street education ruined me. I used to slip out of the house and go off with the boys in the street. In the street I learned to lounge; in the street I learned to swear; in the street I learned to smoke; in the street I learned to gamble; in the street I learned to pilfer and to do all evil. O, sir, it is in the street that the devil lurks to work the ruin of the young.'"

"LIVE for something. Do good and leave behind you a monument of virtue that the storm of time can never destroy. Write your name in kindness, love and mercy on the hearts of thousands you come in contact with year by year: you will never be forgotten. No; your name, your deeds, will be as legible on the hearts you leave behind as the stars on the brow of evening."

Is the recognized organ of the German Baptist or Brethren's church. It advocates the form of doctrine taught in the New Testament and practiced by the Christians of primitive Christianity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and urges a strict faith toward God, Repentance from dead works, Baptism, the laying on of hands, and the doctrine of the resurrection and the future judgment.

It believes in the ordinance of Feetwashing, as taught in John 13, both by example and command of Jesus, should be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper, instituted by Christ and as universally observed by the apostles and the early Christians, is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening or after the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ.

That Non-Conformity to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ

That the principle of Plain Dressing and Non conformity to the world as taught in the New Testament, should be observed by the followers of Christ.

That the Scriptural duty of Anointing the Sick with Oil, in the Name of the Lord, James 5:14, is binding upon all Christians.

That it is also the church's duty to support Missionary and Tract Work, and giving to the Lord for the spread of the Gospel and for the support of the ministry.

In short, it is dedicated to all to all to Christ and the apostles have taught, and aims, aside from conflicting theories and discords of so-called Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe.

Mount Morris, Ill., - - - - June 30, 1891

BRO. C. H. BROWN, of the Colby church, Kans., has been ordained to the eldership.

BRO. J. G. ROYER is holding a series of meetings at Waterloo, Iowa. He expects to remain over two Sundays.

BRO. E. S. YOUNG filled the appointment in Chicago, June 21. He reports a good congregation.

WE learn that Eld. Abraham Shepler, of Peabody, Kans., is very ill, and it is feared that his days in this world are well-nigh numbered.

OUR readers will find the "Gospel Chimes" an excellent book for use in Sunday-school. We have just printed a new edition and can supply them in large or small quantities. For price see notice on last page.

BRO. D. E. BRUBAKER reports a good opening and encouraging prospects in the parts of Wisconsin where he has been preaching. See his report on another page of this issue.

IT is estimated that 2,000 persons attended the love-feast at the White Oak church, Pa., June 11 and 12. Some were also baptized at the time.

BRO. STEPHEN YODER, one of our ministers at Harlan, Iowa, has just located at Holmesville, Gage County, Nebr. We hope he may prove useful in his new field of labor.

COMMUNITIES or congregations desiring a competent teacher to instruct classes in vocal church and Sunday-school music, might do well to correspond with Bro. J. H. Hall, Harrisonburg, Va.

BRO. J. C. STUCKEY, of Smithville, Wayne Co., Ohio, writes that their Sunday-school is moving along nicely. It certainly must be a good-sized school, for he sends in an order for 200 Brethren's Quarterlies.

A NUMBER of orders are coming in for our Juvenile Quarterly. We hope the work will give satisfaction. We, however, wish to assure our readers that we will improve the lessons from time to time, so as to make them first-class in every respect.

IN our Annual Meeting news it seems that we were mistaken in saying that Bro. J. G. Royer presided over the Educational Meeting. We should have said Bro. S. Z. Sharp, who has acted as President of the Educational Meetings for some years. The Brethren must have a little patience with us. We will soon get the run of all these things, and know just where to place each man in our reports.

WE recently attended a love-feast, where two sisters officiated in prayer at the close of self-examination services. It made a good impression on all present, and seemed to impart an additional sacredness to the occasion. Oh, for more praying sisters in our religious gatherings! We cannot afford to do without their prayers, and we hope they will often be called on to officiate at the altar of prayer.

THE Silver Creek feast, three miles north of Mt. Morris, occurred June 17 and 18. It was very largely attended and a real pleasant meeting. Just after the self-examination services, one brother was received into the church by confession and baptism. He is one of the business men of Mt. Morris, and we trust that the new duties now resting upon him, will prove pleasant to both himself and the church. Eld. J. C. Lahman officiated in the evening, much to the edification of the members. The order was also good.

SOME TIME ago one of our readers made inquiry for a book treating the subject of prayer, especially the form of prayer. J. H. Garrison's neat little book, entitled "Alone with God," is the best work we have yet seen on that subject. It contains well-written chapters on "The Silent Hour," "The Soul's Desire for God," "The Tender Shepherd," "The Benefits of Prayer," "The Model Prayer," etc., etc., followed by remarks on various Christian duties, together with more than one hundred forms of prayer, table thanksgivings, etc. We do not believe in following written forms of prayer, but by the study of these forms, our minds may often be led out in the right direction so as to greatly improve the gift of prayer. It is a book that we like to recommend to all those who feel the need of cultivating a feeling for prayer. Price, 75 cents.

SOME one has asked whether Bro. J. S. Mohler's poems are original. Certainly they are. Anything appearing over his name may be considered original. We have a poem from him on the hook now. It will appear shortly.

A CONSTANT pressure of work since we have come into the office, has prevented us from giving proper attention to the Querist Department. We shall soon have our work so shaped as to permit us to give this department all needed attention.

BRO. D. L. MILLER returned from the Nettle Creek church, Ind., June 20. He was one of the elders sent by Annual Meeting to look after the interest of that church. All of the Committee were present but Bro. R. H. Miller. Those present, however, proceeded with the work, and succeeded in rendering general satisfaction to all parties in the church, for which the Lord be praised. The next day after his return, Bro. Miller preached twice at Pine Creek. He will be with us over next Sunday yet, and then will start on his Eastern trip.

CONGREGATIONS that have not already done so, ought to arrange for meetings on the 4th of July. That is a glorious day for a liberty-loving people, and we certainly ought, on that day, to earnestly thank God that we are permitted to live in this land of freedom, where we are not only permitted to worship God according to his Word, but are protected in the exercise of this right. Worldly celebrations are becoming so devoid of all that becometh Christians that we cannot consistently meet with those who have them in charge, in their worldly amusement, hence we should have a place for our people to go, in order that they may have a good reason to absent themselves from the popular celebrations of the day.

Too late to be inserted among the gleanings this week, we received the following from sister Susie Nelsen, Reece, Kansas, and give it place here: "Bro. P. R. Wrightsman came to us May 15 and remained with us eleven days. He wielded the Sword of the Spirit with energy, to the encouragement of the saints, and the warning of sinners. Eight precious souls were made willing to forsake the world and to walk with the people of God. Five of them were over fifty years of age. May the Lord help them to be faithful! Six were baptized while Bro. Wrightsman was with us and two a few days afterwards. We desire the prayers of all the dear brethren and sisters upon the little band of members!"

THE Brethren's Quarterly for July, August and September is now being mailed. It goes into hundreds of Sunday-schools, and is doing an excellent work. The present number will be found exceedingly interesting, largely on account of the arrangement of the lessons, which are selected from the New Testament. They start in with the "Word Made Flesh," and close at the end of the quarter with "Christ the Good Shepherd." Our Sunday-school workers will please bear in mind that these lessons are prepared by Brethren, and are not only in harmony with our faith and practice, but they will be found a great help in studying the lessons. Of course they must be used in connection with the Bible. The Juvenile Quarterly is now out for the third quarter, and will be promptly mailed to those who have ordered it. It will be found adapted to the wants of the children, and is so arranged that all the questions, concerning the lessons, may be answered in Bible language. We hope it will find its way into all of our schools. Price: 6 copies, per quarter, 25 cents; 10 copies and over, 3 cents each.

SUBSCRIBE NOW.

Now is the time for all of our agents to renew their efforts to enlarge our circulation. Bro. Miller's letters from the Old World will prove exceedingly interesting and profitable reading, as he contemplates traveling over a portion of the Bible Lands, not before visited by him. Thousands of our readers have never read anything concerning these Lands, and it will be a treat for them to follow Bro. Miller's articles.

His visit among the seven churches of Asia; his travels among the Pyramids of Egypt, and his climbing to the top of the lofty Mount of Sinai, to stand, if possible, on the very spot where Moses stood when he received the Law from the hand of God, will enable him to give an account of circumstances and scenery, that will be soul-inspiring to every person in any manner interested in the study of the Bible. He leaves here early in July, and will sail sometime in August, so that his first letter will appear the last of August. The price of the MESSENGER, from the time these letters commence, to the end of the year is 50 cents; or to the beginning of 1893, $1.75.

With a little effort upon the part of our agents, our list may be greatly increased. If possible get the paper into every family where there are members. Thousands of those not members would like to have the paper if they were informed concerning these letters. Show Bro. Miller's letter in last issue to your neighbors, and ask them to take the paper.

THE MISSIONARY COMMITTEE.

LAST week we promised to say something concerning the quarterly meeting held by the Brethren's Missionary Committee the week before. There were present, of the Committee, Daniel Vaniman, D. L. Miller, Samuel Riddlesberger, John Price, Jacob Miller and Galen B. Royer, Secretary. There were also a number of others present, who were kindly invited to take part in the deliberations.

The meeting was opened with singing and prayer, then the Committee proceeded to work in a business way, discussing and examining every subject with great care. All calls for aid in the building of meeting-houses, or for any other purpose, are carefully investigated before anything is appropriated.

We were more particularly interested with their manner of deciding on the men who are to be placed in the mission field. They discuss their fitness and record most thoroughly, and our readers have no idea what a perplexing task it is to select the right kind of men for these fields. For instance, they may find a man who is sound in the faith, with good ability, and yet financial misfortune may have caused him to lose his influence among the people. He may be so cramped financially that he cannot meet his obligations, and thereby becomes crippled as a missionary. Then there may be another man, who is a good, interesting preacher, and would, perhaps, do good work as a minister, but it is found that he is given to levity, and even joking with the people before and after meeting. He must be refused, for it will never do to put that kind of a man on the mission field. Another man is found well qualified as a minister, even in full sympathy with the church in all her doctrine, but he is very careless about his personal appearance, so much so that he would make a bad impression in a neighborhood of strangers. He may do well enough at home where he is known, but he will not answer to send out into the world. Still another man might do to put in the field, but he is said to be just a little lazy, will not work if he can get out of it. Of course the Committee cannot afford to spend money on a man who will not work.

We mention these things to show that the Committee has no small task on hand in selecting men to enter the field as workers. We also wish, thereby, to call the attention of all our ministers to themselves. If possible, let each minister take a fair and an impartial look at himself, and see himself as others see him. It will do any man good to thus examine his own fitness for the work to which he has been called.

The Board needs men, and has plenty of places to put them. One of the brethren exclaimed, "Oh, if we only had about thirty good men, what a grand work we might do!" Good, reliable men are wanted, but they must be workers, who know how to preach the pure Gospel, and conduct themselves as becometh ministers of the Gospel. They ought to be men who never flinch in times of danger; men who will not become discouraged; men who have a great deal of patience and yet plenty of push; men who can work themselves into the favor of the people and accommodate themselves to their surroundings. They ought to be hard-working men, who study their work as well as their Bibles, and have their whole soul in the work assigned them; and above all, they should be an example to the flock in all things that go to make up a truly consecrated Christian. We have many of such men in the ministry, but they cannot be spared from their present fields of labor. We want more consecrated ministers, who are willing to dedicate themselves wholly to the work of the Lord. The harvest is great, but the laborers are few. We trust that these remarks will put every minister among us to thinking, and result in bringing forward men fully qualified and equipped for hard work in the Master's vineyard.

Considerable business was before the Committee, but all of it was disposed of in a prudent manner. There was no haste in any of the proceedings. The work of the Committee is growing more important each year, and is likely to enlarge as our people become more thoroughly interested in missionary work. The Board adjourned to meet in Mt. Morris next October. J. H. M.

PRIVATE FEASTS.

ON another page, under the head of "Private Communions," will be found an interesting article by Bro. B. C. Moomaw. It treats a subject that we have given a good deal of thought, and we embrace the present opportunity, in connection with what he has written, to state that it is a matter deserving more than ordinary attention.

It is true, that the first feast, held in Jerusalem by Christ and the apostles was private, but the one held at Troas was public to some extent, at least, for a young man, evidently not a member, sitting in the window, went to sleep and fell out onto the ground. This young man was not a member, and yet he was permitted to be present, showing that it is at least not wrong for those, not members, to be present on these sacred occasions. And while we believe that all of our services,—such as Communion, baptism and anointing,—may very properly be open for the public to witness, still we think there may be times and places where they would perhaps answer their purposes better if held more privately, especially is this true concerning love-feasts. Whenever the public becomes so very unruly as to render it impossible to hold these feasts publicly, in a becoming manner, then it is time to consider the propriety of holding them privately.

Since coming North we have attended a number of feasts, and at none of them did we observe any misconduct, nor anything to disturb the solemnity of the occasion. We think that much depends upon our ability to handle the people and keep them in proper order. There are various ways to do this, and those having the service in charge need to give that part special attention.

We saw that very nicely managed at the Silver Creek feast a few days ago. The meeting commenced at 2 P. M. Self-examination closed at 4 o'clock, and promptly at 6 o'clock the members, about two hundred, were seated at the tables. The elder officiating saw that no unnecessary time was lost, and had everything to move along in order. By 8 o'clock the services were concluded. It was just then getting dark,—too early for the noisy ones to reach the place, for they generally prefer to do their work in the dark. Most of our feasts commence too late. Running them far into the night, renders it very difficult to keep order. Then, at some places, the spectators are permitted to crowd in among the tables too much. By all means they ought to be kept to their places.

Everything possible should be done to maintain the best of order, and make the services as impressive as possible. It is an occasion of great solemnity, and should be to the edification of all the members especially. In fact this should be the main design of the feast. It is for the members, and should be conducted solely for their interest.

While we believe in permitting the public to observe our practice, still we do not believe in practicing the ordinance for that purpose. Our object should be neither to please nor to attract the public, but to please God. If, however, the noisy public greatly disturbs the solemnity of the occasion, so as to render the feast unsatisfactory to the spiritually minded, then it may be proper to seek more private ways of holding these feasts.

We never derive any good from participating in the ordinance where there is so much noise as to render it inconvenient to conduct the service. To merely pass through the form is by no means pleasing to God. We must feel and fully realize the good there is in them, and the purposes for which they were intended, in order to receive a proper blessing. And when the public so greatly disturbs us as to deprive us of the blessing connected with the ordinance, we think it is time to seek a remedy. How to do this and yet not deprive our children of the good lessons resulting therefrom, is a problem for some one to solve.

YOUNG CONVERTS.

WINTER, the harvest season of the churches, is now far past. Hundreds of converts have been gathered into the fold, and we say our strength has greatly increased. That depends largely upon what we are doing for these converts. Much depends upon how we are training them. They are yet babes in Christ, and need the sincere milk of the Word. It may be that some of them are being fed on strong meat, while others are entertained with doubtful disputations. Babes need special care in the church as well as in the family. It may require years of patient toil and culture to make strong men and women of them. This duty has been assumed by the church in general, and the officers in particular. They are to feed the lambs as well as the sheep, and watch over their souls with all sincerity, patience and firmness. The weaker the babe the more attention is required. The more it is inclined to stray from the house of the Lord, the more need it has of the watchful eyes of those who count themselves faithful to their trust. For the want of proper care thousands of these lambs of the flock have perished. The loss has been indeed a great one, not alone to the lambs themselves, but also to the cause of Christianity. It is lamentable to see the tender branches torn from the vine that gives them both life and food.

Are we doing what we can to encourage and strengthen these new converts? Is the overseer of the flock looking after their souls? Is he careful concerning the character of spiritual food that is being dealt out to them? Are all the ministers and deacons watching over these tender plants for good?

After all is said and done, are these new converts of any benefit to the church? They have aided in increasing the membership, but have they in any manner added to the moral strength of the church? Are they workers in the great Christian hive, or are they merely nominal passengers on the old ship of Zion? These are important considerations. Then, on the other hand, is the church benefiting the converts? Can we notice any perceptible change in them, in their conversation, conduct and general deportment? If not, then whose fault is it? Do we say it is the fault of the converts? May we not ask, whether we are not also to blame? One says, I am not your brother's keeper. That is what the priest and Levite thought when they passed by the unfortunate man, leaving him to the care of the good Samaritan. That is what thousands have concluded, and will not find out any better until in the judgment they are told: "Inasmuch as ye did it not to one of the least of these, ye did it not to me." Was not Christ his brother's keeper? If faithful, we are his brethren. He died for us. Can we not do something for others? It is certainly our duty to help these converts, and God will hold us responsible for neglecting a plain duty and privilege like this.

We claim that it is the duty of every member to aid new and young converts in any manner that is reasonable. Finding fault with them is the privilege of no one. If they fall, help them up. If they make mistakes, remember that is the unfortunate lot of all of us. Let those who see these mistakes aid in having them corrected. In short, let us take a special interest in the lambs of the flock, knowing that they are the Lord's, and we are his servants, whose duty it is to help look after every department in the household of faith.

RUSSIAN JEWS.

In reply to one of our correspondents, we beg to state, that we know of no Jewish paper interested in the return of the Jews to their native land. Even the wealthy Jews, who are spending millions of dollars to find homes for the persecuted Jews of Russia, are trying to colonize them principally in America. Perhaps the time has not yet come for this down-trodden race to return to the land of their fathers. It is, however, interesting to watch the rapid developments that are going on in the East. It all means something, and for aught we know, may be the ushering in of a period full of startling consequences. The reading public is so thoroughly interested concerning these developments, that every important movement is observed with intense interest.

Since penning the above we notice that the Rothschilds, and all the leading Jews of England have presented a memorial to Lord Salisbury, asking that the powers unite in an effort to settle the persecuted Jews of Russia in the land of Palestine. They claim this to be the only solution of the Jewish problem. This means much, and may possibly result in restoring the Holy Land to the Jews again. At present there are not over 300,000 Jews in Palestine, perhaps not that many. In Europe there are, however, 5,000,000 of them, while nearly 500,000 are in the United States. Taking it the world over they number about 7,000,000. Many of them, however, are very poor, and yet among them are some of the most wealthy men in the world.

Right in connection with this comes the following, as reported by the Christian Standard: "A member of the Russian legation in London declares that no new law respecting the Jews in Russia has been proclaimed, but that the present trouble grows out of the enforcement of an old law, which fixed the residence of Jews, with certain exceptions, within a certain Pale. He says there is room there for all the Jews, as the Pale is larger than France or Germany, and that all Jews dwelling outside of it, in violation of the law, knew that they were taking the responsibility into their own hands. Moreover, those outside their limits have the option of going back to the Pale or leaving the country; and if they choose the latter, they are allowed to go without paying the emigration tax of 100 roubles, required of others. If these things are true, they somewhat abate the injustice of the matter, but it still stands as an enormous piece of folly and barbarism."

JOSEPH COOK ON SECRET SOCIETIES.

In an address of Joseph Cook to the Christian Conference, April, 1890, are the following well-made points against secret societies; they are well worth preserving:

"Of all I wish to say of secret societies, this is the sum: Secret oaths—

"1. Can be shown historically to have often led to crime.

"2. Are natural sources of jealousy and just alarm to society at large.

"3. Are especially unfavorable to harmony and mutual confidence among men living together under popular institutions.

"4. Are dangerous to the general cause of civil liberty and just government.

"5. Are condemned by the severe denunciations of many of the wisest statesmen, preachers, and reformers.

"6. Are opposed to Christian principles, especially those implied in these three texts:

"'In secret have I said nothing.'

"'Be not unequally yoked together with unbelievers.'

"'Give no offense in anything, that the ministry be not blamed.'

"7. Are forbidden in some portions of our Republic by the civil law, and ought to be in all portions. Many European governments hold Freemasonry under grave suspicion as a mask for conspiracies against throne and altar. In Prussia, Poland, Russia, and Spain, Freemasonry is prohibited by law

"8. Are forbidden to church members by some Christian denominations, and ought to be by all."

THE TENDENCY.

Certainly, we are not alone in contending that the tendency of popular amusements is to lead the young away from Christian simplicity. Many of the more consecrated have seen it for years, and see it more clearly now. The following, which we clip from one of our exchanges, is to the point:

"Conformity to the world is not forbidden solely on the ground of its dangers and follies. Even though they were all innocent, no one could engage in the full round of social engagements and obligations, and at the same time present the body a living, holy sacrifice in the reasonable service of God. There are social delights in plenty that are perfectly consistent, and cooperate with this Christian service, but they are not those of what is known as 'society.' Every young church-member ought to be taught that to be an active, efficient servant of Christ, useful and effective in building up his church, and at the same time to be conformed to the world of fashionable society, is an impossibility. We cannot serve two masters. If ye love the world and the things of the world, the love of the Father is not in you."

THE GREAT WORK.

"According to the latest and most reliable statistics, there are about two hundred millions Mohammedans in the world. Of these, there are about 6,000,000 in Europe, chiefly in Turkey and Russia. Of the 60,000,000 in Africa, about one-third are in Egypt and along the Mediterranean, while the bulk of the remainder are in the desert countries and the equatorial regions. Of the 135,000,000 in Asia, India has 50,000,000, China 30,000,000, Turkey upwards of 20,000,000, and the rest are scattered far and wide. It is instructive to note that the list from which these figures are taken shows that the Islam numbers are largest in those countries which are the most stagnant and degraded."

It is with this strong body that the Christian church is yet to have a mighty struggle. Six millions of people who adhere closely to their religious faith, are not to be overcome without a desperate conflict. Here is a mighty work for the Christian world to undertake. Talk about missionary work in modern times! It has just fairly commenced.

"In the Prussian Royal family it has been the custom for many years to baptize the new-born princes and princesses in water from the river Jordan. Such was done recently in the case of the Emperor's sixth son, who received the name of Joachim Franz Humbert, the first being a historic name in the Hohenzollern family, the second and third being taken from the Emperor of Austria and the King of Italy, the sponsors of the child. A goodly supply of Jordan water is always kept on hand in the apothecary shop in connection with the castle in Berlin." This shows how much superstition may be found even among the upper and better educated classes. Naaman thought the water of Damascus better than all the waters of Israel, but now this Royal family is led to conclude that the water of Jordan is better than all the waters of the world. What stupidity and superstition!

In the early part of the present century the Bible could be read by only one-fifth of the inhabitants of the globe, but now it is translated into nine-tenths of the languages of the people. Surely, the Word of God is being brought within the comprehension of all nations.

In a letter just received from J. I. Miller, of Keuka, Florida, we have the following: "Our Sunday-school is progressing nicely; attendance and interest are good. The members are all in peace and union, as far as I know, and we have a very quiet and peaceable time with our little flock."

Christ brought to the earth the Gospel of peace, which discourages war on every hand, and will ultimately put an end to it. It would now seem that the inventions of war bid fair to become an important factor in the abolishing of war itself. Dr. R. F. Gatling, the inventor of the gatling gun, says that the limit of efficiency has not been reached in appliances for killing men in war. He thinks electricity may yet be used to mow down whole armies at once. Then men will not be induced to go to war, knowing the certainty of meeting death.

Those who think it proper for Christians to attend places of worldly amusement, may do well to digest the following clipping from one of the Chicago Dailies:

The apology and explanation made by a morning newspaper regarding the light attendance at the first of the Thomas concerts appears ample and satisfactory. Though it was well known that on Monday night a prize-fight was to occur at Battery D, the concert managers went right ahead with their programme and had to suffer the consequences.

If concerts must depend, for patronage, on those who keep up the prize-fights, then what business have Christians at these contests! "Evil communications corrupt good manners," as well as good morals.

We do not like to say it, but it is a fact that a "cross" between the church and the world is the most unfortunate of creatures; neither cold nor hot; of no good to the church and but little to the world; just as near a cipher in the world as it is possible to be. Wants to dress like the world, and hangs just enough worldly nonsense on the Christian's garb to spoil it, and yet not fashionable enough to show good taste. If those who do such things could stand off and take a good look at themselves they would certainly resolve to either adorn themselves as becometh people professing godliness, or else humbly bow to Madam Fashion, and enjoy her applause in this world, and share her torments in that to come.

While at the late Annual Meeting, we had the pleasure of meeting Bro. C. H. Balsbaugh, but very much regret that we were not permitted to spend more time with him. We had planned for a good long talk with him, but in that vast throng of people we met him once only. One day, while waiting for the Standing Committee, he spoke to the assembly about fifteen minutes, but we were absent at the time. In appearance, Bro. Balsbaugh is a man of poor health, but temperate habits; tall, rather slim, and looks as though the razor had never been on his face. His very heavy black hair is parted on the top of his head, and extends in little waves nearly to his shoulders. He dresses plainly, neatly and fully in the order of the church. His deportment is quite modest, and he seems to have spent his entire life in quiet study. Many were glad to meet and greet him at the meeting, but he was necessarily confined to his room, part of the time, on account of ill health. His article in this issue will be read with interest.

Sometime ago some one put this question to the editor of the Christian Standard: "Is it still right for Christians to pray, 'Thy kingdom come?'" Here is the editor's brief but sensible answer: "The everlasting kingdom of Christ into which the faithful are to have an abundant entrance, is in the future. There does not seem to be any good reason for refusing to pray for its coming, if we understand what we are praying for. The belief that we are now in the kingdom, or church of Christ, need not prevent such a prayer. We look for a kingdom everlasting, into which flesh and blood shall not enter."

The Fatal Fire.

The following was clipped from a Meyersdale, Pa., paper and sent us for publication. The building referred to was situated a few miles north of Meyersdale, in Summit Township. The narrative will bring sadness to many hearts on account of the burning of the children.—Ed.

"The country residence of Samuel P. Meyers, located in Smmmit, a few miles north of town, was with its contents, totally destroyed by fire at 9: 30 P. M. Thursday, June 4, and two of his daughters, Missouri and Clara, were burned to death.

"At 9: 30 Thursday evening last, a dull red glare in the northern sky, changing rapidly to a brighter crimson and spreading over an ever-increasing expanse of the arch, told Meyersdale the fire fiend was loosed. Hundreds flocked to High street with the hope of locating it, in which they failed. Many others, perhaps fifty or more, rushed along the railroad and, after passing through the Gnagy cut, saw that it was the residence of Mr. S. P. Meyers.

"The house in question was originally a large log structure, but had been modernized by its owner. The family consisted of Mr. and Mrs. S. P. Meyers, their four daughters—ages ranging from 9 to 14 years -Mr. Meyers' mother, Mrs. Peter C. Meyers, his grandfather, Mr. Samuel Lichty, Miss Amanda Boyer, Charles Butler, Paul Werner and Will Countryman, employees, in all twelve persons. People in the country who work hard all day in the open air generally retire early and this was the case at the fated homestead. Just before retiring Mr. Meyers stepped to the kitchen (where the fire started) to light his pipe, but there was no fire in the stove and he had to use a match. That sets at rest the idea that fire from the stove started the conflagration. Chas. Butler had not yet fallen asleep when he heard the crackling flames. He leaped out of bed, roused his companions and endeavored to escape by the stairway but was driven back by the smoke and flames. By this time the room beneath them was a hell of raging fire and the young men, one a mere lad, dropped to the ground from their second story window. After they were outside he heard the two girls scream for help in a half-smothered tone.

"Meanwhile the sleeping household down stairs were rudely awakened by the roaring of the fire. Miss Boyer assisted Mrs. Peter C. Meyers to a place of safety. Mrs. Meyers rushed to the room of her two daughters, while her husband hastened to bear from his room his blind grandfather, Mr. Lichty, now in his 91st year. Here he first discovered that Missouri and Clara were yet in their room. He frantically rushed into the house, endeavored to reach the stairway, but blinded, bruised and burned he was driven back and on his hands and knees fought his way to open air, powerless to help his darlings, back to his agonized wife, weeping children and heart-broken relatives. The work of the fire was rapid in its destruction, and before 10 o'clock only the log structure remained, and it fell log by log as fire wormed away each support. The mourning family were taken to the home of Mr. and Mrs. John D. Gnagy, except Mr. Meyers who refused to leave the ruins and the ashes of his little children. Kind friends and neighbors crowded the grounds from every direction; the Meyersdale boys at once addressed themselves to saving from destruction the only building that had not yet gone down and in this they were successful. Frank Collins took Mr. Lichty in his buggy to Mr. Gnagy's, and all vied with one another to give practical aid and assistance to the full extent of their powers.

"Not till morning was the sad story told at the hearthstones in Meyersdale. There was genuine sympathy for the bereaved parents, and all mourned with them for the great, the sudden loss of two loved ones of the home flock. Human sympathy is powerless to help at such a time, but if it could, the sorrows of the stricken would soon be healed. The charred and blackened remains were laid to rest on Saturday forenoon in the family burying ground.

"Mr. Meyers was badly burned on head, neck and shoulders while endeavoring to reach his daughters."

Notes From Northern Wisconsin Mission Field.

On the evening of June 6, the brethren, sisters and kind neighbors, met in the large school-house, six miles south-east of Edson, to begin a series of meetings. The attendance was large from the first to the close. Several times there was not sufficient room to accommodate all with seats, for which we felt very sorry.

The Holy Spirit was with us, and in his gentle, wooing power made impressions which seemed to deepen as the meetings progressed.

On Sunday, June 14, the last day of our meeting, one precious soul accepted Christ, and was received into Christian fellowship, causing much rejoicing. A number of others, we think, were very near the kingdom, but allowed the trivial excuses of a carnal nature to hinder their entrance. O, may God help them to come soon, and delay not!

While in this new mission field, I became more favorably impressed than ever before, with the power for good, of our Tract Work.

A number of the dear Christian workers here make it a common practice to place our tracts in the hands of persons not acquainted with our faith and practice. The result is that many have become quite familiar with, and receive kindly, the self-denying principles of the Gospel, as taught and practiced by our church. It did my heart good to fellowship disciples at this meeting who only a little over a year ago never so much as heard of us as a church. The dear Gospel Messenger is also doing a strong, sure work in this "out-of-the-way" place to lead souls to Christ. The matter of establishing a large church in this new territory is bound to meet with success, if all her members will fully consecrate themselves to the Lord's work, which they seem fully determined to do.

The Brethren at Edson have a very fine country. In fact I was much surprised at the inducements it offers for those seeking good homes.

Wayside Gleanings.

SINCE our last "Gleanings" one more has been added to the Kaskaskia church by baptism,—this time our eldest daughter of some fourteen summers. May God have all the praise! We met in church council, as per arrangement, May 16, at 2 P. M. By 4 P. M. all the business that came before the meeting was pleasantly attended to, and we were on our way homeward, feeling that it was good to be there. I, for one, can see no use in spending an entire day to accomplish a few hours' work.

Bro. Isaac Evans is in rather delicate health at this time, and Bro. Robert Wilkison who came here with his sons, from Schuyler Co., Ill., is very low. As he is past four score years of age, he seems near the mystical river of death. He seems resigned to the will of his Master.

Our Sunday-school is doing grandly, with Bro. Marion Evans as Superintendent, W. W. Mansfield, Assistant. So far we have had the valuable aid of most of the parents. Don't say to your children "go" but say, "Come.

GRANVILLE NEVINGER.

Wayside Notes.

I CLOSED my last with a statement that I expected to do some missionary work for the Central District of Missouri.

On the morning of May 1, I started for Middletown, Montgomery Co., Mo. From Loraine I went to Quincy. There I had to change cars for my next point, Louisiana, Mo. Another change of cars was necessary to take me to Mexico, and still another change to take me to Wellsville, where I took the stage route, a distance of eleven miles to Middletown, where I was still three miles from the place of meeting. (I mention the above tedious route to show the propriety of first considering the route before sending ministers out to do mission work at the expense of the Mission funds. The above trip and return cost over $11, when a few cents over $6 would have paid the passage over a much shorter route, and less than a day will complete the trip.)

At Middletown I was met by Bro. Thomas Walker, who conveyed me to his home. Owing to muddy roads we failed to reach the appointed place in time for the meeting on Saturday night, May 2.

On Sunday morning, May 3, I met the brethren and sisters at the Methodist meeting-house on West Prairie, where I preached to a fair congregation at 11 A. M.

At 2 P. M. the Methodist friends, and others, had their prayer-meeting, and at three o'clock they were to have preaching by the Methodist minister. He [illegible] and I endeavored to preach to the Methodist [illegible] 30 P. M. was our appointment when I again addressed the audience. At the close of the services I [illegible] for baptism. when one dear soul presented herself. Bro. C. H. [illegible] ting

The next day we met at the house of [illegible] Melson and had a very pleasant and [illegible] meeting, after which we went to the water and there buried the dear sister in baptism, in the presence of many witnesses. May God help her and keep her and at last take her home to rest! On Monday evening I again preached to a well-filled house, after which I returned home to my family.

May 10 I was permitted to preach at home in Loraine, where I had preached but two or three times since last September, having been out in the mission field most of my time.

On the evening of May 16, I met with the brethren and friends at the appointed place in Hancock Co., Ill., under the direction of the Mission Board of the Southern District of Illinois. There I preached three sermons to large and attentive congregations.

On Saturday, May 23, I met with the brethren and sisters in the Hadley Creek church, Pike Co., Ill., in council. There was nearly a full attendance of members. They appointed their Communion meeting for Aug. 22, commencing at 10 A. M., at which time they specially invite the brethren and sisters to come and visit them. I preached three discourses for them.

On Friday, May 29, I again went to Middletown Mo., to comply with previous arrangements of the Missionary Committee. At this place Bro. David Bowman, of Glensted, Mo., had been doing some preaching for two or three years, and baptized about fourteen members. All seem to be zealous in the cause of their Master, but are much in need of regular preaching. Here are the best prospects for building up a new organization that I know of. Brethren, go and preach for them!

I preached for them on Saturday night and Sunday morning, the house being well filled. When the time had come for the evening services, a threatening wind and rain storm came up, and those who were on the way to the church stopped, and others did not go. The next day I did some business under the instruction of Bro. D. Bowman and then started on my way home. I made arrangements to do some preaching at New Hartford, Friday and Monday evening, on my way to and from Middletown.

On Friday, June 5, wife and I started to the Mill Creek church, Liberty, Adams Co., Ill., a distance of twenty-five miles to attend council at that place the next day. June 6, being a very rainy day, and there not being a full representation, and some matters of considerable importance pending, we adjourned to meet on Monday, June 8, at 8 A. M. On Sunday I preached at 11 A. M. Monday morning, at the appointed hour, there was a fair representation. Some of the matter that came before the meeting, was disposed of without full satisfaction, but under the very peculiar circumstances which existed, the church did the best thing possible for the peace of those specially concerned. The Brethren at this place appointed their Communion meeting Sept. 12 and 13. At the above council I resigned my position as elder, after having had the oversight of the work at this place for over nine years. Bro. T. B. Digman having moved among them, now takes the oversight and labors with them. May peace and success crown his efforts!

On Saturday, June 13, at 2 P. M., I assembled with the Brethren of the home church in council at Loraine, where all business matter was disposed of with brotherly love and union. Our Communion meeting was appointed for Sept. 26, at 10 A. M. Brethren and sisters every-where are invited.

At the above council, the church thought it best to make the necessary arrangements for the regular support of our Sunday-school, thus avoiding the unpleasant penny collection every Sunday. The result was a unanimous vote, and a collection of over $6. We decided to get seventy-five copies of the Brethren's Quarterly and a sufficient number of Young Disciple to supply the school. This plan of collecting more universally [illegible] the Brethren, they would find less [illegible] Brethren's Sunday-schools. Brethren, try it and see how [illegible] nice it will work!

W. STRICKLER.

From the Field in Northern Denmark.

TO-DAY I am in my little home, resting after my travels in Sweden and Denmark. The [illegible] here are living much scattered [illegible] careful [illegible] or less [illegible] and I must walk many miles in visiting them, and preaching the Word of God. In my former days I had to work a great deal to earn something for my family's subsistence. Besides this I worked on Sundays for my Master, and many times I longed for rest. The Lord, however, be thanked for all his grace and goodness to me, and all of us to this day.

I desire to express, by this means, my heartiest thanks and love to all the brethren and sisters in America who are helping us in building up the Master's cause here in Europe. I rejoice that the members are drawing nearer and nearer the truth. Many days have gone by since Bro. Hope distributed tracts in this country for the first time. One day as I was going to my work, I received a tract named, "The one Faith," by M. M. Eshelman, which I read with deep interest, during my hours of rest. I am happy that, by the goodness of the Lord, I was made to have a true comprehension of his Word, and to pattern after it, especially in this time, which so much abounds in men's doctrine.

Only a few days ago, I had a conversation with a member of the State church. He lamented my condition and asked me to go to a priest, who believed in God, to be guided. But I showed him the Word of God in its purity. He said, "It is all right, but the priest shall guide you with the Holy Spirit." That would be an instruction outside of the Word, from which, I hope, the good Lord will deliver me!

It is difficult to work in this country, because the people love the false doctrine of the State church, and most of them will not set their foot within our doors when we hold our meetings. We are in need of much patience to hold out in our mission work, because so very few join in with us. But God be praised that some seem to stand near the church, and wish to be baptized in the near future. Let us remember that one soul is worth more than the whole world.

A little church is here who is glad in doing all the Lord's commandments, and our hope is that finally we may all meet in the heavenly mansions which are prepared for us.

We rejoice that Bro. D. L. Miller will pay us a visit this summer, and our prayer is that the Lord may safely lead him over the great waters, and that he may be productive of much good among us.

We need a young, gifted preacher who is more gifted than we are. He could be of much use to the cause. Bro. Hope was a zealous and gifted preacher and since he left us, no one has been able to fill his place.

I think Bro. Olsson, from Sweden, has told of our annual District Meeting. I was glad to visit our dear Swedish members. They were full of joy and gladness, and they held their meetings with crowded houses. The people seemed to receive the Word more gladly than in Denmark. Two were baptized during our District Meeting in Malmo and we had a very good love-feast.

Bro. Olsson has moved to a new place. Up to June 6, fourteen members have united with them, and others stand near the Kingdom. Bro. Olsson is a gifted preacher and very useful to the church. May God bless him, and us all, is our prayer!

Quarterly Council.

The members of the North Solomon church, of Osborne and Smith Counties, held a very pleasant council, June 13. We received some good exhortations from the Brethren, and we believe that impressions were made that will unite us closer as brethren and sisters, and will cause us to keep nearer the cross of our Blessed Savior. May we ever walk in the narrow way, and hold out faithful until the end!

There was very little business before the council. All that was brought up was passed unanimously. This is as it should be. All should labor to be of one mind, and speak the same thing. The church decided to hold a love-feast, the Lord willing, Sept 12 and 13, commencing at 10 o'clock A. M. The meeting is to be at Bro. Lewis Lerew's, two miles north of Portis. The brethren and sisters of adjoining congregations are earnestly invited to be with us, especially ministers.

Come and we will rejoice once more together, and try to make one step nearer that haven of rest, prepared by our Heavenly Father for all those who love him. If we love him, we will keep his commandments, and by keeping his commandments we become heirs to that inheritance which will stand as long as the years of eternity roll. Philip Landis, Sect.

Notes of Travel.

My last report closed with the work at Wakarusa, Ind. Since that time we visited West Dayton, Ohio, also East Dayton, Salem, West Milton, Pittsburgh, Painter Creek, and Arcanum. We held a few meetings at each of these places, and were especially glad to see that the children and youths were being cared for in the Sunday-schools. Our people must learn to care for the rising generation. They need to have their minds well supplied with youthful knowledge.

Perhaps you are ready to ask why I say "Youthful knowledge?" I mean the kind of knowledge which may profitably be acquired in youth. We all know that what we learn in youth will be retained much better than that which we learn in after-years.

Sometimes we are reminded that the apostle says, "Knowledge puffeth up." We wonder whether we may not also be forgetful of what Jesus says about the danger of riches? Riches will not keep a man out of heaven, if he does not abuse them, and just so it is with knowledge. The thing that we, in this world, need is wisdom, to know how to use what we have, whether it be knowledge, riches or whatsoever we have entrusted to us. "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." 1 Cor. 10: 31.

After leaving Ohio, the next stop was in West Virginia,—a few miles east of Wheeling. The work here, so far as the ministry is concerned, is in the hands of Bro. Adam Wise, who is their elder, and Bro. Andrew Chambers, who is in the first degree of the ministry. As Bro. Wise is old and feeble, the work is principally dependent upon Bro. Chambers. Right here I would invite the brethren, who may be traveling over the B. and O. R. R., to stop off and help them. Write Bro. Chambers previous to your arrival, addressing him at Glen Easton, W. Va., and tell him what time to meet you at that station. You will find an appreciative people to preach to, though the country is very broken.

When we left this point, we traveled direct to Hagerstown, Md., and it is no use for me to attempt to describe anything at that place, more than to say that it was a grand reunion of God's children, and others, who also seemed to enjoy the social features of the gathering. One thing that was a source of great joy to me,—those who came to that Meeting had left all their secular business at home, but brought all the families to the meeting. Many like myself, could not have the wife and children along in person,—but we found that they were all brought along in the hearts of those who were at the Meeting. Of this we were fully assured by the many prayers which were made in behalf of those who were left at home.

While the writer was deprived of the privilege of being present during part of the business sessions (owing to his wounded side), yet we learned that the spirit of the Meeting was good. Why should it be otherwise, if we are brethren and sisters,—children of one Father?

One of the green spots in the Meeting was the meeting of my invalid brother, C. H. Balsbaugh. I speak of this, because he is one of the very small number, who knows how to sympathize with me in my affliction, and also knows how to draw the curtain aside and out from under these dark clouds to view a smiling face, beaming forth through the rifts, made by the faith of the anxious, trusting child and the love of a dear Father, meeting in the person of Jesus Christ. In him only the two can meet. Many very dear brethren and sisters would sympathize with each of us, if they could, but not having been afflicted themselves, they do the best they can. By the kindness of Bro. Jacob Blocher, of Adrian, Mo., I was favored with a visit to the Father's children near Gettysburg, Pa. I spent a few days pleasantly with them, and had a real love-feast with them in the Marsh Creek church. A. Hutchison.

Annual Conference.

It was our happy privilege to attend the Annual Conference of the Brethren, at Hagerstown, Md. The location, general arrangements and management of the Meeting were fine.

The business of the meeting passed off nicely and quietly, in a Christian-like manner. The crowd of people that thronged the grounds was immense, yet there was the very best of order throughout the Meeting. We met in the Tabernacle, Wednesday evening for a social song service before preaching. The crowd was immense. Hundreds of people joined in singing the praises of him who "doeth all things well."

"Out of the heart, not out of the brain are the best issues of life. And many a one who has not been able to find God, or to construct any satisfactory doctrine concerning him, through speculations of the intellect, has found him by the path of that old beatitude, 'Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God,'—has seen him not as a visible being standing before his outward eyes, or comprehended him, perhaps as an infinite person by his intellectual faculty, but found him in the inner consciousness of his heart."

Notes from Our Correspondents.

"As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

In Love and Union.—Our quarterly council was held May 22. Eld. H. W. Strickler presided. Seven members were present. Our church is in love and union. Our Communion meeting will be held Aug. 22. Our next council will be held the day before the feast. We are but few in number and would be glad to have as many of the brethren and sisters come to our Communion as possible.—Eliza Mickey, Barry, Ill.

Talks on the Bible Lands.—Neighboring churches will please take notice that Bro. D. L. Miller, accompanied by his wife, expects to visit the Ashland church July 11, to talk, at 7: 30, on Bible Lands. He will also preach for us on Sunday morning at 10: 30. On Sunday evening, at 7: 30, he will continue his "Talks on Bible Lands."—D. N. Workman, Ashland, Ohio.

Flourishing Sunday-school.—The Sabetha church, Kans., is moving on in the even tenor of her way with seemingly no opposition, such as she has been subjected to in times past. Our Sunday-school flourishes as the evergreen upon which winter's frosts have no effect. June 2 the church met in quarterly council. Very little business came before the meeting. Our love-feast was appointed for Sept. 19 and 20 at 2 P. M.—John Heckman, Sabetha, Kans., June 10.

Pleasant Love-feast.—The members of the White Oak church, Pa., held their love-feast June 11 and 12, commencing at ten A. M. Several dear souls were baptized, which makes the number of additions eleven for this spring. In the afternoon the house was so crowded that not near all could get in, so the Brethren decided to have preaching out in the grove. It was one of the largest love-feasts ever held here. It was estimated that fully two thousand people were on the ground. Twenty-one ministers were present from abroad.—Sue Schreiner.

One Baptized.—Bro. Dorrance Vroman filled our regular monthly appointment last Sunday. After meeting we repaired to the water-side to perform the ordinance of baptism. One dear sister was buried with Christ, and arose to walk in newness of life. May God help her to live faithful! Although the results of our labors in Batavia are far from satisfying our anticipations, still we are made to rejoice when even one straying soul returns to its God. May we all, with God's help, strive to be more faithful, more earnest, and more interested in the salvation of souls! Let us not forget that there is a work for us to do.—M. Connell, Batavia, Ill., June 16.

Under the Hand of Affliction.—Seated by the bedside of my afflicted husband, Eld. Abraham Shepler, I feel like asking the prayers of the brethren and sisters through the Messenger in our behalf. We think he is near his journey's end. He has been confined to his bed for nearly seven weeks, and during that time I have never left the bedside for more than a few seconds at a time. This world looks dark, when we are about to give up one who is near and dear to us, but we hope that our loss will be his great gain. Brethren and sisters, remember us at a throne of grace! —Esther Shepler, Peabody, Kans., June 14, 1891.

Six Added to the Fold.—Since my last report from the Thornapple church, Mich., two young members were received by baptism near Fisher Station, within the limits of this church district, and three more by baptism and one reclaimed at the close of the series of meetings, held at the West house, June 6 to 15. June 13 we held our love-feast, which was a very pleasant meeting, although the number of communicants was not so large as on some former occasions. On the day of the feast Bro. Isaac Rairigh was advanced to the full ministry. Elders Isaac Miller, and Isaiah Rairigh, of the Woodland church, E. Bosserman and D. Chambers, of the New Haven church, and Bro J. V. Felthouse, of Indiana, who conducted the series of meetings, were present at the feast. Their labors were much appreciated. The church is in peace, and all feel to rejoice over the accessions to our numbers, and feel to thank God for his goodness to the children of men.—Peter B. Messner.

FIVE BAPTIZED.—June 14 I left my home for Linsdale, where I preached one sermon to a very large congregation. We then went to a small stream and buried five precious souls with Christ in baptism, and reclaimed one. There are more who will be baptized in the near future. Dear brethren, pray for the lambs in Christ's kingdom, that they may not get weary in well-doing! — Joseph Guthrie, Hazleton, W. Va.

GOOD ADVICE.—Let users of tobacco and other useless things take a sheet of paper and draw 161 parallel lines, and then at right angles 161 lines crossing the first lines, and you have 25,600 squares, representing 160 acres of land, divided into one rod squares. Mark "ten cents" in each square. This is at the rate of $16 per acre, and in spending money for tobacco or anything that is of no use, take your paper and cross out the amount on it, and see how big a hole you are eating in your farm in a short time. To make sure that you won't forget it, stake off 16½ feet square in your door yard, and on leaving the house, as you take a chew of tobacco take a glance of your "ten-cent" lot.—C. K. Burkholder, Bagley, Iowa.

OVERCOMING EVIL.—Many look for an assault from the enemy by an outside attack, but I think the enemy we should fear most is SELF. Unless we are strong enough in our faith to overcome our own evil inclinations, we have failed in commencing the warfare at the right place. The greatest battles are fought right in our own hearts, and it is not too much to say that the greatest victories, as well as the most disastrous defeats may take place in the innermost recesses of the soul. How important, then, that we overcome sin in ourselves first,—that we let our light shine, and that, after having overcome evil in ourselves, we also help our brother to become victorious in all the battles of this life! —Lewis Glass, North Georgetown, Ohio.

PLEASANT LOVE-FEAST.—The Moscow church, Idaho, met in church council May 30. Everything passed off pleasantly. One young sister decided to walk with the church no more. May she early see the great mistake she has made, and again return to the fold! We met at 6:30 P. M., June 6, for our love-feast. It was the first Communion for several members, among them the writer. About forty members surrounded the tables and partook of the sacred emblems. The best of order prevailed during the entire evening. Next day we met again at 9:30 A. M., to elect a minister. Bro. Jacob Gwin was chosen. May the Lord bless and guide him in his new calling! We had preaching at 11 A. M and 4 P. M. by Eld. Hodgden. At the evening meeting a dear brother, who had wandered from the church several years ago, expressed his desire to again unite with the church. He was received with gladness. Eld. Hodgden goes to Spokane this week at the request of a sister at that place, who desires to be anointed.—J. U. G. Stiverson, Moscow, Idaho, June 9.

REFRESHING MEETING.—The members of the Cedar Lake church, DeKalb Co., Ind., held a soul-refreshing love-feast June 11. There were in attendance ten elders and ministers from adjoining congregations, who labored faithfully to preach the Word to the many who were in attendance at the meeting. Such seasons are showers of blessings sent to us to refresh us spiritually, just as the vegetation of the earth is refreshed by the gentle summer rains. One was added to the church by baptism, and others almost persuaded.—G. I. Patterson.

COME NOW!—Sinner, come while it is called to-day, for to-morrow you may be in the arms of death! If you die in sin, what are your hopes beyond the grave? If you have never sought Jesus in the full pardon of your sins, how can you hope to meet him in peace, when you are called from this world? Do not wait for a more convenient time, in the hope of giving your heart to Jesus when you get older. Remember your time is in God's hands, and when death comes you must go,—prepared or unprepared — Anna C. Miller, Fort Hunter, Pa.

RETURNING HOME.—Wife and I are now at Panther, Dallas Co., Ia. We came here June 12, and attended their love-feast on the 13th. There were a great many communicants, and we had quite an enjoyable meeting. We met Bro. J. S. Mohler here, and also ministers from adjoining congregations. To-morrow we start for Panora, Guthrie Co., to attend their feast, June 20 and 21; then we will start for York County, Nebr., to spend a little time visiting our daughters, in York and Adams Counties. We expect to reach our home at Holyoke, Colo., about the last of June.—John S. and Susan Snowberger, Panther, Dallas Co., Iowa, June 16.

SELF-EXAMINATION. — Too often our work in this respect is not as thorough as it ought to be. We examine ourselves, as we think, critically and yet there is, perhaps, some pet sin that remains undisturbed. This brings to us the thought that thoroughness is needed in order to make the work as we shall like to have it done in the day of judgment. With many of us it is as with the Israelites,—they were commanded to drive all the foes out of the land, but they neglected to do so, and as a consequence were led into sin. Let us learn a lesson and be thorough in our work of purging the heart of all that is contrary to God's holy commandments. — Edward Warren.

DEACONS ELECTED.—The Raccoon Creek church, Ind., held her quarterly council June 13. Everything passed off pleasantly, and, we trust, in the fear of God, as he is the discerner of hearts and knows all our motives. Brethren Jesse Ronk, Billy Hicks, Frank Rose, John Himes and Wilford Harshbarger were called to serve the church in the office of deacon. We trust the Lord will give them strength in this noble work! We were also made to rejoice that one came forward and gave his heart to God. May he be a bright and shining light!—E. Miller, Ladoga, Ind.

PLEASANT LOVE-FEAST.—The members of the Colby church, Kans., held a love-feast June 6. All were in love and union. The weather was very inclement, but we had fair attendance and attention. Ministering brethren present from abroad were Eld. John Hollinger, of Russel, Kans., Eld. B. B. Whitmer, of Quinter, Kans, Eld. John Garber and Bro. ——Throne, of Norton Co., and Bro. John Cline, of Sherman County. Our home minister, C. H. Brown, was ordained as an elder. An election was held for a deacon, and the lot fell on Bro. A. H. Partch. Brethren, remember us at a Throne of Grace. May we all finally meet at that great supper with our Elder Brother in the home he has gone to prepare! —Annie S. Partch, Colby, Kans., June 15.

Deceased suffered a great deal before she died, but bore it all with Christian fortitude. Funeral services by Bro. S. M. Goughnour and the writer at the State Center church. J. C. SEIBERT.

FRANTZ.—In the Sunfield church, Eaton Co., Mich., June 9, 1891, sister Anna Frantz, aged 24 years and 1 day.

Sister Frantz was born in Noble County, Ind. She was married to Bro. John Frantz on her sixteenth birthday, and lived a married life eight years and one day. There were born to them one son and two daughters. The son passed away several years ago. Services by the writer. Disease, consumption. BENJAMIN FRYFOGLE.

McMULLEN.—At Mansfield, Ohio, June 3, 1891, Isabel Stilts, daughter of I. C. & A. B. McMullen, aged 20 years, 9 months and 20 days. Funeral services by Eld. W. Murray from Heb. 9: 27, 28.
ISRAEL WHISLER.

OVERHOLSER. In the bounds of the Elkhart Valley church, Ind., Feb. 2, of spinal disease and dropsy, Bobber D., son of Bro. David and sister Elizabeth Overholser, aged 8 years and 3 months.

Bobber was a great care of father and mother, for he was sick and could never be left alone. He never could talk, but was glad to see his sisters and brothers come home. Funeral services by brethren Joseph Culp and John Nusbaum from Matt. 19: 13-15. MARY O'BRIEN.

KIMMEL.—In the Bear Creek church, near Dayton, Ohio, June 3, 1891, sister Mary Kimmel, aged 89 years, 1 month and 12 days.

Grandmother Kimmel was born in Pennsylvania April 22, 1802. Her maiden name was Murray. From Pennsylvania she, with her parents, moved to Ohio. She had six brothers and two sisters, all of whom she survived excepting one brother, Eld. Samuel Murray, of River, Ind. She was united in marriage to Bro. David Kimmel about sixty-five years ago. Shortly after her marriage she and her husband united with the Brethren's church. Both remained faithful unto the end. Eight children were born to them, two sons and six daughters. Her husband died twenty-four years ago. Five daughters also preceded her in death, leaving two sons and one daughter to mourn their loss, which is surely her gain.

This dear old sister was seriously afflicted for twelve years, and most of this time had to be cared for like a child Her younger son, Andrew, and family, assumed this charge, and staid with her day and night during this long affliction; not being absent for a day or night. She bore her affliction patiently and was resigned to the will of the Lord. Funeral services by Eld. John Bowman from Rev. 14: 12, "Here is the patience of the saints, here are they that keep the commandments of God, and the faith of Jesus."
JOSIAH EBY.

WINE.—In the English River congregation, Keokuk Co., Iowa, June 13, 1891, of diphtheria, Howard Wine, aged 5 years, 7 months and 2 days.

Deceased was a son of Bro. G. S. and sister Hannah Wine. Funeral services June 14, from Jas. 4: 14, by Eld. Jacob Brower.
PETER BROWER.

An Expert Opinion.

THE "Medical and Surgical Journal" for March 1891, says editorially:

"This pretty little city of Idaho Springs, Colorado, is situated in a beautiful park about 37 miles from Denver, and is about 7,500 feet above sea level. It is thrifty, prosperous, and has become noted for its hot and cold mineral springs, which contain medicinal properties of extraordinary value. Idaho Springs as a health resort cannot be excelled this side of the world-renowned Carlsbad Springs of Germany, whose waters and the waters found at Idaho Springs bear almost an identical chemical analysis.

"In the early stages of consumption these waters, combined with the invigorating air of this beautiful climate, are almost a specific. We take pleasure in recommending these waters to all suffering from coughs and catarrhal affections. It is the best place to go to for the cure of phthisis. Those of our colleagues who have been sending their patients to this grand health resort all join in praising the satisfactory results received from the invigorating waters and climate. We would therefore urge physicians to advise their patients, threatened with consumption, not to procrastinate, but to try, before it is too late, the salutary effects of the waters of Idaho Springs. The Union Pacific are making special efforts to carry the public to and from this famous resort, with all the modern comfort and ease which the tourist seeking health and pleasure can desire." 22-34.

Grand Excursion to Yellowstone National Park and Other Western Resorts.

THE Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," proposes to run, in July, 1891, a grand excursion from Omaha to Yellowstone National Park, Great Shoshone Falls, Idaho, Ogden, Salt Lake City, Garfield Beach, Denver, Clear Creek Canon, the famous Loop, and other points of interest. The Union Pacific will furnish six horse Concord Coaches, which will carry the party from Beaver Canon, Idaho, to and through Yellowstone National Park. These Coaches will also be taken to Shoshone Station, and used for the ride to Great Shoshone Falls.

From Beaver Canon to Yellowstone National Park, the trip will occupy three days going, three days returning, and eight days will be spent in the park. Excellent tents and good equipment for camping out will be furnished by the Union Pacific, en route from Beaver Canon to the Park, and while in the Park the tourists will be quartered at the various hotels.

The very low rate of $250.00 per passenger has been made from Omaha. This rate includes Railroad, Pullman, and Stage Fare, Meals and Hotel bills from the time of leaving Omaha until the return of the excursion, in all 30 days. No half fare rates.

Only thirty-five passengers can be accommodated, and as accommodations are limited EARLY APPLICATION for same should be made.

In ordering tickets, send money for same by express, to Harry P. Deuel, City Ticket Agent, U. P. System, 1302 Farnam St., Omaha, Nebraska.

No children will be allowed on this trip. For further information relative to this excursion and itinerary, apply to

Garfield Beach on Great Salt Lake, Utah.

THE famous health resort, Garfield Beach, on Great Salt Lake, 18 miles from Salt Lake City, is reached via the Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," and is now open for the season.

This is the only real sand beach on Great Salt Lake, and is one of the finest bathing and pleasure resorts in the West. Owing to the stimulating effect of the brine on the skin, or the saline air upon the lungs the appetite is stimulated, and after a bath, the bathers are ready for a hearty meal, and feel greatly invigorated.

Fine bath-houses, accommodating 400 people, have been erected at Garfield Beach, in connection with which there is a first-class restaurant and a fine, large pavillion built out over the lake. All of these are run by the Union Pacific, which guarantees a first-class resort in every respect.

For complete description of Garfield Beach and Great Salt Lake, send to E. L. Lomax, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent, Omaha, for copies of "Sights and Scenes in Utah," or "A Glimpse of Great Salt Lake." 22-34.

The equipment of this line is not surpassed by that of any road in the land. All trains are vestibuled, from the engine to the parlor and sleeping cars. The day train, known as "The Velvet," consists of a Parlor Car, Ladies' Car, Smoking Car and Dining Car. This train leaves Dearborn Station at 9:20 A. M. daily, arrives at Indianapolis at 3:20 P. M. and at Cincinnati at 9:45 P. M.

The constantly increasing travel via the Monon demands additional accommodation. Hereafter the night train, known as "The Electric," will consist of a Compartment Sleeping Car, a regular Sleeper, a Ladies' Car, with an additional Sleeper for use of Indianapolis passengers. The entire outfit has been built by Pullman expressly for the line, and is simply the best. The addition of a Compartment Sleeping Car to the equipment, fills the bill. Fastidious traveling together will appreciate this special accommodation, while those preferring the regular Sleeping Cars can have their choice. This train leaves Dearborn Station daily, at 8:35 P. Gospel Chimes!

BY WM. BEERY.

THIS little book has been selling more rapidly than the publishers anticipated. The first edition was almost exhausted in the first two months. A second edition is now printed.

Following are a few of the good words received from brethren and other competent judges:

"An Excellent Book for Sunday-schools."

"After having carefully examined 'Gospel Chimes' I can pronounce it an excellent book for Sunday-schools, and hope all the schools of the Brethren will adopt the same. Our church is conceded to have the best congregational singing of any denomination, and if it is improved, as it can be, by the use of 'Gospel Chimes,' the power for good will be surprising."—GEO. B. HOLSINGER, Teacher of Music, Bridgewater College, Va.

"Fresh and Pleasing Melodies; Thoughtful, Spiritual, and Poetical Words."

"It gives me pleasure to speak in terms of praise of your new book, 'Gospel Chimes.' It contains many fresh and pleasing melodies to which are wedded thoughtful, spiritual and poetical words. I trust it will hold its own in competition with the numerous books now in the market and find a large sale."—T. M. TOWNE, Chicago, Ill., one of America's best writers of Sunday-school music.

"Better than Many Similar Publications."

"Copy of your new book received. It contains some very pleasing and useful music, while it is to be commended especially for the selection of hymns. Good Sunday-school hymns are in great demand in Sunday-school work, and in this particular 'Gospel Chimes' is better than many similar publications."—A. J. SHOWALTER, the leading writer and publisher of Sunday-school and church music in the South.

"An Excellent Collection."

"I have carefully examined your late Sunday-school singing book, 'Gospel Chimes' and find it to be an excellent collection for the purpose designed, both in words and music."—S. W. STRAUB, Chicago, Ill., the popular Western writer and publisher of Sunday-school music.

Bro. Beery has had a large experience in Sunday-school work, and the book which we offer to the brethren, and the public in general, evinces the exercise of talent as well as good judgment. The religious purity of the hymns contributed by sister Beery adds much to the excellence of the book.

Price per single copy, 30 cts.; per dozen by mail, $3.00; by express, $2.60. Lots of more than a dozen must be sent by express.

"Religious principles, inculcated in a child's heart, are like golden nails which time drives in faster, and no philosophical claw can completely draw out.

Some idea of John D. Rockefeller's wealth may be had, says an exchange, when it is known that his income is $125,000 a day. He has also symptoms of nervous failure and other diseases that will shorten his life while making what remains of it a burden to bear. There is such a thing as paying too high, even for an income of $125,000 a day. This man with all his wealth does not enjoy life half as much as the ordinary laboring-man. Food, raiment and contentment are the best marks of success.

It seems that most anything and everything that may be said concerning the future of the Russian Jews is read with more or less interest. In a recent issue the New York Independent says: "The difficulty of providing for the Jews, whom the Czar is so anxious to get rid of, is stirring the inventive faculty on every hand. The number of solutions of the problem is rapidly increasing. One of the latest comes from St. Petersburg, and calls attention to a strip of Arabia extending along the Red Sea from Fort Akaba to El Wight, where the climatic conditions are favorable and the soil fertile. At present there are only about 10,000 Arab nomads in the whole section, which could easily, the author of the plan says, support half a million Russian Jews. It is said that the subject has already been broached to the Egyptian Government of establishing here an autonomous principality, with the Khedive as suzerain.

A few weeks ago we spoke of a pastoral visit made by Eld. Daniel Hollinger. We intended to say Eld. Daniel Keller. We now make the correction with the hope that our mistake has caused no unpleasantness as it was a pen slip, for which no one seems to be responsible. It appears strange that things so familiar should be misplaced, but those who write a great deal, and have to deal with a large number of names, readily understand how such mistakes may occur.

COMMENCEMENT.

One among the important and interesting events of a school is its annual Commencement. While it is a reunion of the past, it also forms a link of connection with the present, and in this way a relationship is formed between the old and the new students, that is impressive and lasting. There are no attachments formed, outside of the church, that are so strong as those formed during our school-days. Once a school-chum means friendship for life. That this is so is an interesting and significant fact that bears careful study.

If school-day attachments are so fixed and lasting, the character formed in connection with them, must be equally fixed and enduring. And if so, do we not see the great importance of carefully studying the moral and religious character of the schools to which we send our children?

This is a feature in connection with our schools, that should demand our prayerful investigation, and we name it now because we have the thought before us.

During the last week things about the school have put on their usual briskness. Closing and Commencement Exercises require preparation, and this calls forth extra labor, so that a scene of activity is every-where to be noticed. It is a work about which everybody, connected with the school, feels a deep interest, and as the interest is a mutual one, duty is made easy and labor becomes a pleasure.

A pleasant feature about these meetings is the gathering in of the old students and friends of the school. At this writing the number of these is unusually large, which adds greatly to the pleasure of all concerned in the work.

The Class Prayer-meeting is held on Tuesday evening of closing week, and is looked forward to as the meeting of the year. This one was no exception to the ones heretofore held. All the members of the class took part. Rom. 12 was used as the basis of the remarks made, and some excellent thoughts were given. At the close Bro. T. T. Myers, of Philadelphia, made some suggestions and practical remarks, which were well received.

On Wednesday evening was the meeting of the Alumni Association of the school. Of these, there are seventy-two, about fifty of whom were present at the meeting. This was a remarkably large attendance, considering the fact of their being scattered from the Atlantic to the Pacific, to the Gulf States and to Mexico. This Association is a growing power for good to the school, as they are not only continued workers for the Institution, but are raising quite a respectable Endowment Fund; the class of this year, at their late meeting, having given $500.00.

The evening meeting was largely attended, and the exercises interesting. The class historian gave the whereabouts of all the Alumni, and it was a great satisfaction to all concerned, to learn that they all have good positions, are doing well and doing credit to their Alma Mater. Eight of them are in the ministry, and two have gone to their reward.

During the reunion of the students and teachers, held at our late Annual Meeting, at Hagerstown, Md., we were made to wonder about the reunion forming on the other side. Brethren Zuck, Quinter, Horn, Replogle and a number of those who were students a less number of terms, have already passed over. While the number grows larger here, it will also grow larger "over there." And if ties formed here are not sundered in death, we know there will be happy meetings made. Let us all so live while here that we may meet in the higher school in heaven, where we shall learn to know as we are known!

The Junior closing was held on Thursday morning, and the Senior Commencement in the evening, when there was a class of twelve graduated in the Normal English Course. Three took the degree of "Master in English," and one that of "Bachelor in Science."

Although it was right in the midst of the hay harvest, the friends of the schools were well represented, and the best of feelings prevailed, and the time of parting was one of those peculiar scenes that we sometimes experience in this life,—the blending of tears of joy and sadness,—joy at the thought of returning home and the meeting of loved ones there,—and sadness at the parting of friends made while at school.

If we were selfish enough to consult our own feelings only, we would have such dear ones abide with us always, but when we think of loving fathers and mothers who have been separated from their children, and are anxiously awaiting their return, we say, "Go, and the God of peace be with them!"

The prospects for the coming year are unusually good and we hope to see a large number of those who have been with us, return at the opening of the new school year.

In our devotions we never forget our work and those who have been with us,—especially those of like precious faith and those who look back to Huntingdon as their spiritual birth-place. "Little children, be strong in Jesus," and hold as precious that which you have received,—the unsearchable riches of Christ!

ESSAYS.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth."

HOME.

A HOME in the world is so sweet and so dear,
Amidst the wild billows of earthly career;
While through its dominions we constantly roam
In silence, our hearts are still longing for home.

'Tis there the affections grow tender and sweet
For those of the home, we so often could meet;
For brothers, and sisters, and parents so dear,
Who often were gathered in seasons of prayer.

Our homes here, alas! in this valley of gloom,
Are poisoned with sin and with death's bitter doom;
One by one they're falling, no more here to roam,
Till at last none are left of that once happy home.

But, thanks unto God for the home "over there,"
Where life that's immortal, forever we'll share;
Where death cannot enter to sadden the home
Of one of the saints, on that glittering throne.

When sickness, and sorrow distresses the soul,
And waves of great trouble would over me roll,
A pilgrim and stranger, here struggling alone,
Am longing and sighing for heaven's sweet home

Temptations without and corruptions within,
Would tarnish the soul with gross darkness and sin,
While wrestling with Satan, his temptings to shun,
I long to be free and forever at home.

As friend after friend here, is passing away,
I ask not on earth any longer to stay,
But I long for my Savior and friends who have gone,
To meet them forever, in heaven's sweet home.

THE TEMPLE.

[Sermon by Eld. Enoch Eby at the Dedication of the College Chapel, Mt. Morris, Ill., June 14, reported by H. M. [illegible]kler and Miss King.]

Subject: The Temple.

After reading 1 Chron. 22, also 1 Kings 2: 1-3, the elder said:

We do not presume to meet the expectations of the people on an occasion like this, neither do we feel that it is our special duty to do so, for we are glad that God does not require that at the hands of his ministers, but only requires them to preach the Word, and that I will do according to the ability which God may give me, to present such thoughts as may be edifying to us. I hope our effort will be judged by the Word, for these dedication services are held very differently by different classes of people, but we hope this one will not be formal only, but we trust that our hearts will be in the work. We dedicate this building not simply for school purposes, if you please, but to God. That makes the exercises exceedingly solemn.

I further remark, that I entertain the pleasing hope, that at the very commencement of this building,—so admirably adapted to its design,—it was conceived in the hearts of our dear brethren, who have been instrumental in putting up such an excellent structure, that it was already dedicated in their hearts to God, and that it was through the influence of the Holy Spirit that it took such an idea. If that be true, we certainly have an excellent foundation this morning upon which to work.

In the Scripture which I have read, a reference is made to the dedication services of one of the most splendid structures ever framed by man. "It must be exceeding magnifical of fame," and it caused the Queen of the South to be astonished when she saw the wisdom of Solomon manifested in this superstructure. But while that temple was built so beautifully, and was so excellent in its character, it is a beautiful type of the church of Christ. You will remember that when David was going to build the House, the Lord did not suffer him, and gave his reasons why. David was a man of blood, and therefore the type would have been destroyed, but Solomon was a man of peace, beautifully representing the church of Jesus Christ, the doctrine of Christ, which is the doctrine of peace, hence Solomon is permitted to build the house. When the house was built, Solomon prayed for the blessing of God to rest upon it, as did our brother this morning.

For our dedication services, the line of thought contained in the chapter read, I thought would be appropriate. We may not dedicate a building fully to the service of the Lord. The dedication depends very largely upon the dedication of those who are to worship in it. It is true, dedication means simply to set apart. This house has been built for some purpose, and while primarily it may be said that it is a school building, secondarily it is a house of worship. But I would rather reverse that—primarily it is a house of worship and, secondarily, a house of education.

This house, as already intimated, took its origin in the hearts of Brethren. Taking that view of it, we regard it as a house of worship, and as such we recognize it this morning, and dedicate it to the God of heaven, and hope that nothing will ever be transacted within its walls that God would disapprove. In that view, we have a house of worship, a holy place, where God is willing to record his name, to listen to the prayers of his people, and to recognize their work in all that is in harmony with his divine will.

We ask ourselves, Why build such a house as this? We thought the Old Sandstone had done a great deal of good, and would have been sufficient, as it was years ago, but we saw the growing interest, and the brethren must meet it, as they supposed; hence this house. Why, then, build a house of this kind? Because the parents and guardians of children, all over this beautiful country, had the feeling that David had,—very soon they must pass away. While David did a great deal, and all that he could in his troublesome reign, being annoyed by wars and a great deal of trouble, he made a great preparation for his son Solomon. So parents do now, generally, and this thought I wish to impress upon the minds of the pupils that are here, and whose parents have come a considerable distance to see some of them graduate,—it is to impress your minds more deeply with the great interest your parents feel for your present and future welfare, just as David did. Hence David helped Solomon all that he could while he lived. In his very troublesome times he gathered a great deal together, and made much preparation for the building of God, but since he could not build it as Solomon was to do it, he now says that while he has made these preparations, Solomon might add to it.

I had to think this morning, of the time when I was a boy and a young man. I thought of the advantages that our dear young brethren and sisters have now, compared with mine; and while my father did all he could during the time in which he lived, it was comparatively very little to what is now done. Others have been adding to and while I have added a little to my family, and now they have the privilege of some advantages that my father had not to give me, I added a little, they are adding a little more, and while it may not seem commendable to say that we can add, I want to impress the thought that we can add nothing to the pure principles of religion, but that we must necessarily add facilities to meet the advance of the age in which we are living, and hence this is a case almost parallel, if not altogether. As large as Old Sandstone was, the wants of the country and the nation demand something larger, and they put this building up with the thought that the school would be considerably enlarged.

We must meet the demands of the age. David felt an interest in the future of his work and his son who was to do it. This is the point about which I wish to talk. In our experience, and that of many of our dear fathers and mothers, whose hearts are beating in sympathy for their welfare, as well as mine, we only can realize what it is to have a deep concern for the welfare of our children at heart, which David also had, and while he looked upon Solomon as being young and tender, nevertheless he says, "Be a man." When the heart is young and tender is the very best time to implant principles, the best time to cultivate the disposition, the best time to develop the mind, to expand the intellect. Therefore David says of Solomon, "He is young and tender." Then he turns to the elders of Israel and calls upon them to help him.

When a young man or woman has a desire for knowledge, what do the parents do? They look out for an institution whose influences are good, and that lead them to consider the claims of the Bible. They look out for a place that will discipline the mind and give them that which they need. They are more deeply concerned for not only the present, but for the future.

So, while Solomon's heart was young and tender, David puts the thought: "Be a man." What do we understand by this peculiar expression? We do not understand that it takes only a weight of 140 or 200 pounds to constitute a man. The main thing is a man of character, this being the idea we have contained in this declaration: A man of principle and not a man of policy. This thought we wish to impress especially upon the young. A policy man, the world has no use for, and he is worth nothing to the church. He amounts to but very little. You can hardly ever find out where he is. But you may depend upon a man of principle,—a man who can stand up to correct principles against all opposition,—a man that can say, "No," when any wicked influences are about him,—a man that has such determination for right that he will stand alone to carry out that which is right,—a man that is able to control his own nature and carnal disposition.

A man, as referred to in our text, will never say, "I can't quit the use of tobacco." It is beneath the dignity of a true man to say that any habit shall control him. "I am determined to control my habits, and bring all into subjection to the service of God, and if I have any evil thing within me, I have manly principle enough to control it, and to bring it into subjection." That is what a man will say. No man will say that he cannot quit the use of tobacco. And I hope no one will ever use it in this house, and soil this beautiful floor, and thus bring the disapprobation of God down upon his soul by indulging in a habit that physically, morally and religiously is outside of the Bible. And I have heard people say that they could not possibly do without a little something to drink. We, in Kansas, have not so much trouble in this line as you, perhaps, in some other States, but it is not a man that says that. A man that stands upon principle and the integrity of his soul, can quit by the help of God. He cannot do it of himself. Great men have died from drink,—I mean great men in some things. I refer, for instance, to Alexander the Great. If I am correctly informed, he was one of the greatest warriors that ever lived. He was a man of many victories, and to-day his name is immortal, and always will be from that stand-point, but, behold, —he filled a drunkard's grave at the age of thirty-three! Does that tell us that he was a man? Nay, verily. We do not only wish to impress this upon the young, but, also the aged fathers and mothers. In reducing this to practice, we then have this thought before us, -Paul said, "I bring into subjection my body;" I want to be a "man of principle." When you have a man of principle, you can send him out anywhere, and you can depend upon him. Men of policy will only do where they have no opportunity for doing wrong. A man that will be honest for the simple reason that he has no opportunity to be otherwise, is not worth much. A man of principle will do right anywhere.

That building which was made of such excellent material is a true representation of the church of Jesus Christ, and in rearing that temple David says, "Our daughters should be polished as corner-stones in the palaces of our God," and the apostle John says, in reference to the young men, "Because ye are strong and have overcome the wicked one." For the number of young men here, and the pupils, whether members of the church or not, the apostle recognizes the fact that, while you are young is the time to overcome anything that is evil, and to form characters based upon principle. Whether your fellow-pupil does right or not, do you do right? Whether the influences surrounding you are wholesome or unwholesome, do you stand upon principle, and if we all do that, what will we have? We will have a church built of the kind of material that was put in the beautiful temple of Solomon, the very best that could be had,—cedars of Lebanon, gopher wood, and the best of metal that could be found. Such select material should constitute the church of Christ. In the dedication of this house, we have already intimated in the language of our text, that the house and the school and everything else is subservient to that in the great end, to glorify God and to save souls.

As already intimated, after David talked to Solomon and had placed the idea before him, that he wanted him to be a man, and that, while Solomon was to be placed higher in the work and was to use the materials which David had collected as well as add thereto, and giving him all these instructions, he presses the thought, "Always be sure that you keep the statute and the commandments of the Lord, and he will prosper you." No man's work and no woman's labor will prosper—and the Bible wants it to prosper unless it is done in the name of God. It will prosper in this life and in that which is to come.

While we live in Kansas where we need so many of our brethren as missionaries, we heard that a number were moving into Mount Morris. But we found there was a good idea behind all of it. Your fathers and mothers move right here alongside of this building, so that you can have every advantage which generations before us had not. Here you have every advantage, no doubt, that you possibly can get, and I wish that our young people could appreciate it, but they cannot, and we cannot expect it, unless they go back to Pennsylvania, years ago, in the little, old log school-houses, with clapboard roofs, where some of us had to graduate. I thought if fathers and mothers were just as deeply concerned as David was, they will also associate with this work the spiritual welfare of their children, as well as the development of their mind. They ought to be, like David, willing to do all they can to rear up their children in the ways of the Lord. Their feeling is, "I must die and go the way of all flesh!" And their prayer is, that their work may not stop there. They know that their children must follow after them. And this is a great comfort to me to know that my children can do more than I have done, and have more advantages than I had, and I want to impress your minds with the thought that as advantages increase, responsibilities increase, and therefore, while you are getting an education and expanding the mind, and preparing yourself for more usefulness in the world, remember that your responsibilities are increased. Remember that God will require just so much more at your hands. When I am gone to my grave, I expect my sons and daughters will do more than I ever did. That is what the Lord may expect, and will, perhaps, of them.

Then you are here for that purpose, to receive an education and religious instructions. I was going to say, that the individual that has the best education is the most humble, and I should have associated this with the idea of "being a man." I have known people to go to school and after they were there a little while, when they returned, they seemed to impress their neighbors and friends with the thought that they had just about gotten to the summit of learning. A young man came to this school a year or two ago, and I asked him how he was getting along in his studies. He made me a very appropriate answer: "I have learned, at least, that I know nothing at all." I said, "You are making advancement." When people get the idea that they know it about all, the manly principle often leaves them. Father and mother and the neighbors and friends, when such boys and girls go home, have not as good an opinion of them as they would have. Pretty soon a number of you are to graduate. That is called the Commencement. When the school closes, they call it "Commencement," but I understand that they then quit school, and begin living, commence making improvement. When we go home we expect now that those who have been students will turn a new leaf, will begin the commencement of a new life. And when you do this, you will advertise the school and advertise the church. We trust that all the pupils will do this. After David had encouraged Solomon in the work, to be diligent, to show earnestness in the matter, then he turns to the elders of Israel and says, "Now do help Solomon. He is young and tender, and this is a great work." I had to think how the elders in our Israel are helping the school. We have elders just to help the church. Therefore the church saw the necessity of helping the schools. Our church-schools are the greatest power that we have in this world, outside of the church of God, and I was almost going to say that they are going to mould the church. They are now in advance of the church in education, and for that reason ought to be the highest in principle, the highest in righteousness, the nearest to God of anything in the world; for the influence that the schools exert over a community will be exerted over the church, and therefore the very best results we want to come from these schools, these places of education, hence the deep concern that the church has for you. Schools are a power among us. The church is helping them, and while that is the case, churches and schools are planted together. There is one common interest, one common issue, and all based upon the great foundation, that whatsoever ye do, do it for the honor and glory of God, that God may be glorified, souls saved, and the minds of men and women educated up to a high standard of not only moral, but of religious principles. And we hope that all realize this truth, that not only is it in the schools as in the church, that not only have the Faculty and officers a great work to do, but all must help the Faculty by a strict obedience to all the principles and their rules; and we ought to govern our schools and our churches as near to perfection as we can.

As already intimated, we have a very excellent house, admirably adapted to the purposes for which it is intended. We do not want to eulogize, or say anything very flattering, but we are well pleased with this building, its neatness and plainness, and we are thankful that there are not several thousand dollars expended in it that would never do anybody any good. When our people sent thousands of dollars out to us in the West, it caused our hearts to rejoice. Sending the money to those who were destitute is commendable, and the funds were well used. It is commendable that the brethren did not use money exorbitantly, so far as I can yet see in this building, and God will approve of such work as that. It is true, some will say that you did not build this fine enough. They will say that the temple, with its appliances and furniture, was built of the very best and most beautiful materials. Why not have the temple of God that way now? True, but that was a beautiful type of the church of Jesus Christ. It is not said that we must do that way now, to make a display when it does not add anything to our benefits. A grand principle in the church of Christ is economy, and the Savior taught that in his doctrine. Even in taking up the crumbs, Jesus taught us economy in little things. For that reason I refer to this.

Therefore, having those excellent facilities at your command, the school and the church as parents, together with the good influences, we certainly ought to see what advancement you have made, and when you return to your homes, your parents will naturally ask, "Has my son or my daughter made some spiritual improvement? We see that their mind has been disciplined, but have they also received spiritual advancement?" And I hope they can make a very favorable report when you return to the fireside. May they say, "I never regret the money spent and the hard labor performed in order to give them an education. I willingly do it all. You have made a step higher on the ladder of intellectual development, a step higher on the ladder of moral improvement, and more especially have you made advancement in the scale of religious knowledge. You are more spiritual-minded than I have ever been. You are given more to the study of the Bible and to prayer-meeting work, and I am glad that I sent you to Mount Morris."

I hope the students will take such a report as that home. By your general appearance, conversation and deportment, may the impression always be favorable. This I wish for all of our schools, established by the Brethren for the great purpose of benefiting mankind and saving souls. May God add his blessing to the work that is here already begun, as I have already said, added to the Old Sandstone building.

May God bless every lawful effort that has been made use of here, in cultivating the mind and in rearing up the young for more influence in life! May God bless the Word that we expect will be preached from this stand by our brethren, and even by some of the students who to-day are young ministers, and how glad I am to know that those of talent are following us up! But be sure that while you defend the Truth in precept, that you do it in example and practice. That is excellent to enforce what the minister teaches and what you do, that both be prospered. And remember that you will be an instrument in the hands of God to do good, and your reward will not only be salvation of souls, and in turning them from darkness to light, but when we get over on the other side, when all these labors are needed no more, and we strike glad hands on the other side of Jordan, in that great reunion, it will be said, "Welcome, good and faithful servant, thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things. Enter thou into the joys of thy Lord." That it may be our happy lot to thus meet, is my wish and prayer in behalf of all here in divine presence.

EPISTOLARY.

BY JOHN FORNEY.

I AM impressed this morning with the word "farewell," which we so often make use of in separating from one another, while we are here below. When we use it in a sense of "adieu," we imply by the use of it a commendation to the care of God. In this sense I wish to use it in this epistle, not knowing whether I shall ever be permitted again to address the dear editors and contributors of the GOSPEL MESSENGER and its many readers, with many of whom I have a long acquaintance, and for whom I have a kind and affectionate regard. I desire, with a Paul of old, to address you once more, and say to all of you, "Prove faithful! 'Quit you like men, be strong. Let all your things be done with charity.' Only let your conversation be as it becometh the Gospel of Christ; that whether I come to see you, or else be absent, I may hear of your affairs, that ye stand fast in one spirit with one mind, striving together for the faith of the Gospel.'"

It is our business while we are here in the world, to do each other good, and to be the light of the world, that the world may be made better by our little stay therein. It is every man's business to work while he is here, whether he can do much or little. God gave "to every man according to his several ability," and will soon bring us to account for the same.

My labor with you, dear brethren, in this wide field, as correspondent and agent, was both pleasant and edifying to me and, I hope, to many of the readers of the MESSENGER, if not to all. I feel under obligations to the editors for the kindness, love and patience they have showed me in past years. Accept my thanks for it.

Brethren, I can not help but tell you that I have only learned to love you, but now it seems that the time of separation has come nigh. One after another goes to his reward, and to the land of silence where we hear their voices no more.

Our dear brother, D. L. Miller, has again set the time, when he will bid farewell to friends and his native land, to visit other nations and countries. Soon we shall see his face no more. As a farewell word I would say to you, Bro. D. L. Miller, "Live close to the Lord; prove faithful. Hold fast to the truth of the Gospel until death, wherever you go. The Gospel is the only thing worth living for in this world. It is the only thing that can insure us eternal life, for it is the power of God unto salvation."

Let us all look to ourselves, that we lose not "those things which we have wrought, but that we receive a full reward." "For yet a little while, and he that shall come will come, and will not tarry." "The just shall live by faith, but if any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him." Let us believe to the saving of the soul, is my prayer!

THE THREE DAYS AND THREE NIGHTS. —Matt. 12: 40.

BY JESSE CROSSWHITE.

THE article by Bro. D. E. Price, in No. 11, present volume, and referred to again in No. 21 by the editor, has been particularly brought before the readers of the MESSENGER. The novelty of the position, taken by the brother, engaged my attention, and caused me to more carefully examine the arguments adduced. The more critically I examined them, the more thoroughly I became impressed that the position, taken by the brother, was untenable, and unsustained by the Scriptures. I say this with all due respect to the opinions of Bro. Price, or any other who may entertain like views. I find his arguments wanting in several essential points, without which any argument,—no matter how ingenious,—it may be, must be at least questionable. There are at least three essential things wanting to make it conclusive:

1. Scriptural proof.
2. Harmony with other Scriptural teachings.
3. Consistency with itself.

I shall notice these several points in detail,—not in a spirit of criticism, but as an enquirer after truth.

In the first argument adduced, our brother fixes the time when "the Son of Man was three days and three nights in the heart of the earth," to be sometime between the time of his resurrection and ascension into heaven, and as a basis for his argument he refers to Eph. 4: 9, 10. Here the brother endeavors to prove that this "Son of man," of whom Paul was speaking, was not the same "Son of man" of whom Jesus was speaking in Matt. 20: 10, but is the "Son of man" referred to in the text,—Matt. 12: 40,—and as a further proof of his position he refers us to 1 Peter 3: 18.

4. The "Son of Man," in Matt. 20: 19, he tells us, is a mortal, while that, spoken of in Matt. 12: 40, is a resurrected, immortalized "Son of man."

Now the only Scriptural proof, offered in support of this assertion, is that of Paul in Eph. 4: 9, 10. No one, I suppose, will, deny the immortality of Christ's body after his resurrection, but there are very strong grounds to doubt the mortality of his body even before his resurrection. John tells us emphatically that "the Word was God * * * and that "the Word became flesh." Jesus himself assures us that he is the "Bread of Life." "I am the true bread which came down from heaven," of which, if a man eat, he shall never die," for "my flesh is meat indeed, and my blood is drink indeed." Peter, in Acts 2, tells us, that his (Christ's) flesh saw no corruption. The facts all clearly prove that he rose with precisely the same body that was crucified. He showed the disciples the nail-holes in his hands, and the spear-hole in his side. He ate bread and honey-comb and broiled fish, the same as he had before his crucifixion.

From all these facts, I am compelled to believe, that the "Son of man," spoken of in Matt. 20: 19 is the same as in Matt. 12: 40. This much, then, with reference to my first reason.

My second reason is, want of harmony with other Scriptural teachings. The next argument is drawn from the supposition, that "the Son of man" only laid in the sepulchre about thirty-six hours. Now, whether the time was thirty-six hours or seventy-two hours, according to our mode of reckoning time, Jesus himself reckoned it to be three days, for he says, 'You may destroy this temple, and in three days I will raise it up again." This he spake concerning the "temple of his body." Paul also reckoned the time to be three days. In 1 Cor. 15 he says, "Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures, and was buried, and rose the third day according to the Scriptures." From these Scriptures, and many more which I might cite, had I time and space, it is quite clear, that there is a decided want of harmony between these Scriptures, and the position assumed by our brother.

My third and last reason for not accepting the position assumed in the article is, — "its want of agreement with itself, or inconsistency as to the reason assigned that the burial in the sepulchre could not mean what is stated in Matt. 12: 40, from the fact that it was at or near the surface of the earth, and not in the heart, or near the center. I think it is rather a "play upon words," than a logical argument, because, even supposing we admit a literal construction of the "text," "heart of the earth,"—must it necessarily follow, that "the heart of the earth" is at its center? True, a man's heart is near the center of his body, but that is no reason that everything in nature, both animate and inanimate has the same organization. The heart of everything, whether animate or inanimate, is admitted to be the source and fountain of its life. In most animate beings, this source, or fountain of life, is near the center of the body, but not so in most of those which are inanimate.

For example, you may bore the center, or as we generally express it,—the heart,—out of a tree, and if you leave the bark, or surface in tact, you will not disturb the growth of the tree one whit. So with reference to the earth. Its surface is certainly its vital, or life-generating, part. Hence, if this rule holds good, to bury in the surface of the earth, is to bury in "the heart of the earth. This makes a very beautiful harmony with Matt. 12: 40, as well as many other passages of Scripture which I might here adduce, if necessary.

I am satisfied that a careful examination of the exegesis of the subject, as given by our brother, will convince any one, that it is out of harmony, out of accord with the principles contained in the statement of the apostle Peter, and to which he refers as proof of his position,—1 Pet. 3: 18, 19, 20.

The apostle here certainly refers to those Antediluvians who perished in the flood. Bro. Price's argument seems to favor the idea that the body and soul both go into the grave together, where they remain in one unbroken slumber until the resurrecting power of God is brought to bear upon them, causing them to awake out of their sleep. This,—as the brother seems to imply,—was done by "the Son of man" after his resurrection, and sometime during the forty days before his ascension, and that it took three days' and three nights' preaching to them to accomplish what Jonah did to the Ninevites, -cause them to repent,—and that this mission of "the Son of man" was fulfilled according to Matt. 12: 40, somewhere near the center of the earth.

This, if I understand our brother's exegesis of the subject,—is just what he gives in answer to the query, to "harmonize Matt. 12: 40 with Matt. 20: 19."

I can but think from the arguments and reasonings of the brother upon this subject, that, instead of proving a convincing argument against the skeptic and infidel, and against the literal truth of the Scriptures, it furnishes them with one of the most powerful arguments against their literal verity.

Now just what the brother means by the term "under world," I am unable to see. If he means some other world besides this globe upon which we live, and which lies somewhere "under" this, then I fail to see how he makes the subject apply to it at all.

I gather from this expression, "lower world," that our brother himself does not believe that those imprisoned spirits, spoken of in 1 Pet. 3: 18, 19, 20 were imprisoned in, or anywhere near, "the center" of the earth, as the argument would imply. In fact, I do not believe that the brother believes that those "spirits in prison," to whom Christ preached after his crucifixion, were in the earth at all, but were imprisoned in some other world, or, as he casually remarks, "in the lower world." If this be so, then I ask, "What becomes of all his theory of 'a harmony,' between Matt. 12: 40 and Matt. 20: 19?" It results, as I asserted in my three reasons for not accepting it, in an inconsistancy with itself. No one will attempt to deny that "the earth," spoken of in Matt. 12: 40 was this earth on which we live, and in which "the Son of man" was actually buried. Then, if it be a fact that this is not the place where those "spirits were in prison," to whom Christ preached, 1 Pet. 3, I ask again, in all sincerity, "What becomes of the theory on Matt. 12: 40?"

I have reviewed Bro. Price's position, not from a spirit of criticism, but as a seeker after truth, and with a feeling of brotherly kindness, and with the fond hope that he will regard it as such, and that all who may read it may weigh well our respective positions before deciding the issue.

BISHOPS AND DEACONS.

BY SARAH M. SAUNDERS.

PAUL, the chiefest apostle, was a man that was inspired, and spoke with the authority of the Son of God. When and where it was not convenient or practicable for him to go to the churches to preach and exhort, he sent written epistles containing the necessary instructions. Sometimes he dictated them, or the writing of them to some other person, as an amanuensis or secretary, yet his written instructions were just as legal and authoritative as though Paul had spoken them. It seems that he traveled from one city to another, and from one church or congregation to another, organizing and "setting in order the things that were needful."

Timothy appears to be one of his most trustworthy and useful helpers in the great work, and Paul considers him so obedient to his will that he calls him his "son in the faith," and pronounces a fatherly benediction upon him. "Grace, mercy, and peace, from God the Father, and Jesus Christ our Lord." 1 Tim. 1: 2. He then proceeds to write divers rules and regulations, which he wishes Timothy to strictly observe in organizing churches, and in equipping them with the necessary officials to enable the churches to successfully and harmoniously work for the building up of the Redeemer's kingdom or earth. In the beginning of the third chapter of his first epistle to his co-laborers, he says: "This is a true saying, If a man desire the office of a bishop, he desireth a good work." He then proceeds to enumerate the necessary qualifications of the man or men, desiring such a responsible position in the church. He names about ten virtues which such a one must possess, among which are these "vigilant, of good behavior, given to hospitality, apt to teach, patient, blameless. He must have a good report of them which are without: lest he fall into reproach and the snare of the devil."

He also, just as positively, sets forth some negatives, or vices, which it is absolutely necessary that he should NOT be,—"Not given to wine, (which might also include ale, beer and gin) not greedy of filthy lucre, not a novice (or one newly converted to the faith), lest being lifted up with pride, he fall into the condemnation of the devil." 1 Tim. 3: 1–7.

He then goes on and enumerates the qualifications of deacons, "Likewise must the deacons be grave, not double-tongued, not greedy of filthy lucre; holding the mystery of the faith in a pure conscience." "Even so must their wives be grave, not slanderers, sober, faithful in all things." 1 Tim. 3: 8–12.

He concludes with this injunction, "Let these also first be proved, then let them use the office of a deacon being (or if) found blameless," verse 10.

Paul could not have used language more easily understood, and so unmistakable in its application. He did not leave the matter of selecting church officials to mere family connections or preferences, but to the real need and for the good of the churches. If, after having given such minute instruction to his faithful evangelist, he had himself visited the churches organized, and had learned by personal intercourse with the members, that "Eld. A. is a habitual drinker of strong drinks," sometimes gets a little "too much;" "Deacon I. is the most penurious, tricky man in the community, and his wife, well, she is an infamous liar and slanderer," and "Deacon C. is the most two-faced (double-tongued) man I ever got acquainted with. He just talks to suit his own circumstances or conveniences. Why, I wouldn't believe his word under oath,"—what would be the verdict of the apostle in regard to the condition of such a church? Verily, he would not hesitate to pronounce judgment on them thus: "There is utterly a fault among you." 1 Cor. 6: 7. "Shall I praise you in this? I praise you not." 1 Cor. 11: 22. "Either your officials are not the right men in the right place, or your private members need some judicious discipline for backbiting."

SONGS OF THE BIBLE.

BY G. S. DILLING.

IN all ages and among almost every people of which history has given us any record, we find this blessed and soul-inspiring spirit of song.

From the most degraded to the most highly civilized nations of the world, we find them making manifest their poetic feelings through song.

There is no record so completely interlaced with poetic sentiment and musical spirit as is our beloved Bible.

From the first of Genesis to the end of Revelation, is to be found a series of most beautiful poetic sentiments.

When Moses, that time-honored and worthy leader, had brought the children of Israel out from the land of bondage, and God had so miraculously permitted them to cross the Red Sea, and thus be spared from the hands of Pharaoh's host, he gives vent to his feelings in thankful songs to God for their deliverance. Not only did Moses sing praises, but he required the Israelites to do likewise.

Again, when God by a miracle, through the hand of Moses, provides water for them in the desert, they sing praises to their Benefactor.

Just before Moses dies, he breaks forth in songs, praising God for his protection over him and his subjects, also for his mercy toward them, notwithstanding their sinful career. Following meekly the command of God, Moses went up to Mt. Nebo, there to view the land of promise and to die.

The mother of Samuel, after years of grief, was comforted in knowing that God had not forgotten her, but permitted her to be parent of a child, who was to become a great prophet and judge. As a token of her joy she, too, sends out her feelings in a song of praise and gratitude. This song we find recorded in 1 Sam. 2: 1-10.

We cannot, nor do we wish to, forget the many songs of the great Psalmist David. During his life he wrote much and on many occasions, so that we can find consolation in his writings for almost every condition of the human mind.

In the 9th, 14th, 18th, 59th, and 71st Psalms his expression of trust in God is clearly shown, and we might do well to follow in imitation, the man who lived "after God's own heart" Following the Psalms we have the Songs of Solomon and later the Lamentations of Jeremiah. These three are known as the lyric songs of the Bible. Of the latter we will speak later on.

As death draws nigh, David composes the great psalm recorded in 2 Sam. 22 and 18. Here he reviews to the Israelites the goodness of God through their entire life and history, beginning with their bondage. He tells them of his justice to them when they strayed into by and forbidden paths, and how he blessed them when they were obedient.

Immediately following this, we have the last of his psalms, which is recorded in 2 Sam. 23. How true are his words, as he says, "He that ruleth over men must be just, ruling in the fear of the Lord." It would be well for those who rule to-day to have David's saying as a motto by which to be guided in the administration of their authority.

Later in history we have Elizabeth and Zacharias giving vent to their feelings in praising God through their songs, which Luke has faithfully recorded.

Christ is born, and an angel tells the story to the shepherds in the fields, when there came a great song, sung by a host of heavenly beings, crying, "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men." This puts new inspiration into the hearts of the humble shepherds, and they sought the child of whom the angel spake.

After years of anxious waiting, the old father Simeon was permitted to see the "Salvation of God." Taking the child into his arms, he blessed it and sang praises to God for his love and mercy made manifest. He now asked that he might depart in peace since he had seen the "Lord's Christ."

We find that all the songs of which we have spoken are songs of joy and gratitude; either because of victory, or in acknowledgment of a gift from God. There is still another class of songs, which are the expressions of sorrow, from sin or defeat.

Jeremiah, the great prophet, who plead so earnestly with Jerusalem to return to God, breaks forth in Songs of Lamentation, because of the sinful condition of Israel. Again, those who will be lost, will, too, have to sing doleful songs to express their feelings at being lost, beyond the which, "mercy cannot reach them and hope is a stranger."

We see that the great object of lyric poetry is to express our own emotions and inmost feelings, not only to benefit ourselves, but to give new inspiration to those about us.

This desire to please the ear seems to be outriding the primary motive of song,—that of giving vent to our feelings, and is filling, yes, already has filled our churches, not with spiritual songs in which all partake, but with anthems, perhaps of a worldly character, which are sung by a few simply to bring out the musical beauty and harmony, and only appeal to the aesthetic nature of man. Let us remember, that when we sing, we do as did the fathers of Israel,—sing with the spirit and understanding. Let us not, by careless singing, blaspheme the name of our Father in heaven, but receive a blessing for having sung.

In this way the prosperity of the church will be increased, and at the end of time, the prophecy of Isaiah be fulfilled where he says, "And the ransomed of the Lord shall return and come unto him, with songs of everlasting joy upon their heads. They shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall pass away."

Then, too, we can realize the true worth of the song, sung by the angels at Christ's birth.

The Revelator tells us that "the redeemed of heaven shall sing a new and everlasting song," perhaps a song, like that sung by angels, a song of gladness. "The song of Moses, . . . and the song of the lamb, saying, Great and marvelous are thy works, Lord God Almighty, just and true are thy ways, thou King of saints."

May our lives be such, that we may sing praises to God not only on earth, but in heaven, where none need ever be idle, but continually sing praises in the name of our Blessed Master.

A NOVEL DOCTRINE.

BY A. HUTCHISON.

SOME time ago we were permitted to listen to a man delivering a discourse from the text, "I am the vine, ye are the branches." He designated Christ to be the Vine, and the various church organizations to be the branches. He named a number of these churches, with a brief synopsis of what each taught and practiced. He then turned to your unworthy brother, and said, "Here is Bro. Hutchison, who represents a church about which I have said nothing yet. While all these different churches are performing their part in the great drama, the church which Bro. Hutchison represents, is also doing her part, and in a noble manner at that." He further continued by saying, "This church does several things which the rest of us do not, such as washing one another's feet as a church ordinance, and they also celebrate the Eucharist in connection with a love-feast, and on these occasions and also at other times, they salute each other with a kiss of charity. All of this," he said, "is perfectly right, for these things are all found in the Book. And it is entirely right for them to do these things,—for this is their part."

He still further continued, by saying, "The other churches don't need to do these things,—they do their part in something else, and in the final reckoning day we will get credit for what they are doing, and they will get credit for what we are doing, and the aggregate will show up full and complete."

Now if any of you who may chance to read this scrap, can conceive of a nicer arrangement to suit the fine-haired class, then I admit that you are ahead of me. But we can see at once what our part is. The world at large, seems to recognize the fact that it is right for us to keep the Lord's commandments, and they further admit that there are very precious promises connected with the keeping of these commandments, but I never knew before that any one held the idea, that the other churches would get any reward for what the Brethren are doing.

We took the liberty of telling the man how the Book reads. It says, "For we must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ; that every one may receive the things done in his body, according to that he has done, whether it be good or bad." 2 Cor. 5: 10. Not only churches, but individuals, will have to answer to the Great Judge of quick and dead, and many will expect a reward, and be sadly mistaken. This will not be confined to the non-professor, but to the professor as well, and even to such as have claimed to do, or have done, "wonderful works in the name of Jesus." I am glad that the Gospel is individual in its application, and I am glad that it is our part to keep the commands of Jesus, for there is a glorious promise in connection with the keeping of the commandments.

THE DOOR.

BY JACOB ETTER.

CHRIST says: "He that entereth not by the door into the sheepfold, but climbeth up some other way, the same is a thief and a robber." John 10: 1.

There are numbers of people outside of the fold of Christ, looking into the church, but not venturing to enter in. Why is this? It is because the door is too small and the road too narrow. If the Good Shepherd had made the door wide enough for men and women to pass through with all their vanity, numbers would be in the church that are not. Christ says, "For whosoever exalteth himself shall be abased, and he that humbleth himself shall be exalted."

The Apostle Peter, in writing to his brethren, exhorts them to be obedient children, "not fashioning yourselves according to the former lusts in your ignorance." 1 Pet. 1: 14.

In the days of Christ and the apostles, Christians were required to lay aside their pride and their fashions. The door was not wide enough for them to pass through with their superfluities. It is just as narrow now. The modern fashions cannot pass through it. The fashions of the present age are keeping numbers out of the church of Christ, for "strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Matt. 7: 14.

Some stay outside of the church because they see some inside who, they think, are not doing right. This is no reason why you should stay out. Will you do wrong because you see some in the church doing wrong? Why did Christ leave the glory he had with the Father, and why did he come down upon the earth and establish his church and suffer and die upon the cross if men and women could be saved outside of his church? Why all this labor and suffering? Is it reasonable that God would do all this and then save people upon their own conditions?

Dear reader, you must come inside if you want to be saved. There is a work to do that cannot be done outside of the church.

Be sure that you enter in by the door. Do not become excited and climb up some other way. If you do, you might just as well stay outside. If you enter into a church that does not obey all of Christ's commandments, how can you obey them?

You can not wash your brethren's feet if they will not practice it. You cannot salute your brethren with a holy kiss, if they do not believe in it, for "whosoever shall keep the whole law and yet offend in one point, he is guilty of all." Jas. 2: 10. Be sure that you enter in through the door.

No one was ever excused for staying outside because some one inside did wrong. This did not keep people out of the church in the days of the apostles. They entered in large numbers. On the day of Pentecost three thousand came in one day. They did not try to be saved by staying outside. They did not climb up some other way; they came in through the door. Peter said unto them, "Repent and be baptized, every one of you, in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost." Acts 2: 38.

Some will try to make men and women believe without obeying all that is required in Acts 2: 38. In one place we read that "Satan is going about like a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. He has entered into the brewers and rumsellers of our land, and is roaring like a lion, seeking whom he may devour. God grant that there may be enough Christian temperance workers, so that the rum power may be overcome! Then we will have a nation of sober men and women, who will be prepared to hear the truth of the Gospel and practice it in their lives. Oh, for more of the love of God in all Christian hearts, that the walls of our Zion may be built up and a more living, spiritual worship be established! Then shall we see many sinners converted because Christians have a mind to work.

Not many of us have ever hurt ourselves working for the Master. There are many ways to work for the Lord. One good way is to visit brethren and friends, and if our conversation is in heaven, it is not hard to ascertain whether or not they have family worship, and if they have not, then introduce the same by asking some one in the family to read a lesson and thus set a good example. Unbecoming conversation or conduct does not agree with worship. It is injurious to the cause of Christianity and will leave a bad influence.

Another good work in which we can engage, is to work for the Mission and Tract Work. If a poor brother or sister gives fifty cents a year to this work, what ought our wealthy brethren and sisters do? If we would all do as well as the poor brother or sister, according to what we have, there would be an abundance of money.

The next thing of importance is to get the right kind of men to work,—men full of the Gospel truth and love,—men that would set a good example before the young and rising generation,—men that are an honor to the church and to Christianity. Then there might be much good done.

There are still some members of the church who do not take the church paper. Some of these brethren have large farms, but how is it in regard to the education of their children? They do not often get to meeting and it is no wonder if some of our children are wandering away from the fold. Fathers and mothers, are we discharging our duties? Have we good order at home? Do our children ever hear us pray? Do they see us reading our Bibles? Do they see us go with them to Sunday-school? Brethren, take your children to Sunday-school! Then do not sit back and say, "I am such a poor reader. I can not read well enough," but go into a class, have some one to teach you to read and then you can read to your children. Do this and make the home attractive. Talk much during the week about Sunday-school, have your children commit a few verses, and I am satisfied, by the time they are grown up, the most of them will have such a taste for church and Sunday-school that they will, early in life, become members of the church. This is pleasing to the Lord.

I was forcibly impressed with the idea of prayer in visiting among the different classes of Christian professors, and in almost every family I found the family altar, and the children were found to engage in the solemn exercises of their Divine Master. In the evening and morning the children were called around the family altar, a Scripture was read, and all fell upon their knees in prayer. It is no wonder those children are so tenacious and fixed in principle that they will not change from the early training in childhood days. Paul says, "Bring up your children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." I fear that some parents are losing sight of the Bible training. Hear what Moses was commanded to do: "Thou shalt teach them diligently unto thy children, and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house and when thou walkest by the way, and when thou liest down and when thou risest up." The Israelites were commanded to teach the law to their children, and teach them diligently. How about the Gospel? Do we teach it diligently? Do we pray often and teach our children to pray and to bow with us in prayer?

Some parents are very anxious about their children and would like some one to talk to them about the future state. Perhaps a little more care bestowed upon them while young would have gained them. I wonder how some fathers and mothers will feel in the day of judgment when their children will say, "I never heard my father or mother pray." Prayer is the Christian's native air; a fish cannot live outside of water, neither can a Christian live a godly life outside of prayer. Daniel and David would come before God three times a day in prayer. We need our regular meals to give us physical strength. We must go to God regularly in prayer to get spiritual strength.

MISSIONARY OUTLOOK.

BY GALEN B. ROYER.

A text for a missionary sermon:—Look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest. John 4: 35. From Canada, New York, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, different parts of Texas, Indian Territory, Arkansas, Kansas, Colorado, Nebraska, California, Oregon, Idaho, Washington, Dakota, Denmark and Sweden, yea from all parts of the earth come the calls to the Board, "Can you not send us a preacher?" Is not the harvest ripe?" Who is willing to be reapers? Let us not only pray that the Lord of the harvest may send reapers, but let us make ourselves willing to be some of them.

WHEN I meet a professor of Christianity who is opposed to missionary work, I desire to follow him to his home and see what he is doing there. If I find him deeply concerned in the affairs of his congregation, looking well after its prosperity, willingly sacrificing time and means for its growth, diligently studying God's Word daily, and devoutly praying for his own and his neighbors' children, I, at least, think him serious in his opposition. But if I find him working himself, his hired hands and his horses early and late six days out of the week, hoarding up his wealth, staying at home on Sunday, or going to church and nodding during services, giving stingily to the work of his church, I conclude, and I believe justly too, that his opposition to mission work, based on the plea that we have all we can do at home, is very far from sincerity.

A great command: — Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature. Mark 16: 15.

A needed prayer: — O Lord, revive thy work in the midst of the years. Heb. 3: 2.

A responsible position:—I have a stewardship entrusted to me. 1 Cor. 9: 17.

A safe investment: — Lay up for yourselves treasures in heaven. Matt. 6: 20.

A grand promise: —My word shall not return unto me void. Isa. 55: 11.

A sweet consolation:—Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Matt. 28: 19.

A glorious hope:—They that sow in tears shall reap in joy. Ps. 126: 5.

"AS YOU GO PREACH."

CHRISTIANS should habituate themselves to the practice of doing good as they pass along in business life. While on business tours we should drop seed in all opened furrows by the wayside. Such opportunities open and shut very rapidly. We meet a person into whose mind we can lodge a good seed. Drop it in. It may take root and grow up into a tree in whose branches the birds of joy will sing. Sow beside all waters. It was an old habit among the people of Spain when they ate a peach to plant the seed with the foot. By this custom, the whole country was filled with peach-trees bearing the luscious fruit. So Christians should drop seed thoughts, kindly words, and sunny smiles, as they pass to and fro through the world. A traveler once carried an acorn in his pocket and dropped it in a treeless region. From that acorn came a forest of oaks, out of which ships were built to sail around the world. Carry with you some of the Brethren's tracts and distribute them. Send us names of parties to send MESSENGER samples to. Let us do all we can to scatter the good, and we will see the fruits by and by.

WHAT HAS IT COST YOU?

THE Missionary Herald tells of a Scotch woman whose practice it was to give a penny a day for missions, to whom a visitor gave a sixpence to procure some meat, on learning that she had not lately enjoyed that luxury. She thought to herself, I have long done very well on my porridge; so I will give the sixpence also to God.

The fact came to the knowledge of a missionary secretary, who narrated it at a missionary breakfast. The host and his guests were profoundly impressed by it, the host himself saying that he had never denied himself a chop for the cause of God. He therefore instantly subscribed £500 additional, and others of the party followed his example, till over £1,000 was raised before they separated. This was equal to about $5,000. That was a good sum to raise at the breakfast table.

It is probable that this good woman's sixpence was larger in the sight of God than the thousand contributed by these rich people; for she gave of her poverty, and they out of their abundance. This is a good illustration of the power of example. There is nothing so fruitful as self-sacrifice.

GALEN B. ROYER, Sec.

"MENTAL activity is better than mental fulness. An inquiring mind is worth more than a mind that is satisfied with its attainments. Hence it is that a preacher or a teacher who sends his hearers away with a purpose of knowing more about the subject in which he has newly interested them, has done more for those hearers than if he had given them all the information on that subject that could be desired. When a man's stomach or mind is full, he feels like taking a nap."

The Gospel Messenger

Is the recognized organ of the German Baptist or Brethren's church, and advocates the form of doctrine taught in the New Testament and pleads for a return to apostolic and primitive Christianity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and maintains that Faith toward God, Repentance from dead works, Regeneration of the heart and mind, baptism by Trine Immersion for remission of sins unto the reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, are the means of adoption into the household of God,—the church militant.

It also maintains that Feet-washing, as taught in John 13, both by example and command of Jesus, should be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper, instituted by Christ and as universally observed by the apostles and the early Christians, is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening or after the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ.

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That the principle of Plain Dressing and of Non-conformity to the world, as taught in the New Testament, should be observed by the followers of Christ.

That the Scriptural duty of Anointing the Sick with Oil, in the Name of the Lord, James 5: 14, is binding upon all Christians.

It also advocates the church's duty to support Missionary and Tract Work, thus giving to the Lord for the spread of the Gospel and for the conversion of sinners.

In short, it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discords of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe.

Mount Morris, Ill., - - - - July 7, 1891

BRO. CHAS. BROWN, of Thomas County, Kans., was ordained to the eldership a few weeks ago.

BRO. B. B. WHITMER'S correspondence may seem lengthy, but it shows what hardships must sometimes be endured by our Western preachers.

SISTER LIBBIE HALL reports that one more was recently added to the Swan Creek church, Ohio, by confession and baptism, and also one restored that had formerly wandered away. The Good Lord will bless the returning ones as well as those who confess his name in baptism.

BRO. G. W. HARMON, of Berryville, Carroll Co., Ark., writes that he is located in the northern part of the State, very much isolated from the church, and would be pleased to have some of our ministers call and preach in his neighborhood. Some of our missionaries might make a note of the call.

BRETHREN George S. Arnold and George W. Leatherman, of the Beaver Run church, West Virginia, have been ordained to the eldership.

BRO. P. A. MOORE, of Roanoke, Ill., who, with his wife, has been spending several months in Southern California, has just returned to his home. He expects to visit Nebraska shortly and go to Virginia sometime in the fall.

THE Evangelical Visitor, published in the interests of the River Brethren, has been removed from White Pigeon, Michigan, to Abilene, Kans. It is one of the neatest printed exchanges coming to this office, and is a credit to that respectable body of people, who so greatly resemble us in faith and practice.

THE Full Report is now out, and mailed to all those who have ordered it. It will be found about as complete as any Report that we have sent out, and deals with questions of special interest to the general Brotherhood. We still have a few copies left, and can fill orders at 25 cents each; 6 copies, $1.25; 12 copies, $2.50.

LAST week we stated that Eld. Abraham Shepler, of Peabody, Kans., was not expected to live. We have since learned that he died June 19. While it is sad to give up those we hold most dear, it is, nevertheless, a consolation to know that they have gone to a better land. Let this be a consolation to the bereft family.

IN a private letter from Mexico, Ind., Bro. Frank Fisher says: "Health is good in the Old Folks' Home now. We have had some sickness and one death. Some of the old people are quite feeble. Our church is now prosperous,—full of work and spirit. Sunday-school is well attended, averaging over two hundred pupils."

WE wonder if any of our readers have failed to read the beautiful poem that appeared on second page of last issue, entitled, "My Ideal," by sister Gertrude A. Flory. Mothers, do not fail to read it if you have not already done so. It is all good, but the first half of the second stanza, and the last half of the closing stanza are gems.

WE regret to learn that Bro. William Funk, of Jennings, La., has passed away. He died June 17, at the age of seventy years. He was a minister, and very much needed in the Great South. We can but extend our feeble sympathies to the bereft ones, praying that the Lord will raise up others to take his place in the work of the church.

THOSE who have not been using our Quarterlies in their Sunday-schools because the lessons were in the Old Testament, will now please bear in mind that for the remainder of the year the lessons will be in the New Testament, beginning with the "Word Made Flesh" for July 5th, and ending with the "Risen Christ and his Disciples" for the last lesson in the year. We think the line of study will be found both interesting and profitable.

WE have just printed a new edition of the Brethren's Hymn Book, and all orders are being promptly filled. The books are neatly printed and substantially bound, and as cheap as books of this class can be had anywhere. The arabesque binding is only 40 cents, post-paid. This is certainly low for a book containing over 550 pages. We think our readers can have no reason whatever for complaining in the least about the price of our Hymn Books. They are certainly in the reach of the poorest. For further particulars concerning prices and styles of binding see next to the last page of this issue.

THE Second District of Virginia has appointed a committee to raise funds for the purpose of establishing a Home for the homeless. The move is a good one, and we heartily commend it. See the article "Home for the Homeless," on another page of this issue.

CHURCHES in Northern Illinois, contemplating offering a location for the Old Folks' Home, should have their application before the Trustees by July 15, with the best inducements they can offer. It is an important work and deserves our earnest efforts and sympathies.

ELD. JONAS HARLEY, one of our aged German ministers, in Montgomery County, Pa., has gone to his long home. He was regarded as a preacher of ability, well read in the Scriptures, and a pillar in the church. What is our loss is his great gain. One by one the aged fathers are gathering on the other shore.

ELDER Samuel Murray, of River, Ind., writes that their feast passed off very pleasantly, June 23rd, though they had no ministerial help from abroad. He further states that there were a few mistakes in his letter of a few weeks ago. He is eighty-five years instead of eighty-four as was printed, while his wife's age should have been seventy-one years instead of seventy. We regret mistakes, but in this case our printers followed copy.

RECENTLY the members living near Esterly, La., held their first church meeting. Seventeen were present and four absent. They decided to have a love-feast August 15, at which time Bro. Jas. R. Gish is expected to be present and form a regular organization of the little flock. Eld. S. A. Honberger, our missionary, was called upon to preach the funeral of Bro. Wm. Funk, at Jennings, La., June 19. We are glad to know the members are much built up in Louisiana, and pray that they may continue to increase in strength.

BRO. J. G. ROYER returned last week from the South Waterloo church, Iowa, where he had been holding a series of meetings. He reports a very pleasant trip, saying that he always enjoys a visit among the Waterloo Brethren, and especially did he enjoy this trip. The church is in an excellent working condition, full of zeal and Christian activity. He held meetings of evenings, with good congregations and the very best of interest, resulting in five additions, and prospects of others. He also visited Eld. E. K. Bueghly and companion, and had a pleasant little prayer-meeting with them. Bro. Bueghly and wife are getting quite old and feeble, and can not be long for this world any more, yet they were cheerful and hopeful, longing for the pleasant greeting awaiting them on the other shore.

THE Brethren in Denmark and Sweden have a hard struggle of it, for they have the State church against them with all of its wealth, learning and influence, and yet they are prospering. Certainly the brethren and sisters in America, as well as those across the great deep, have reasons to thank God and take courage, for it is evident that the work is prospering, and we need not be weary of giving when we see the cause prospering. This spring Bro. Olsson, the elder of the church in Sweden, moved to a new place near Wanneberga. Since April 15 five have been added to the church at that point, and four others living some distance from there. This makes a total increase of nine in less than two months. Is not the Lord answering some of the prayers of his people? Do we not have reason to give still more liberally so that the cause may be pushed more vigorously?

ELD. JOHN FORNEY, of Abilene, Kans., has a touching epistle in this issue. He feels that his pilgrimage is well nigh ended, and that soon the Good Master will call him up higher. Bro. John has been a hard worker for the cause in the West, having located in Kansas at an early day. He is one of the old brethren with a young heart, and will long be remembered. May he be spared many years yet for the Master's vineyard!

THE Committee, sent by the Annual Meeting, to the Cook's Creek and Beaver Creek churches, Roanoke County, Virginia, have completed their work after a session of four days. They, officially, write us for publication, that their report was accepted by two hundred and sixty-eight members and rejected by only nine. So far as the Bridgewater school is concerned, they report that no charge against the Principal was sustained further than what had been previously made satisfactory, hence nothing further was demanded of him by the Committee. It is to be hoped that this will be the final, and very satisfactory settlement, of what was feared might prove a very serious difficulty.

THE Writing Clerk has placed on our desk a very neatly printed copy of the Minutes of the Annual Meeting for 1891. It contains sixteen pages of solid printed matter, much of it being of more than ordinary importance to the Brotherhood. The deferred matter deserves careful study, in order that the delegates may be prepared to act understandingly when these questions come up next year. Some of the queries and answers deal with questions that should concern all. The Missionary and Tract reports should be carefully studied. All their receipts and expenditures are stated, so that every donor may see what has been done with every cent of money received. The reader often passes over these reports too hastily. Study every part of the reports, analyze them, and especially consider what each State is doing, and in what way some of the States, and even all of them, may be induced to do still more in behalf of the missionary cause. The Minutes are being mailed as fast as called for by the Districts, and we trust that a copy may find its way into every family where there are members.

FROM a short letter in this issue, it would seem that Southern Kansas has her share of hinderances. Last year, she, with other parts of the West, suffered greatly in consequence of the drouth, and this year there is so much rain that the farmers may not be able to save their large wheat crop. Among ourselves we reason, "What a grand thing it would be for the country, if these rains could only have been divided up, part last year and a part this season!" But he who made man has thoughts that are above our thoughts, and it will be well for us to content ourselves with such things as we can honestly acquire, knowing, or at least thinking, that it will be all right in the end, if we do our duty towards God and man. The members in Southern Kansas are to be commended for their perseverance in clinging to their country and making the best of it. Our fathers in other parts of the now very prosperous portions of the West, underwent similar hardships, not only making a success of it, but laying a firm foundation for others to build upon. Let there be a strict adherence to the principles of the Gospel in Kansas, with an abiding trust in God, and he will arrange the seasons by and by, suited to the wants of the present as well as coming generations. A country is much as we make it. Hard work, intelligent management, and faith in God, with contentment at home, will make life a success in most any country.

SOME of the donors to the fund for Western sufferers have expressed a desire to have a list of all those to whom relief has been given, together with the amounts given to each applicant. After duly considering the matter, the Committee has decided to issue such a list in pamphlet form, as soon as the necessary arrangements can be made. Meanwhile, those of the donors, who may desire a copy of the circular, will please send their address, with stamp, to D. R. Price, Oregon, Ill. Please attend to this at once, so that the Committee may know how many copies to order.

THE Mission Board of Northern Illinois has purchased a lot at a cost of $1,600.00, on which to erect a meeting-house in the City of Chicago. It is located on the West side, between Madison and Lake Streets, about six miles west of the Courthouse. We trust that this will be the means of establishing a strong church in the City, for it must be evident that a good work may be done among the people there. And then we must do more city work. In the apostolic times strong churches were established in all the leading cities where they could reach the people. In fact, the apostles made city work a specialty. They did very little work in the rural districts, for the simple reason that they could accomplish more good by first establishing churches in the cities. In those days the people lived principally in cities and villages, and had all their places of worship in these centers of population. Of course it is different now. The population is divided up between the country and towns, and we should give equal attention to both, for the purpose of reaching the people. The tendencies now are towards villages and cities more than years ago, and our people will find it to their advantage to begin to look more seriously towards these places, with a view of locating our meeting-houses where the people are to be found. It cannot be expected that we are going to succeed with all our city work from the start. We have made mistakes in that class of work in the past, and may possibly make others in the future. But that should not deter us. We must push the work until we acquire the best method possible for doing city work, and while we are learning, it will be well for us to give due consideration to those who have had experience in that class of work, and also inquire into the wants of city churches.

TRINE IMMERSION.

Will you please answer the following question: Have we any evidence in history of the practice of trine immersion, earlier than Tertullian, or the close of the second century?

A. H. EMMERT.

TERTULLIAN was born about A. D. 160, or sixty years after the death of the apostle John. He wrote near the close of the second century, and very distinctly mentions trine immersion, and also gives the great commission as authority. A few years beyond Tertullian, was Clement of Alexandria, who also makes a clear mention of the same form of baptizing. Still beyond Clement we have Justin Martyr, who was born about the year that St. John died, and wrote A. D. 140. He had traveled very extensively before he wrote his works, and of course was familiar with the manner of baptizing in all parts of the East. He says: "Then we bring them to some place "where there is water, and they are baptized by "the same way of baptism by which we were bap-"tized, for they are washed in the water in the "name of God the Father, Lord of all things, and "of our Savior, Jesus Christ, and of the Holy "Spirit."—Campbell on Baptism, page 181.

So clearly and evidently does this language refer to trine immersion, that Mr. Reaves, who translated Justin's works into the English, says concerning the above passage: "The candidate was thrice plunged under water, at the naming of the three persons of the Blessed Trinity."

In Acts 17: 34, mention is made of Dionysius, the Areopagite, who is presumed to have been converted by Paul about A. D. 50, and became the first bishop of the church at Athens. Several documents are ascribed to him, and yet it is a matter of dispute among the learned, whether he ever wrote either of them. Should future investigations make it clear that Dionysius really did write what is credited to him, it will become a strong point in favor of trine immersion, for he says: "The symbolic teaching, therefore, mystic-"ally instructs him, who is baptized according to "the sacred rite, to imitate by the three immer-"sions in the water, the death and the burial for "three days and nights of Jesus the Life-giver, "for it is conceded to men to imitate him." This quotation may be found in "Chrystal's History of the Modes of Baptism." It traces trine immersion to the middle of the first century. Whatever may be said concerning the genuineness of the quotation, it must be conceded at least, that it is in perfect harmony with all ancient history on that subject. On this point there can be no reasonable doubt among men who are willing to listen to the united voice of early Christian history.

Just before he took his departure from the earth, Christ gave to his disciples the great commission, saying, "Go ye therefore, and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Matt. 28: 19.

This language teaches trine immersion so clearly that not one ancient historian has ever said anything to the reverse. Every one of them, without any exception whatever, when explaining the meaning of the commission, respecting the mode of baptism, says it teaches trine immersion. As a sample of what they say, we give the language of Chrysostom, Bishop of the church at Antioch, and one of the most profound Greek scholars of ancient times. He wrote about the fourth century, and had at his command every conceivable facility for ascertaining the apostolic method. He says, "Christ delivered to his disci-"ples one baptism, in three actions of the body "when he said to them, 'Go teach all nations, "baptizing them in the name of the Father, and "of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost.'"—Quinter and McConnell Debate, page 28.

This is the testimony of an accomplished scholar, who was bishop of a church, founded by the apostles themselves; a church that never changed in her mode of baptizing, from the time it was organized till long after the death of Chrysostom.

In still further confirmation of the above, we beg to state, that there is no record that the formula of baptism, as given in Matt. 28: 19, was ever used at the administration of single immersion until about 600 years after the death of Christ. Single immersion was first introduced by a man known as Eunomius, about the year A. D. 360. It was then administered in the name of the Lord Jesus only. For further proof concerning the origin of single immersion, we refer the reader to Bro. Quinter's little tract, entitled "The Origin of Single Immersion," published by the Brethren's Tract Work, Dayton, Ohio; price, 2 cents, or $1.50 per hundred.

J. H. M.

WHEN ORGANIZED.

If thought expedient, please answer the following question in the MESSENGER: When, where, how and by whom was the original church of Christ organized, and for what specific purpose? J. HENRY SHOWALTER.

THE original church of Christ never was organized in the sense that we speak of organizing. John the Baptist, by his preaching, called out a people from the world, but we have no intimation that they were ever organized in any sense. They were simply known as John's disciples, but such a thing as an organization was unknown among them. John, however, taught his disciples to believe on Christ, who was to come, and in this manner prepared them to receive him. When Christ did come, and commenced preaching, hundreds believed on him, and at once became his followers, or disciples. The very moment they became his disciples, through faith and obedience, they were members of his body, in his church, he being the divinely-appointed Head. He was the Head from the very beginning, and all who united with him became members of his body. These persons were born into that relation with Christ, they were baptized into Christ, and put on Christ. These new-born creatures, who were baptized into Christ, constitute the church. This church, the body of Christ, enlarged as the saints, or disciples, increased in number. This was the original church, and dates its origin from Christ, the Head. The number of disciples greatly multiplied, until, perhaps, thousands believed on him. All of these, who thus believed, and were baptized into Christ, were members of this original church. It spread all over Palestine more or less. It was the one church for all believers.

But it was never organized in any formal manner: in fact it needed no organization. It was the church of Christ without undergoing any additional act to make it such. There is nothing in the New Testament to convey the idea that it was ever organized. We learned that Christ selected men to aid him in the preaching of the Gospel, first the twelve, and then the seventy, but there is no account that he ever organized the believers into a church, or ever set up a church in a formal manner. It needed no setting up of the kind; Christ was the head, and just as fast as the people became united to him they became his body. First small, then large, and still larger it grew. Thus, there was but one Christian church and that was the general church.

But after the ascension of Christ it became necessary to organize the disciples into local congregations for church work, and this is the only organizing that was done. There was a local church at Jerusalem, and at scores of other points. These were only parts of the one general church. It is proper to talk of organizing local churches or congregations, but to talk of organizing the general church is to talk without right consideration. In looking at this question we are too much inclined to observe the manner of forming human organizations, and not to take into consideration the fact that he who was divine was above the necessity of copying after anything human. We again assert that the only organizing about the whole affair is the organizing of local congregations. The general church is the body of Christ on earth, composed of pardoned believers, and for the specific purpose of saving the people from their sins, and enabling them to attain unto eternal life. When, where, how and by whom organized has been fully explained in the simple idea, that the church, a body of Christ, has existed from the very moment that men and women, by the new birth, put on Christ.

We are not certain when the local church at Jerusalem was organized. It may have been shortly after Pentecost or at the time. The organization, however, was simply a local one, and was so regarded. The object of these local organizations is for harmonious and convenient church work. Local churches are like so many families, instituted for family government, comfort, enjoyment and general as well as local convenience. One may belong to the general church and at the same time not be connected with a local congregation. All over Palestine were those who were members of the general church prior to the ascension of Christ, but sometime after that they were grouped into local churches, in congregations, for necessary convenience and edification, and it was then that each member found his place in one of these local congregations. One like the Eunuch likely belonged to no local congregation when he returned to his home in Ethiopia, still he was a member of the church of Christ, the one general church.

For a right understanding of this subject, when reading the New Testament, one must keep the above facts in mind. We read of the seven churches of Asia. These were local congregations, organized in their respective places, and took their names from the place where they were located. In Matt. 18, Christ says: "Tell it unto the church." Here again is meant the local church. But when he says "On this rock will I build my church" (Matt. 16: 18) we must understand that reference is had to the general church. In Acts 8: 1, it is said, "There was a great persecution against the church which was at Jerusalem." By this is meant the local church. Possibly the church at Jerusalem was the first local church that was formally organized, but the organization was local and not general. It in no manner affected the saints at Capernaum or any other point. So far as local consideration was concerned the local church at Jerusalem would date its existence from the time of its organization, but the general church dates its origin from Christ, the Head and Founder. To him the porter opened the door of the old Jewish fold; he called his sheep by name, Peter, John, James, etc., led them out and they became the sheep of his flock, and he the Bishop of their souls. And thus onward goes the stone, cut out of the mountain without hands, and will continue until it fills the whole earth. Dan. 2: 34, 35. J. H. M.

WE begin to wonder if the Russians are really coming to their senses a little. The following from the Christian Standard would seem to indicate that they are: "The Jewish Rabbis in Russia have ordered a day of fasting and prayer and intercession against persecution in the principal cities. Meanwhile the musicians and actors in Berlin are preparing for a grand summer festival for the benefit of the Jewish refugees. The expulsion of the Jews from Moscow has been attended with great severity, and they were hurried out without being permitted to settle up their business. This so incensed wealthy Jews in St. Petersburg and elsewhere that they are preparing to leave and carry as much of their wealth as possible. It is reported that the Czar has so taken alarm at last as to interpose for the mitigation of the barbarity with which the work of expulsion has been carried on."

JUNE 6, Bro. D. E. Brubaker, of Mt. Morris, Ill., commenced meetings here. He held meetings every night during the week; also one day meeting. On Sunday, June 14, we met at the water, after morning service, where one was received into the church by baptism. May she ever remember that Christ has said, "No one has left father or mother, sister or brother for my sake and the Gospel's, but shall receive an hundredfold now in this time, and in the end, life everlasting." Mark 10: 25–30. Meetings closed on Sunday evening, June 14, with good interest and the best of feelings. Bro. Brubaker has made many warm friends here, both in and out of the church, who will be glad to welcome him back some time in the future. Brother and sister Bullard, of Clark County were with us part of the time, and felt well paid for their ride of fifty miles by private conveyance, in order to meet with us. They greatly desire some one to come and preach for them. Here is a large field for mission work and we think the Board would do well to send some one there to preach the Gospel. I have reasons to believe that a church could be built up there with less work than in many other places.

OUR Communion meeting of June 13 was one of the most enjoyable meetings we ever held here. The brethren and sisters from adjoining churches gave us much comfort. Among them was our dear sister Brumbaugh, of Davenport. She was accompanied by her two daughters, and brother and sister Hipes, of Iowa City. It renewed our Christian ties, as we had ofttimes surrounded the Lord's table with those dear sisters in the years gone by. Perhaps this was the last time for some of us in this world of sorrow, as our dear sister Brumbaugh is in her eighty-sixth year. Brethren from adjoining churches were, S. Flory, J. Snyder, Wm. Hipes, H. R. Taylor, and John Diehl.

At the feast we also held an election for a deacon. The lot fell on Bro. George Pfoutz, who, with his companion, was installed by Bro. Flory with much solemnity. He desires the prayers of the brethren and sisters that he may be fully qualified to help along in this great work.

The brethren wielded the Sword of the Spirit powerfully during their stay with us. On Sunday morning we had a children's meeting. Bro. Taylor addressed the children, and warned them of the dangers by which they are surrounded. He also urged the parents to bring them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. We, as a little band of pilgrims here, much desire the prayers of the brethren, that we be faithful to our calling! ELIZABETH GABLE.

Field Notes.

THE Mission Board of Southern Kansas having received a very urgent request for preaching in Butler County, arranged with me to go and labor for them as circumstances might require. I found the people anxious for preaching. Only two sermons had ever been preached among them by the Brethren, and no members are living near. I held a few meetings in February and every four weeks since. The interest continued to grow. As a result, on May 23 three young ladies (sisters) came to Monitor, to receive baptism and attend the Communion, the first they ever saw. To them it was "heaven begun." They returned home rejoicing. At our next meeting, June 13, our young sisters came out as good soldiers, with the proper prayer-covering, which was entirely new to most present. Its power was felt and to the sisters the cross was made lighter by the encouragement they got from their associates.

On Sunday two more expressed a desire to go with us. At 3 P. M., the appointed hour for baptism, many came to a beautiful stream and saw, for the first time, baptism administered by the Brethren. Tears were shed and a deep interest shown, and more seem very near. Let many prayers go up for the tender lambs and the cause at this place. GEO. E. STUDEBAKER.

A Sad Death.

How uncertain is life! In the hour we least expect it, death comes! On Tuesday morning the community was shocked by the sad news of the sudden death of Hanna Barnhart, the twelve-year-old daughter of Bro. A. B. Barnhart of our city.

On Monday evening, little Hannah, in her usual health, bade her fond parents good night with a kiss, and retired with her little sister to her room. In a short time all were asleep. The next morning the youngest daughter, Sudie, came down stairs saying, "Hanna won't get up."

A short time afterwards the mother thought to call her, and going to the room, she still found Hanna asleep,—but asleep in Jesus! Oh! what a shock! Words cannot express the feelings of the family as they gathered around the bed, still thinking there might be life. But all was still; death had come in the silent hours of the night, and carried the spirit to the bright world above. It is thought that heart trouble was the cause of her death. The funeral services took place at 1 o'clock on Wednesday. Interment took place at the Broadfording cemetery, in presence of a large concourse of sorrowing relatives and friends. Her Sunday-school class, consisting of eight little girls, carried with them small bouquets of white roses, as the last token of their sympathy, and deposited them on her grave.

This has been a loud call to her class,—the first broken link by death and the first vacant seat. Oh, how sad was my heart this morning, when we gathered in the school-room to see the cloud hang over our little school. To the class I say, "This has been a loud call. You are all young, but not too young to die. Keep this in your memories and meet Hanna in heaven."

Funeral services were conducted by Eld. W. S. Reichard and Eld. Martin.

Sunday Morning Reflections.

IT is raining this morning, which debars us from attending Sunday-school or public preaching and our mind is busy meditating upon God's ways, which are far above our ways. While we are not permitted to go to services, yet we can commune with God just as well, for which we ought to be very thankful. "All things work together for good to those that love him." If we only had more of that confiding faith in Jesus and less doubt, the work would prosper far more than it does. How earnestly does Christ advise us to enter our closets when we want to talk to our Father! God enables us to put our whole soul and body to the work, in imploring his blessing and mercy upon the great work that is yet for the church to accomplish.

In the prayer that Christ taught us, which we commonly call "The Lord's Prayer," we say, "Thy kingdom come." The question arises: Are we prepared for his kingdom to come? Have we done all we can to bring souls to Christ and to prepare ourselves for his most excellent kingdom? The Gospel must be preached to every creature, and God has entrusted us with this world's goods, so that we may use those means judiciously for the preaching of his Word to our fellow-men. Surely we will be held responsible for the use we make of it.

We hear a great deal about foreign missions. That is all right, but let us not forget the heathen close at home. I venture the assertion that there are men and women not very far from our homes that never heard the Gospel preached. Oh, how great the responsibility upon God's children! Come, let us renew our energy in this noble and God-endorsed enterprise of mission work, and the reward of righteousness will be ours.

Much trouble could be averted if only all professed Christians would heed our Savior's advice, "If thy brother trespass against thee, go and tell him his fault between thee and him alone," etc. How many church troubles would be averted, and families remain united! We will be forgiven in the same proportion as we forgive an erring brother or sister. Let us all be children together in God's household! W. H. MILLER.

Notes and Jottings.

WIFE and I left for Annual Meeting May 21. Johnstown, Pa., was our first stop, and here we remained until May 27. Their feast at Walnut Grove, in the suburbs of the city, June 24, was a large, orderly meeting. The exercises seemed to be impressive. Their membership seemed to be an active, working band. Bro. David Hildebrand is the elder in charge, and seems to have a very congenial ministerial corps of ministers to aid him. The Progressive element that withdrew here was strong. As there was a heavy debt on the Center City house, the church allowed the Progressives to have the Center City house, they assuming the debt.

Our Brethren seem to have prospered since, built two houses and gathered quite a number of members. Their singing at their meetings is excellent. In Johnstown, as in many other places, there is need of carefully guarding the plain usages of the church.

The Brethren at Johnstown have written to us at different times for the last year, and we were glad that an opportunity was afforded us to visit them, and form such a pleasant acquaintance.

In company with Bro. M. S. Newcomer, of Mt. Morris, Ill., we stopped off at Brownsville, Md., to attend their feast May 28. Here, though not acquainted, we soon formed a most pleasant acquaintance. Bro. Emmanuel Slifer is a superannuated elder here. He is infirm, and his sight is well nigh gone. I reminded him of the text he used at the old Rome church, Hancock Co., Ohio, thirty-two years ago: "Neither circumcision nor uncircumcision availeth anything but a new creature." He remembered well the visit and I was glad to find him faithful. The church here fully aims to walk in "the good old way."

The Annual Meeting at Hagerstown in 1891 had many pleasant things associated with it. The arrangements, upon the whole, were more satisfactory than any previous meeting held for some time.

There is a growing desire and I may say, aim,—to locate our Annual Meetings where there are permanent buildings. There are places offered in different parts where there are permanent buildings. Why not accept of such offers? What an amount of time, labor and terrible exposure is saved where there are permanent buildings!

If railroads could be prevailed upon not to run Sunday excursions it would render the Meeting much more pleasant. There being no excursion trains at Warrensburgh on Sunday, made the associations on Sunday very pleasant last year. To throw train-loads of sight-seers, idle gazers and pick-pockets upon our Meetings on Sunday, greatly burdens the Meeting, and is an injury to the cause. I. J. ROSENBERGER.

Our Trip to Mt. Morris.

FOR a number of years we were looking forth with fond anticipations to the time when we could visit Mt. Morris, the Brethren's school, the MESSENGER office, and the homes of those who are connected with the same. Having a son and daughter attending school there, also increased our longing to visit the place.

The way opened, and we boarded the train June 5. Next day we arrived at the Mount, guarded safely by the protecting hand of God. We were met by friends and taken to the home of Bro. D. L. Miller, where we had our home during our stay at this place. I wish to say, as we get better acquainted with brother and sister Miller, we learn that inside of their door many a one has found a home, not only inside of their door, but inside of their hearts as well. Their faces, ever beaming with love and sunshine, will be greatly missed as they take their long journey East. Many hearts were touched when he gave his farewell address.

We visited the school and had talks with a number of students, as well as with our own dear children. We find that all express themselves satisfied with the time and money spent at the school. There are so many interesting things going on that are intended to develop the mind. Many instructions are given, that will make lasting impressions, if they are heeded. To those who are undecided about sending their children to school, we can say this, As far as we have learned, we feel that you can spend your money to no better purpose than to send your children to school at Mount Morris. Here it seems the very atmosphere is filled with love and sunshine. Each one seems to be trying to help the other and make them feel at home. Ladies of other denominations have given us evidences of that fact; they say, as we saw and felt, that all are here on a common level, — the rich and poor are treated alike, all are equally welcomed, and, by the help of their kind instructors, they are lifted to a higher plane of life.

The surroundings are beautiful; they are all that nature could make them. The new building is completed. It is built plain and neat. Those who have an interest in the building may rest assured that there is no display for vain and outward show, but that all is convenient and commodious, for the purpose intended. We were permitted to hear the dedicatory sermon, which was impressive indeed. The Commencement Exercises, held in the New Chapel, were a success, and interesting to all.

We visited the MESSENGER office, which was very interesting to us. The MESSENGER is very dear to us, and with gladness have we read its pages, but now it is made dearer to our hearts, as we see the different apartments, see the busy hands and minds bent over their work, and become more acquainted with the editors and the other helpers. Many of the readers would appreciate the paper more, if they knew the great concern and anxiety experienced by those in charge in trying to give us wholesome, readable matter. Many perplexities they have to contend with, but we find them calm and composed, and enjoying their work. We find the home of our office editor a home indeed. His amiable wife is doing her part well, to help the good work along.

During the latter part of our stay we had the pleasure of assembling with the dear saints at the Silver Creek church, to partake of those sacred emblems, that remind us of the great assembly near God's throne. Thus ended our pleasant visit, and we shall ever remember it as one of the bright spots in the history of our life.

MANY thanks to those who responded to the call for help to buy a home for the poor. Do NOT send any more money to me, as I am overworked, body and mind, and must rest with "him who lay asleep on a pillow in the hinder part of the ship." I have the past few years distributed tracts in ten different States, and, the Lord willing, after a little rest in "the closet," I will again take up the work of distributing our tracts in isolated places, and especially among God's poor. Let us all pray Luke 21: 36 daily, for we have the full assurance in 1 Thess. 1: 5 that the faithful very soon will realize "hope changed to glad reality, faith to sight, and prayer to praise."

OUR love-feast occurred June 13. It was the most orderly, soul-refreshing season, that it has been our privilege to enjoy. Such was the verdict of all present. The brethren present were David Frantz, Jacob Ullery, M. J. McClure and A. Bowers. Bro. McClure officiated. There were about ninety members seated around the tables.

On Sunday morning brethren David Frantz and Jacob Ullery talked to the children. At 11 o'clock A. M. the large congregation present had the pleasure of listening to a very practical discourse, delivered by Bro. McClure from the words: "I am the light of the world." We have, in this part of God's moral vineyard, some that are young and strong in the service of God, and we pray that God will keep them faithful to their covenant until death. Others have labored long and their work will soon be done. The Lord be with them in their last days! BERTHA E. BARNHART.

A Baptism and Communion.

MAY 24, after our regular Sunday service, our hearts were gladdened by "Little Mary," youngest child of Bro. Lewis and sister Mary Brown, coming forward, to claim a place among God's children in his church. Mary is but ten years old, and seems so like one of "the little ones" whom Jesus blest, that we could hardly understand why she should receive baptism. However, her ready and intelligent replies to solemn questions convinced us, that she was a fit subject for the kingdom of Christ, as her knowledge of the way to do right was superior to that of many of riper years.

So, in the afternoon of the same day, she was received into church fellowship by baptism, which was administered by our elder, in one of the pretty, crystal lakes near our home. It was an impressive scene, long to be remembered. Seemingly, before such tender lambs of the fold, is a vast, prospective field of labor and usefulness in the Master's vineyard. God grant that Mary may ever be found about her "Father's business."

In company with several brethren and sisters, and our two ministers from the La Porte congregation, I attended the Communion in the St. Joseph church, near South Bend, Ind., which occurred June 12. It was a meeting long to be remembered by one at least. Here I met those dear to me by the ties of Christian love and former acquaintance, and some whom I had never met before. Among the latter were our aged brother, Dr. Sturgis, Bro. J. C. Murray and wife, of Nappanee, Ind., and sister Bowman, of North Manchester, Ind. I retain very pleasant memories of those short acquaintances, formed by a cordial greeting and a hearty farewell. O, how sweet it is to meet with those of like precious faith around the Lord's table, and join together in praising him in song. As I stopped in the song service, to listen to the sweet tones wafted heavenward, I wondered whether heaven's music could be more enrapturing, for surely my ears were never greeted by more melodious singing than on the memorable evening of June 12. It was certainly a very enjoyable Communion,—it was good to be there.

If these earthly meetings are so pleasant, oh, what must it be to meet with loved ones on the other shore, where farewells never more are taken, and parting is unknown! And if these feasts of love are so enjoyable here, what joy unspeakable and full of glory will fill our souls when we are permitted to partake of that glorious feast in the evening of the world, when the veil of mortality shall have been withdrawn and we behold our Jesus face to face! O, blessed hope! How it cheers our rugged pilgrimage, soothes our sorrows and enhances every joy!

Death of Eld. Jonas Harley.

ELDER JONAS HARLEY died at his home in the Indian Creek church, near Harleysville, Montgomery County, Pa., June 21, aged seventy-three years, four months and twenty-four days. His funeral was held on Wednesday, June 24, and was very largely attended. Services were conducted by brethren H. A. Price, Jacob Booz and Jonas Price, Sr.

Deceased had not been well all last winter and spring. He frequently suffered from attacks of heart-trouble, which became more frequent, weakening him, and finally developing dropsy, which was the cause of his death. He was in the ministry about twenty-five years, and a fluent German speaker. He was well read on matters of Scripture, and a deep thinker. His preaching often was deeper than some people could fathom. He was called a "deep man." He knew his end was coming, and seemed to be preparing for it. He leaves a bereaved widow, an only daughter, and a sister. JAS. Y. HECKLER.

A Home for the Homeless.

BY order of District Meeting, held at Mount Vernon, Augusta Co., Va., May 14 and 15, 1891, the following committee was appointed: M. Zigler, N. W. Berry, S. F. Miller, B. F. A. Myers and B. A. Myers.

They were authorized to make necessary arrangements to the best of their judgment, to raise funds by donations and by endowment bonds, and to locate a home for the homeless of the Second District of Virginia.

We, the above committee, have organized with the following officers: Michael Zigler, President, Broadway; S. F. Miller, Treasurer, Bridgewater; B. F. A. Myers, Secretary, Timberville, Rockingham Co., Va.

We request each elder or elders, in their respective districts, to work up the cause and preach a sermon to each of their churches to prepare the minds of the brethren and sisters for the work,—to be in readiness to meet each of the solicitors with cheerful hearts and liberal donations. If so, we can feel sure that a small part of our talents has been applied to a good purpose. 2 Cor. 9: 7. "God loveth a cheerful giver."

From the George's Creek Church, Pa.

WE, the members of the George's Creek church, Fayette Co., Pa., held our love-feast May 23 and 24. The weather prior to the feast was very dry. There had been no rain for nearly six weeks, but the rain did come two days before the feast, and gave us pleasant weather for our meeting. Our feast was one long to be remembered on account of the love manifested and the outpouring of God's blessings.

Our ministerial help were elders John H. Myers, from Markleysburg; Jeremiah Thomas, of Clifton Mills, Preston, W. Va.; N. W. Christner, from the Ten Mile church, Washington, Pa.

Bro. Myers preached for us Sunday forenoon; then left for other fields. Brethren Jeremiah and George Thomas stayed with us, and Bro. Jeremiah preached on Sunday evening to a full house and attentive listeners.

These meetings, in connection with our love-feasts, are times of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. We thank God that our church is prospering to the extent it is. We have passed through many scenes of discouragement, but the clouds are dispersed, and once more we are enjoying the bright sunshine.

Our Sunday-school is progressing finely under the leadership of our efficient Superintendent, S. C. Cover. LUCETTA H. DEBOLT.

Wayside Notes.

JUNE 6 was the time appointed for the feast in the Colby church, Thomas Co., Kans., a distance of sixty-five miles. On the morning of that day I was met by Bro. A. H. Partch at the depot, and soon we were on our way to his home, five miles south of Colby, where we met Eld. John Hollinger, of Russell, Kans.

At 10 o'clock was the time appointed for council. The members were nearly all present and all were found to be in peace and union. Services were again appointed for 3 o'clock, by which time Eld J. R. Garber and Bro. Throne, from Norton County and also Bro. John F. Cline, from Sherman County, were present. We had a profitable waiting before the Lord.

The examination services were appointed for 5: 30 P. M. Many of the responsibilities, resting upon the believers, were impressed with much solemnity. During the further services the brethren all labored faithfully and, we think, good impressions were made on the hearts of the lookers-on. The best of order prevailed. Most of the spectators never before saw such services. Next morning we met again for services. The elders of the North-western District of Kansas and Colorado had unanimously consented to the ordination of Bro. Charles Brown and it took place accordingly,—elders John Hollinger and J. R. Garver officiating. The services were most impressive and we truly hope that this much-needed work will prove a blessing. The writer, being the nearest elder, has had charge of this church since its first organization. We feel that Bro. Brown has entire confidence of all his members as well as all the officials of our District. The church also requested help in the deacon's office, and after the voice of the church was taken by ballot, it was found that the lot fell on our brother, A. H. Partch.

After the installation services the congregation was addressed by Bro. Garber, who preached from Heb. 4: 11. At 8 P. M. Bro. J. F. Cline spoke to us from 1 Tim. 4: 1.

On Monday, June 8, in company with Bro. Hollinger, we were conveyed to the U. P. R. R. station, eighteen miles distant, where we took passage for home, which we reached by 6 o'clock P. M., and found all well. Bro. Hollinger went on to Russell, Kans., his home.

Our stay at home was of short duration. June 11 we started, by private conveyance, to be with the saints in Scott County, a distance of eighty miles. We reached the hospitable home of grandpa and sister Dotzer, in the evening and early in the morning resumed our journey over the vast plains,—dotted here and there with heavy-laden and fine-looking wheat fields. By night we reached the home of brother and sister Finkenbinder, near the place of the feast. Next day, at 10 o'clock, we met for council and found that the annual visit had not yet been made. We then decided to do so at once, as nearly all the members were present. It was found that all were in peace and in favor of holding the feast. The necessary arrangements having been previously made, we met at 3 o'clock for preaching. Later on we again met for examination services, and as the writer was the only one present from a distance, he much appreciated the assistance of their home minister, Bro. Homer Ullom, who, though young in the ministry, seems willing to put his hand to the plough. We had a very fair audience, considering the sparsely-settled country. Some came all the way from Scott City—thirteen miles,—to witness the observance of the sacred ordinances of God's house. The best of order prevailed, excepting, perhaps, a little confusion at the time of supper.

Right here we take the liberty of saying that a great deal of confusion frequently occurs at Communions that might be avoided by employing a little system. Where churches have suitable rooms, much of the confusion that mars the peace of our solemn feasts may be avoided. We do not say this to reflect on the dear members in this church, as the feast was held in a school-house and they did the very best that could be done without any cooking facilities. While our labors here seemed arduous we greatly enjoyed the feast with these dear isolated members. It is at those and similar isolated places that we often find the most self-sacrificing, devoted hearts and willing hands to make the occasion enjoyable. Such we found at the above two feasts. Though both are located in the midst of absolute destitution, yet everything seemed plentiful and, as we thought,—even in profusion,—thus showing what a real self-sacrificing spirit can do with a willing mind. Suffice it to say that want was not once referred to and the peace of God seemed to dwell in the hearts of all.

June 14 at 10 o'clock we met for Sunday-school services. On account of the feast, we suppose, the gathering was a little late and thus we were unable to comply with the request of talking to their school. The time for public preaching having arrived, we spoke from 1 Tim. 4: 1; also in the evening from 1 Tim. 1: 15. This closed our labors at this place and we took the parting hand.

For the special benefit of the dear ones in Scott County, we give a short history of our homeward trip. We returned from the feast to Bro. Finkenbinder's for the night. Next morning the weather seemed unfavorable and at one time we despaired of starting, but shortly after we concluded to go at any rate. In less than three miles' travel we found our mistake. Heavy clouds gathered and soon the rain fell in torrents, accompanied by heavy peals of thunder and vivid lightning. We turned our course north-east, over the buffalo grass, as the roads were impassable. Thus we proceeded for more than twenty-five miles amid continuous rain. After 4 o'clock the rain ceased and we reached our destination, at grandpa and grandma Dotzer's, in safety.

After a refreshing night's rest we set out for the last but not the most pleasant end of our arduous journey. We had not been on the way more than a few miles until rain and storm again threatened. We became utterly lost, not even knowing the points of the compass. The clouds thickened and soon we found ourselves in one of the most terrific thunder-storms. Every moment we feared that our buggy would be taken by the gale. In the midst of this fierce raging of the elements of nature we were made to think of the power of the great God in whom we have our continual being.

While the wild elements were charging in all their ferocity, we were entirely overcome, and we felt as we never before felt during our past life of over fifty-eight years. But thanks be to the Great God who brought us out of it all in safety! All around us was an apparent sea of water,—so often longed for in this Far West. We sought a house that was in sight and were made welcome. Here we passed the evening and night. The man, next morning, piloted us on the right course for home, which seemed to us contrary to all that we knew, but we soon found that the man was right.

June 17 we reached home, wearied and tired from an eventful little journey. Every-where on our trip crops looked promising and people were cheerful and hoping for a good crop. The only pity is that in the destitute districts the people were too poor to procure seed wheat last fall. Thus a very small acreage was sown and mostly in neighborhoods where they had seed last year. We never saw a more encouraging season since we live in Kansas than the present and had the people the acreage, they certainly would obtain good crops. Wheat and rye are about matured. In many instances corn is standing in the water. The drouth of last year promises to be followed by a good harvest this year. All things are of God who sends the early and latter rains.

OUR NEW HOME.—Wife and I left Woodford County, Ill., last February and came to the Juniata church, Adams County, Nebr., to build up the cause of Christ in that and the adjoining country. Last Lord's Day, after preaching, I had the pleasure of leading two dear souls into the liquid stream, to be buried with Christ in baptism. May they ever be faithful!—Jacob J. Kindig, June 22.

FOUR ACCESSIONS. — At our regular council, June 13, Brethren Jessie Ronk, Frank Rose, Wilfred Harshbarger, John Himes and Wm. Hicks were elected and installed into the deacon's office. One man was baptized and a young sister withdrew from the church. Our Sunday-schools, which are doing good work, will be reorganized June 28th. The brethren are preparing to paper the audience room of our Bethel church-house. Three souls were baptized to-day and others are expected to come soon.—Charity Himes, Ladoga, Ind., June 21.

IN WORKING ORDER.—The Wichita church, Kans., is in fair working order. We have meetings in the city every alternate Lord's Day, and every Sunday evening. Brethren, travelling through, will find a welcome by stopping with us. —William Johnson, No. 1533 Orange Street, Wichita, Kans.

ABUNDANT SHOWERS.—South-eastern Kansas is having so much rain now that it is greatly feared the farmers will be unable to save their fine wheat crop. Corn is suffering badly on account of much rain. Much of it has received little or no cultivation. Creeks are overflowing their banks and doing much damage to crops.—L. Wolfe, McCune, Kansas, June 22.

SEVEN ACCESSIONS.—Since we sent the last report from the Spring Run church, we have had seven more accessions to the church, making thirteen in all, in 1891. Those who came last are young in years, with bright prospects for a long life in the service of Christ. There are others who, we hope, will soon be ready to make the good choice.—Christie H. Sunderland, Shank's Run, Pa.

NOTICE.—The report of a committee coming to Dayton, Ohio, has left the Brethren and others of the opinion that the committee is to the West Dayton congregation, instead of Beaver Creek. The Beaver Creek congregation has some members living in East Dayton, and to this place the committee was sent, and not to the West Dayton congregation.—Elmer Wombold.

FOUR ADDED TO THE FOLD.—Our feast, June 13 and 14, was a pleasant one. More communed than at any time previous. Brethren John Snowberger, from Colorado; J. S. Mohler, of Kansas, and other ministers, from the Dallas Center and Coon River congregations, broke unto us the Bread of Life. One was baptized at the time of our feast, two one week before, and one more applicant is to be baptized soon.—Samuel Badger, Panther, Dallas Co., Iowa.

PLEASANT LOVE-FEAST. The feast in the Oasis church, Ind., was held May 23. Brethren Joe Spitzer, Geo. L. Studebaker, Isaac Branson, and others, labored for us in word and doctrine. A large number of members communed and many spectators were present. Sunday morning after our love-feast brethren Wood and Holder were duly installed as ministers. Brethren Surfer and Plow were elected to the office of deacon. May these brethren be faithful to their calling!—Huldah Plow, May 23.

HOME AGAIN.—After seven and one-half months' visiting with the kind and much beloved brethren and sisters in Southern California, wife and I, by the grace of God, arrived safely at our home, in Roanoke, Ill. We found all well in the neighborhood except one brother and sister. Brethren, let your prayers go up to heaven in behalf of the afflicted. The church at this place is in good working condition, and the members all seem to be in peace with one another. We visited the Brethren at Tuhunga, Tropico, Covina and Lordsburg. God be praised and they rewarded by his grace, for their zeal and fervent labors in the cause of their Lord and Master. The churches are getting along nicely; they need help in the ministry, however. Brethren, who go to the coast, should visit the churches. It will comfort them, and do you good to meet God's children in California, for they live in a delightful land.—P. A. Moore, June 23.

"LET us never forget that every station in life is necessary; that each deserves our respect; that not the station itself, but the worthy fulfillment of its duties, does honor to man."

From Mansfield, Mo.

THE members of the Mansfield congregation, Mo., met June 14 in church council. Eld. J. T. Mason was with us. One was received by letter. Bro. Abram Tyson was advanced to the second degree of the ministry. An election was held for two deacons, which resulted in the choice of brethren James Keith and Ira Parrott.

At 9 o'clock Sunday morning we met for Sunday-school. We are glad to know that our brethren and sisters take an interest in the welfare of the young people, in teaching them something of our Blessed Jesus. Bro. Mason gave us a good sermon in the forenoon, and also in the afternoon.

We have a large field to work in, and our ministers are young in the cause of Christ. We need a good minister to move here and help carry on this grand work. Many precious souls are starving for the Bread of Life. Who will come and feed them with the true Gospel? The command is, "Go ye into all nations and preach the Gospel to every creature," and who will be to blame for the many who die without ever hearing the true Gospel preached? Brethren, think of these things, and come over into Macedonia!

NANNIE A. HARDMAN.

A Refreshing Season.

SUCH was the character of the love-feast, held on the evening of June 12, in the Wenger meeting-house, situated just outside the city limits of South Bend, Ind.

It was not the great number present that made it a good place to be, for there were, perhaps, less than a hundred and fifty members at the table, but love, that strange, mystic power, to which all other influences must yield, presided, and seemed to rule in every heart.

Most of the adjacent churches were well represented, which is always a pleasant feature in such meetings.

There were not so many ministers present as is common for this place, but the help in that line was abundant for all practical purposes. Bro. J. C. Murray, of Nappanee, Ind., officiated, assisted by brethren D. B. Sturgis, of Mulberry Grove, Ill., John Stretch and A. A. Manson, of the Pokagon church, Michigan, R. J. Shreve, of La Porte, Ind., and others, including the writer, from the churches near by.

The heart-cheering songs, mingled with love and holy reverence, were truly refreshing to the soul, and inspiring to the mind. Another commendable feature were the short speeches by the ministers, addressed almost exclusively to the members.

I am glad that our brethren are gradually getting to see the impropriety of discussing, at our love-feasts, the validity and essentiality of feet-washing, the Lord's Supper, the Holy Kiss, etc., at the time of their observance. The less said, from the beginning to the close of the exercises, beyond necessary instruction and encouragement of the members, the better in my opinion.

Bro. H. W. Kreighbaum is the elder in charge of this (St. Joseph) church, and, with an efficient corps of official helpers, seems to be keeping close to the old landmarks.

So again has passed another meeting of dear and tender associations with some of the Father's children, and with some of us, perhaps, the last this side of eternity. And if it is so cheering, in view of the better home beyond, to "sit together in heavenly places in Christ Jesus," but for a short hour or two, "oh what will it be to be there?" May God help us all to be faithful and fully prepared to meet at the great feast on the other shore!

THURSTON MILLER.

From Belleville, Ill.

JUNE 13 and 14 the brethren and sisters of the Belleville church again united together and had a love-feast. We were happily surprised on Saturday morning by the coming of our aged brother, John Forney, who gave us much wholesome food during the short time he was with us. Bro. Eli Renner, of Burr Oak, who is our elder, and Bro. Samuel Myers, of White Rock, were with us and gave assistance in the good work.

Bro. Forney officiated at the feast. We thought that, perhaps, it would be the last time we would be waited upon by this old father in Israel, as he is advanced in years.

We were glad to see our aged brother and sister Hillery at the feast. The old brother is getting to be quite feeble, both in body and mind, and is just waiting the summons to pass over the river.

Sister Mary Hickey, of the Whitesville church, Mo., also enjoyed the meeting. On Monday after the feast she had a slight stroke of paralysis, but at this writing she is improving in health.

We are having plenty of rain. The Lord surely is blessing the "Western Sufferers" this year. "Praise ye the Lord; give thanks unto him; for he is good; his mercy endureth forever."

LOUISA J. WILLIAMS.

Bellerille, Kans., June 20.

From Lincoln, Nebr.

ON Sunday, June 18, 1891, a meeting was held by the Brethren south of Lincoln, and there being no services in the city, several of the members attended. We were glad to receive another one, Hattie (Shank) Reasey into the fold of Christ. She had just recovered from lung fever, and was not satisfied to live any longer in an unsaved condition. May heaven's blessing rest on her, and all others who have started in like manner! Pray for the lambs, that they may be fed on the sincere milk of the Word, and grow thereby. This is the fifth accession since the organization of the Lincoln church. Rejoice with us!

MINNIE KERSCHNER.

Lincoln, Nebr.

From Panora, Iowa.

OUR love-feast is in the past, and again we have had to part after enjoying sweet intercourse together. The recent rains and consequent bad roads prevented many from meeting with us, but we had a good congregation. Bro. J. S. Snowberger, of Colorado, did most of the preaching and officiated. Oh, if these little foretastes do us so much good, "What will the harvest be?"

J. D. HAUGHTELIN.

EVERY moment is a divine gift, for which account must be given.

FALLEN ASLEEP

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

SUNDAY. At North Manchester, Ind., May 28, 1891, August Frederick Sunday, aged 84 years and 9 months.

The subject of this notice emigrated to America about the year 1840, and has lived in Ohio and Indiana. He was never married, and made no profession of religion, but was a diligent Bible reader. He knew of no relatives in the world as he was a foundling, hence there was no relative present at the funeral. Services at the Eel River church by the writer and Bro. G. Ulrey from Amos 4: 12. ISAAC MILLER.

BRILLHART. — At Carson City, Mich., June 5, 1891, Martha Brillhart, aged 63 years, 6 months and 5 days.

She leaves a husband and eight children who watched over her as she passed from this life to life eternal. She was a model Christian woman, loved and respected by all. Those who mourn have the sympathy of the church. May God pour in the oil of consolation in the poor, bleeding hearts! Services by the Brethren. G. E. STONE.

WERKING. -In the Nettle Creek church Wayne Co., Ind., May 15, 1891, Catherine Werking, wife of John Werking, and daughter of Martin Miller, aged 79 years, 5 months and 19 days.

Deceased was born in Morrison's Cove, Bedford Co., Pa. She was married to John Werking, April 1, 1838, with whom she lived until death. To them were born eight children — five sons and three daughters. She joined the German Baptist church at about the age of thirty-two,—her husband soon after. She lived a devoted and faithful Christian life to the time of her death, faithfully performing the functions of a deacon's wife in the church for about thirty-eight years. In 1869, she, with her husband and four little children, moved to Indiana, settling about three miles west of Hagerstown, Ind., where they remained until nearly four years ago, when they moved to Hagerstown.

She was a sister of the late Eld. Jacob Miller, of Pennsylvania, who often visited this vicinity in former years. Funeral services to a large congregation, by elders Lewis W. Teeter and David H. Replogle.

LEVI S. DILLING.

HUNSBERGER.— In Philadelphia, Pa., June 11, 1891, Dr. S. G. Hunsberger, son of Bro. Isaac and sister Sarah Hunsberger, aged 26 years and 29 days.

Deceased was a young man of promise. He finished his course in dentistry a year ago. He was delighted with his profession, in which he was quite successful. He was sick only about one week. We were made to think, when we heard of his death, that his work is unfinished, and yet it is finished. Truly "in the midst of life we are in death." He had very warm friends, both in the circles of the young and of the old.

The funeral services were conducted from the residence of the deceased, by the writer, from John 11: 28. The remains were buried in the Germantown cemetery.

T. T. MYERS.

STILTS. —In the Richland church, Richland County, Ohio, June 3, 1891, sister Isabelle, wife of Will Stilts, and daughter of Eld. James McMullen, aged 20 years and 17 days.

She leaves a husband, one little daughter, father, mother, two sisters and four brothers to mourn their loss, which, we hope, is her gain.

Funeral services by Eld. W. Murray. Interment in Brethren's cemetery.

MARY M. HELFER.

SCHISLER. In the Astoria church, Fulton Co., Ill., June 12, 1891, Matilda Schisler, aged 53 years, 3 months and 14 days.

Deceased was the daughter of Eld. Jno. Fitz. She was born in York Co., Pa., in 1838. She moved to Illinois in 1850, and was married to John Schisler in 1855. She united with the church of the Brethren before her marriage and lived a consistent Christian life to the time of her death. As she neared the end, she called for the elders of the church and was anointed in the name of the Lord.

She leaves an afflicted husband and seven children to mourn their loss. The funeral occasion was improved by the Brethren to a large concourse of people from Rev. 14: 13.

C. FITZ.

KILHAFER. In the Ephratah congregation, Pa., June 16, after an illness of two weeks, Bro. Jacob Kilhafer, aged 65 years, 8 months and 28 days.

Deceased was a devout brother in the church for many years, and held the office of deacon for fifteen years. Since the organization of our Sunday-school, several years ago, he was an active worker. He will be greatly missed in Sunday-school and church work, as well as in the family and in the community. His funeral was largely attended. He leaves a wife and nine children to mourn their loss. They are all in the church excepting two. Funeral services by Eld. S. Harley, I. S. Wenger, I. B. Keller and I. Schlosser from Gal. 6: 9

I. B. KELLER.

KINGERY.—In the Bachelor's Run church, Carroll Co., Md., June 10, 1891, Lydia Ann Kingery, aged 37 years, 10 months and 20 days.

Deceased was married to Henry B. Kingery, March 5, 1877. The funeral services were conducted by Bro. Aaron Moss.

DAVID H. NICCUM.

An Expert Opinion.

THE "Medical and Surgical Journal" for March 1891, says editorially:

"This pretty little city of Idaho Springs, Colorado, is situated in a beautiful park about 17 miles from Denver, and is about 7,500 feet above sea level. It is thrifty, prosperous, and has become noted for its hot and cold mineral springs, which contain medicinal properties of extraordinary value. Idaho Springs as a health resort cannot be excelled this side of the world-renowned Carlsbad Springs of Germany, whose waters and the waters found at Idaho Springs bear almost an identical chemical analysis.

"In the early stages of consumption these waters, combined with the invigorating air of this beautiful climate, are almost a specific. We take pleasure in recommending these waters to all suffering from coughs and catarrhal affections. It is the best place to go to for the cure of phthisis. Those of our colleagues who have been sending their patients to this grand health resort all join in praising the satisfactory results received from the invigorating waters and climate. We would therefore urge physicians to advise their patients, threatened with consumption, not to procrastinate, but to try, before it is too late, the salutary effects of the waters of Idaho Springs. The Union Pacific are making special efforts to carry the public to and from this famous resort, with all the modern comfort and ease which the tourist seeking health and pleasure can desire." 22-34.

Grand Excursion to Yellowstone National Park and Other Western Resorts.

THE Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," proposes to run, in July, 1891, a grand excursion from Omaha to Yellowstone National Park, Great Shoshone Falls, Idaho, Ogden, Salt Lake City, Garfield Beach, Denver, Clear Creek Canon, the famous Loop, and other points of interest. The Union Pacific will furnish six horse Concord Coaches, which will carry the party from Beaver Canon, Idaho, to and through Yellowstone National Park. These Coaches will also be taken to Shoshone Station, and used for the ride to Great Shoshone Falls.

From Beaver Canon to Yellowstone National Park, the trip will occupy three days going, three days returning, and eight days will be spent in the park. Excellent tents and good equipment for camping out will be furnished by the Union Pacific, en route from Beaver Canon to the Park, and while in the Park the tourists will be quartered at the various hotels.

The very low rate of $250.00 per passenger has been made from Omaha. This rate includes Railroad, Pullman, and Stage Fare, Meals and Hotel bills from the time of leaving Omaha until the return of the excursion, in all 30 days. No half fare rates.

Only thirty-five passengers can be accommodated, and as accommodations are limited EARLY APPLICATION for same should be made.

In ordering tickets, send money for same by express, to Harry P. Deuel, City Ticket Agent, U. P. System, 1302 Farnam St., Omaha, Nebraska.

No children will be allowed on this trip. For further information relative to this excursion and itinerary, apply to

This is the only real sand beach on Great Salt Lake, and is one of the finest bathing and pleasure resorts in the West. Fine bath-houses, accommodating 400 people, have been erected at Garfield Beach, in connection with which there is a first-class restaurant and a fine, large pavillion built out over the lake. All of these are run by the Union Pacific, which guarantees a first-class resort in every respect.

Gospel Chimes!

BY WM. BEERY.

THIS little book has been selling more rapidly than the publishers anticipated. The first edition was almost exhausted in the first two months. A second edition is now printed.

Following are a few of the good words received from brethren and other competent judges:

"An Excellent Book for Sunday-schools."

"After having carefully examined "Gospel Chimes" I can pronounce it an excellent book for Sunday-schools, and hope all the schools of the Brethren will adopt the same Our church is conceded to have the best congregational singing of any denomination, and if it is improved, as it can be, by the use of 'Gospel Chimes,' the power for good will be surprising."—GEO. H. HOLSINGER, Teacher of Music, Bridgewater College, Va.

"Fresh and Pleasing Melodies; Thoughtful, Spiritual, and Poetical Words."

"It gives me pleasure to speak in terms of praise of your new book, 'Gospel Chimes.' It contains many fresh and pleasing melodies to which are wedded thoughtful, spiritual and poetical words. I trust it will hold its own in competition with the numerous books now in the market and find a large sale."—T. M. TOWNE, Chicago, Ill., one of America's best writers of Sunday school music.

"Better than Many Similar Publications."

"Copy of your new book received. It contains some very pleasing and useful music, while it is to be commended especially for the selection of hymns. Good Sunday-school hymns are in great demand in Sunday-school work, and in this particular 'Gospel Chimes' is better than many similar publications."—A. J. SHOWALTER, the leading writer and publisher of Sunday-school and church music in the South.

"An Excellent Collection."

"I have carefully examined your late Sunday-school singing book, 'Gospel Chimes' and find it to be an excellent collection for the purpose designed, both in words and music."—S. W. STRAUB, Chicago, Ill., the popular Western writer and publisher of Sunday-school music.

Bro. Beery has had a large experience in Sunday-school work, and the book which we offer to the brethren, and the public in general, evinces the exercise of talent as well as good judgment. The religious purity of the hymns contributed by sister Beery adds much to the excellence of the book.

Price per single copy, 30 cts.; per dozen by mail, $3.00; by express, $2.60. Lots of more than a dozen must be sent by express.

As an abundant crop will be cut and gathered, we suppose harvest meetings will be in order.

BRO. JOHN G. KEENY, wife and family have left us for a season to visit old friends and acquaintances in Cumberland and Franklin Counties, this State. We wish them a pleasant visit and safe return.

SISTER CASSIE BEERY, one of Mt. Morris' fair teachers, sojourned with us for a season, but has now left for her home in the West, wherever that may be. She has many friends here and many good wishes go with her.

THE Altoona, Pa., brethren and sisters have nicely seated the audience room of their church house and painted the whole outside, which adds greatly to the appearance. We congratulate our members there on the greatly improved condition of their place for worship.

BRO. M. G. BRUMBAUGH, a member of the Normal Faculty, has lately returned from Louisiana, where he has been called a second time to hold Institutes and introduce Northern methods of teaching. His work is highly appreciated in the "Sunny South" and, as a result, he has located three of our young brethren there as teachers, who have received good salaries and given excellent satisfaction. They have been employed again for the coming school year. Brethren Haw, Himes and Showalter are all graduates of our school here and are doing honor to their Alma Mater. Good positions are always open for good young men.

OF late we have been having quite a number of visits by church members from different parts of the Brotherhood. Such visits are always appreciated. In traveling East or West on the best-equipped railroad in the world,—the Pennsylvania Central,—stop off and give us a call.

BRO. T. T. MYERS, present minister of the Philadelphia church, spent a few days with us during College Commencement. He seems to be pleased with his new field of labor, and is encouraged with weekly additions to the membership. We wish Bro. Myers and the church there abundant success. The Lord, no doubt, has much people in that great city, but they need a shepherd's gathering and tender care, and this, we hope, they will now have.

AUG. 24 Bro. Beery opens a Musical Institute in the Normal building, to continue three weeks. This Institute will afford splendid opportunities for such as wish special advantages in song service, and we hope that the attendance may be large. As rooms and board will be furnished at a very low rate, it would be a pleasant place to recreate for a few weeks with much less expense and better results than at the sea-shore and other fashionable places where people go to spend a great deal of money and get nothing for it.

SISTERS Jennie Stouffer, Emma Holsopple, and Annie Ross are spending part of vacation with us. Why not? We think Huntingdon the Palestine of America. Of course, we don't have the Jordan, but then we don't have the Dead Sea either. We do have the "Juniata," along the shores of which the merry birds hold their daily carnivals, the patient fisherman plies his rod and line, and occasionally the church meets there, when souls become weary of the ways of sin and desire to be buried with Christ in holy baptism. Yes, here we have had some most hallowed associations,—times when the light of God's love shone in all its brightness. Then, too, we had our days of darkness, but by faith we were sustained, we waited until the clouds dispersed,—till the storms ceased, and the calm came. On the whole, we feel that God has been better to us, a thousand times over, than we deserved.

As our farmers will have a busy season in gathering and storing away their crops, the church interests may lag a little. And yet we see no reason why this should be so, as this kind of work should be suggestive of a harvest time that to all of us is still more important. If we are thus permitted to gather and store away the natural fruits of our own sowing, will not the time soon come when we shall be called upon to gather the harvest of our spiritual sowing? Ought not the one remind us of the other? Whatsoever a man soweth that shall he also reap. We are always anxious to reap a full harvest from our literal sowing, and we only expect to reap that which we sow. Can we expect more of the spiritual? We should not. If so, what shall the harvest be? This will be a suggestive line of thought for us all to follow. And at no time can it be more impressive to us than right while in the midst of harvest-time.

SISTERS Lizzie B. Howe and Lizzie Myers, of Lancaster County, will spend a part of their vacation at Chautauqua, New York, to take in some of the new methods of teaching. We wish them a pleasant and profitable time.

DURING the past winter and spring, a large number have been added to the church, and now need careful teaching. What should this teaching be? First of all, the pure truth as we have it in the Gospel. And second, to be true and loyal to the holy profession made,—to stand firm and steadfast on the sure foundation which is sure and always safe.

JUST now we are having most lovely showers of rain and growing vegetation all around, standing up, faces heavenward, seems to say: "Father, we thank thee," and we are made to say: "O, that men would praise the Lord for his goodness!" The season, thus far, has been one of multiplied blessings. The berries of all kinds have been abundant and of cherries, red, white and black, sweet and sour, there is no end. From two trees in our yard we have been feasting for the last month, and yet, on one of them, the limbs are bending with clusters of red, sweet, luscious cherries that would put to blush even the prettiest pictures of this very desirable fruit, as found in the nursery-man's sample book. All this good,—past, present and prospective,—is enough to give a spurt of inspiration even to an editor. Yes, we are glad for all these things and acknowledge our Good Father in heaven as the source from which they come. And still, what are all these things in comparison with the fat things which he is giving to supply our higher wants! To say that God is good but tamely expresses his beneficence.

OCCASIONALLY the colored man gets off a real good thing, a little amusing at times, but to the point.

"An old negro preacher in Thomasville, Ga., thus expressed himself to the editor of the Thomasville Times, being asked how his church was getting along:

"'Mighty poor, mighty poor, brudder.'

"'What is the trouble?'

"'De 'cieties. Dey is jist drawin' all de fatness an' marrow out'en de body an' bones ob de blessed Lord's body. We can't do nuffin' widout de 'ciety. Dar is de Lincum 'Ciety, wid sister Jones an' brudder Brown to run it; sister Williams mus' march in front ob de Daughters of Rebecca. Den dare is de Dorcases, de Marthas, de Daughters of Ham, and de Liberian Ladies.'

"'Well, you have the brethren to help in the church,' we suggested.

"'No, sah, der am de Masons, de Odd Fellers, de Sons of Ham, and de Oklahoma Land Promised Pilgrims. Why, brudder, by de time de brudders and sisters pays all de dues, an 'tends all de meetin's, dare is nuffin' left for Mount Pisgah Church but jist de cob; de corn has all been shelled off an' frowed to dese speckled chickens.'"

ESSAYS.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth."

THY KINGDOM COME.

"Thy kingdom come." Oh let its light—
Its heavenly beam of peace—
Dispel this world's relentless night,
And bid its sorrows cease.

Dost thou not hear the weary groan
Of nature's sore travail,
Resound from zone to troubled zone,
A universal wail.

The sorrowing, the poor, distressed,
The hunger of the heart;
The anguish of a world oppressed
With Satan's fiery dart.

"Thy kingdom come." Hark to the sighs
Of souls in agony!
When will the Lord in power arise
To set his people free?

The joyful day is nearer come.
Behold, the morning light
Will guide our wandering footsteps home,
And fill us with delight!

There shall the weary be at rest,
Where wicked never trod,
Nor sin nor sorrow shall molest
The Paradise of God.

"Thy kingdom come;" for sweet employ
Will follow in its train
And all of life, and all of joy,
Adorn thy gracious reign.

B. C. Womack.

Buena Vista, Va.

VERY LOW, VERY HIGH.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To SISTER SUSAN PORTER,

Dear Isolated yet Oft-Worshipped "Companion in tribulation." Rev. 1: 9:

My vocabulary is too meagre to tell how glad I am for your letter. I am glad because you are, and doubly glad that God gave me some little share in making you glad. My joy was intensified in knowing that our dear brother, J. M. Mohler, has spent a week among you evangelizing, and that his ministry kindled your soul to white heat with love and gratitude and zeal.

I write thousands of letters into which I pour my soul like an Amazon of enthusiasm and desire in the service of Jesus, but I never make my pen preach with more unction and holy satisfaction, than when addressing such scattered, lonely, sorrow-pasturing sheep like yourself. Your letter makes my heart ache in the midst of "joy unspeakable," and incites me to "come boldly" yet very meekly, to "the Throne of Grace" in your behalf.

I wish I could turn my heart inside out to you, and show you how the cross knits me to all such isolated toilers in the far-away corners of Christ's vineyard. But above all do I pray that the Holy Spirit will photograph on your heart such a vivid image of the glorious, gracious, omnipotent, infinitely beautiful Jesus, that you may be ever conscious of a most blessed compensation for the absence of fellow-pilgrims of "like precious faith." I rejoice in the accession of one believer to the household of God during Bro. Mohler's services, so that you now have company in approaching the mercy-seat to "let your requests be made known unto God." Matt. 18: 20; Philpp. 4: 6.

The joy of salvation is the secret of the cross. The exaltation of man means the humiliation of God. Christ did not sink lower in his vicarious work than our sins required, nor did He rise higher than His merit warranted, or than He intends to exalt us if we are partakers of His self-abasement and sufferings. No soul can wear the crown, or sit on the throne, or wield the sceptre, without first drinking Christ's cup, and tasting the gall and the myrrh of crucifixion.

Christianity is not the cheap article that many professors represent it. It does not reek with the foulness of connubial license for which the majority of Christendom pleads, and it does not smell of tobacco and the garlic and the leeks and onions of Egypt. Num. 11: 5. Christ went down into the hell, physical and spiritual, which annexes with all these profanations, and came up again into the life which He asks every true believer to live. It is a burning shame and a blighting sin, that in some directions the flesh is allowed all the liberty that characterizes the haters of the cross and the open despisers of Jesus.

The sacred function that represents the creative act of Jehovah, is debased below the brute, and what was ordained to populate the kingdom of God with miniature images of the Eternal Father, has become a cesspool of carnal gratification. Substances as alien to human necessity and sustenance as the veriest filth, are prized as the sweetest luxuries, and gold and silver and greenbacks have become the god of thousands who claim to be the children of the Highest, and brothers of the crucified Emmanuel.

We must sink into the very death of Jesus in all these things, if we would "know the fellowship of His sufferings, and the power of His resurrection." Philpp. 3: 10. The spirit that enabled Him to "endure the cross and despise the shame," is the promised Helper in all our needs, and the abiding Comforter in all our sorrows. Heb. 12: 2; Philpp. 4: 19; John 15, 26, and 16: 13, 14, 15. All that God gave to Jesus to sustain Him in all His trials, Jesus will give us by the Holy Spirit, if we accept the terms.

Jesus started as well as ended with the cross. He lived in it and for it from His first to His last breath. "I AM THE WAY;" "no man COMETH UNTO the FATHER BUT BY ME." John 14: 6. Now way, living way, perfect way, glorious way, the path of light that shineth more and more unto the perfect day! Heb. 10: 19, 20: Ps. 101: 2, 6; 2 Cor. 3: 18; Prov. 4: 18. Who would not walk in such a way, although a fresh cross meets us at every step? In the service of such a Master, and for the attainment of such an end, who would not die daily, and many times a day?

"For the JOY set before Him." Heb. 12: 2. What was it? He started with the promise of the ever-presence and illimitable importation of the eternal, infinite Father, and ended in the consummation of that forever unfathomable Word—I AM. All that God is has He given to His Son. This upheld Him all the way from the manger to the throne; and all this is equally promised to every true follower of Jesus.

But this whole-souled fealty means a whole-souled crucifixion, glorying in nothing else but our willing and absolute identity with the God-man in His voluntary self-sacrifice of body and soul for the glory of God in the salvation of sinners. Gal. 6: 14. How pertinent the admonition, "CONSIDER HIM that suffered such contradiction of sinners AGAINST HIMSELF, LEST YE BE WEARIED AND FAINT IN YOUR MINDS." Heb. 12: 3.

You cannot only have the very joy of heaven in your isolation, but you can "do much good in the name of the Holy Child Jesus." Begin in the closet. Shut the door upon you and your Well Beloved. Tell Him your whole heart, and give Him your whole heart, and ask and expect Him to do wonders. He will not say you nay if your whole life and petition is yea. "He cannot deny Himself." 2 Tim. 2: 13. If you "pray in the Holy Ghost," in the name of Jesus, the Father will give you ALL you ask FOR HIS GLORY.

Ah, my dear sister, we have not yet learned to pray, not yet learned to trust in the sufficiency and faithfulness of Jesus. What babes and dullards we are! How we blush to own Him as our Alpha and Omega! How we shrink from telling and showing the world how entirely He is ours and we His! Is it a wonder that He withholds His grace, and lets us work in our own strength and accomplish so little? Study His Word on your knees, and wrestle like Jacob until your solitude becomes a Penuel, and you can do more in God with your dislocated thigh, than a thousand self-panoplied workers can do in their own wisdom and strength. Gen. 32: 24–31.

Let the word of Christ dwell in you richly, and let the Holy Ghost control every word you gather from the Holy Oracles. Col. 3: 16; John 14: 26. "Let your light shine before men." Let every word be salted and flavored with the freshness and glory and magnetism of the Risen Christ. Just LIVE JESUS.

You and your brother can hold prayer-meetings, and call in others to read and sing with you, and hear your earnest pleadings with God for souls. You can call in a few children on the Sabbath and teach them "the Holy Scriptures which are able to make them wise unto salvation." 2 Tim. 3: 15. Ask for wisdom, ask in faith, and you will find God not only as liberal as He has promised in James 1: 5, 6, but you will see that Eph. 3: 20, with the four preceding verses, is gloriously true. You have a generous, munificent Father in heaven, who will not stint you in anything you ask in the line of His eternal purpose in Christ Jesus.

In conclusion I thank you with a warm heart for the stamps you enclosed. A few hours before your letter came I used my last stamp, and had not the faintest idea where the next was to come from. Blessed be His great name—Jehovah-Jireh! Just study again and again the marvelous fact and the marvelous logic of Rom. 8: 32, and then cease to wonder that I look to God for stamps and stationery. I write for Him, and so long as my pen is His, I shall not want. Ps. 23: 1. Unwind your chain and let your bucket deep into Isaiah 12: 2, 3.

UNTIRING PERSEVERANCE.

BY P. S. THOMAS.

"Watching thereunto with all perseverance."—Eph. 6: 18.

PERSEVERANCE is as necessary to attain to full stature of the divine life as untiring diligence and close application are essential to success in temporal matters. Carelessness in the one is just as likely to prove destructive to our eternal interest as in the other it is detrimental to our earthly plans. There must be a scrutinizing watchfulness that we may not omit the necessary details. In very many cases it is the accumulation of small things, that will turn the balances either for profit or loss.

Great accomplishments are but the concentration and uniting of the minor attainments. Gross crimes are usually the outgrowth of many trivial ones, previously committed. Our natures gradually become hardened as we go on in sin. Each succeeding crime, brought to our notice, produces less effect upon us than the one previously reported. We must prayerfully watch the small things that they lead us not into greater evil. Our sensibilities become blunted by continual crime.

As these things are true in the ways of sin, so each little victory in and for the right, is a help. It is the accumulation of little good deeds, of sins overcome, of kind words spoken, of sorrows soothed, of personal sacrifices, of sinners shown the way to Christ, that go to make up the Christian life and that carries with it the full fruition of hopes of a better and higher life.

To accomplish the desire of life, the object we are striving for must be continually kept in view. Whether honor or divine glory,—laurels of fame or the wreaths of hope,—the emolument of riches, or the untold wealth of the heavenly mansions,—the approving voice of the world's devotees or the Savior's plaudit,—it must be kept prominently before us. As the great deeds of the warrior, the intellectual achievements of the statesman and literateur, the brilliant executions of the artist, are but the result of earnest, untiring, self-sacrificing effort, so the soldiers of Christ must possess the most untiring, unyielding and persevering devotion to enable him to overcome the obstacles that lie in his path, keeping his eye on the Leader, Christ,—ever pressing on in the work until the grandest consummation,—victory over sin and life through Christ,—is obtained.

Great deeds have been accomplished by each actor keeping his mind and heart firmly fixed upon the object desired to be obtained. Failing to do this would have blighted their earliest hopes and intentions, and hence left no record of daring deed nor intellectual accomplishment. Had not Martin Luther persisted in the work begun, never once recoiling before the opposing forces of the enemy, and kept before him the purification of the church from its gross irregularities, we never would have had a Reformation. But for the earnest desire and untiring effort of our forefathers, keeping before them the liberty of church and state and equal rights to all, we never would have had the free country and the freer people of the United States.

Every one who has named the name of Jesus, has an object on which to place his loftiest aspirations and most earnest desires. The ONE who has trod this earthly pilgrimage and marked out the way for his followers,—the ONE who said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee," and who, by the comforting assurance thus given, has supported many a Christian through the perils of life, sustained them in death and finally will land them triumphantly on the evergreen shore.

The ONE, who has borne our sins, has made it possible through the great sacrifice that whosoever will, can come to him and live. The One,—CHRIST the beacon-light of ages,—shining out on the sea of time, will guide us into the safe harbor. We must keep our eyes on the light, must never let the mountains of sin, the shoals of despair, nor the breakers of doubt loom up between us and the light. Let us fix our eyes upon Jesus and we are safe. The seas may roll around, seemingly ready to swallow us up at every moment, but, by keeping the hand on the helm, the light brightly gleaming in the heart, no sea can have any power over us.

Men have sometimes been lured by a false light in the wrong direction. Following the glimmer and lulled by the fair promises held out, they have made a wreck of their lives,—have been of no benefit to mankind and of sorrow to their friends.

With the Christian it is different. Christ never sent out a false light but every ray is a guiding-star for his children, and so long as we trust in its influence, we are safe.

Another reason why we should be steadfast and persevere, is, because every promise, made by our Leader, has been fulfilled. No prophet nor patriarch, king or subject, no apostle of Christ, nor humblest follower, no minister nor lay member of our day can point to fulfilled promises and say they are otherwise than God and Christ had promised.

From the time of faithful Abraham down to the present time every true follower of God and Christ, every sinner forgiven, can attest to our LEADER'S faithfulness, and all those who persevere unto the end shall join in the glad chorus that the redeemed shall sing and swell and shout, that shall resound through heaven's high dome, "that our Jesus has done all things well."

PROPHETIC REVELATIONS OF CHRIST IN THE OLD TESTAMENT.

BY MRS. FLORA E. TEAGUE.

THE Bible,—the Book of Books, reveals to us innumerable prophecies and truths, all of which lead up to the one grand climax,—salvation!

The Old Testament is the history of God's gradual development of the human race for the grander and more glorious work of the new.

Beginning with man in his primitive state, he had to be prepared to receive truths and revelations which his undeveloped mind was not able to grasp. This preparation required ages of time,—so slowly did man become ready to receive, and so great was the truth to be received.

From the time that God said to the serpent in Eden, "And I will put enmity between thee and the woman, and between thy seed and her seed; it shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel," the people seemed to be looking forward to the time when the Healer should come.

The first promise from God as to the one who should come, was made to the patriarch Abraham in the following words: "And in thee shall all families of the earth be blessed," which promise has been truly fulfilled.

In the prophecy of Jacob we have a fuller and broader revelation. In regard to Judah he says: "The scepter shall not depart from Judah, nor a law-giver from between his feet, until Shiloh come." In the perfect character, Joseph, the savior of his people, we have a good representation of the future Savior who would come to save the souls of nations. In the priest of the tabernacle and temple, we see the Mediator between God and man ministering to the needs of the people.

In the Psalms we find many predictions of the coming Messiah, most of which are descriptions of his work on earth and the glory of his kingdom.

In the Songs of Solomon the beauties of Christ are vividly portrayed in eloquent figures of speech, as is also the love of Christ for the church.

Isaiah 2: 3 declares the peacefulness of Christ's coming kingdom. "They shall beat their swords into plow-shares and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." God speed the day when this may become literally true!

Isaiah makes a further and more definite revelation: "Behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." And again in Isa. 9: 6: "For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counselor, the Mighty God, the Everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

Many other prophecies, relating to the glories of Christ's kingdom, for the encouragement of his nation, were made by the same prophet. The sufferings of Christ and the admission of the Gentiles into the new kingdom were also included in his prophecies.

Micah 5: 2 fortells the place of the Savior's birth in the following words: "But thou, Bethlehem Ephrata, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me that is to be ruler in Israel."

Daniel foretells the time: "Know therefore and understand, that from the going forth of this commandment to restore and build Jerusalem unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and three-score and two weeks."

Zechariah prophesied also in regard to the Savior and his kingdom. Malachi foretells the coming of the messenger or forerunner of Christ in addition to other prophecies in regard to the kingdom.

In view of the many strong evidences, given by the prophets to the people, we are made to wonder why the Jews could not and would not, as a body, receive Christ, as the true Savior, so plainly described to them. But we wonder more, that, with the knowledge we possess now, any one can look with indifference or doubt upon a suffering, sympathetic Savior, who gave his life for us, and with ready, willing, out-stretched arms and a heart full of love, says, "Come to me!"

THE PAST HISTORY OF THE CHURCH REPEATING ITSELF.—2 Chron. 34: 14-28.

SYNOPSIS OF A SERMON BY I. J. ROSENBERGER.

IF our theme is true, the past ought to greatly concern us now. The righteous who heard Noah and entered the ark, how safe was their voyage to the New World! But the wicked, how sad their wailing cry, when it was too late, too late! How clearly the history above is being repeated! Christ was once our personal Noah, our "preacher of righteousness." Now he is preaching through his Word, his ministry. The ark, the church, with its "one door" and "one window," is of Christ's own building on a rock. How safe will be the voyage of all the inmates through the eternal storm, and how safe the anchoring in that "sweet by and by." "For where I am there ye may be also."

With what interest do we read [illegible] as: and we were in our own [illegible] of the children of Israel, for it is being repeated in us. Christ is our Moses, this world is the dark wilderness, God's Word is the pillar to guide us. The walled cities that we encounter on our journey are many; the enticing and seducing influences of the nations around us are, to our sorrow, as they were with Israel of old.

Many to-day are sighing for the promised land, "that sweet Beulah land," as in days of yore. Many wasted their carcasses in the wilderness. To-day "few there be that find it." This chain of evidence can be continued to an indefinite length.

In our text we have the interesting circumstance of the Book of the Law being found. Hence we would infer that it was lost. During King Hezekiah's pious reign Judah prospered. He was succeeded by his son Manasseh, whose wicked career plunged the nation into the most horrid idolatry. Amon, his son, was his successor, but to Judah's sorrow. Josiah, a pious youth, began to reign at the age of eight years. He sought early and vigorously to reform the nation. He rebuilt the temple and restored the worship.

Hilkiah, the priest, while cleansing and refitting the temple, "found the book of the law." This short, sad story indicates the horrid depths into which the nation was plunged in gross crime and wickedness. Josiah knew that their national sin was enormous and their guilt great, but now he saw their guilt as well as God's wrath, as never before,—a threatening storm cloud. As evidence of his deep emotion, "he rent his clothes and wept." The inquiry is raised, "Will the above sad piece of ancient history be repeated?" The evidences are that it is being repeated now. Hence it is well worth while for us to pause and look up with due care, this lamentable story.

1. They lost "the book of the law."

(a) By not making it a matter of constant search and study. To take good care of what we have, we must add to,—must grow.

(b) By not making "the Book of the Law" their rule of faith and practice. In like manner persons are losing the Book of the Law to-day by "teaching for doctrine the commandments of men," and dismissing at pleasure the teachings of Christ and his disciples. In their practice they consult taste,—their likes and dislikes, rather than the Gospel. To such "the book of the law" is lost.

(c) By not making their religion a daily, a constant work. We name David and Daniel as men who made their religion a daily work; and to them "the book of the law" was not lost.

(d) By not having it in the proper place. The tables of the law were broken, were lost, until God provided a place for them,—the ark. God's place for his present laws is in our minds and in our hearts. These being spirit and life, the whole will become leavened, and not be lost. It should be remembered, that in this Book of the Law, the loss of a part becomes equal to that of the whole. A coin, which lacks but one grain, is rejected. See Matt. 5: 19; James 2: 10; Rev. 22: 18, 19. I fear that there are localities in which elements of this Book of the Law are being lost. Her meekness, her humility, her gentle spirit of submission, require attention. "Take heed lest at any time we should let them slip," is a judicious warning.

2. The Book of the Law was found in an effort of reform. Truth to-day is only found by efforts of reform, or by seeking. It is only those "who seek" that find; that knock, to whom it will be opened, and in almost every instance we are most pleasantly disappointed, as was the Queen of Sheba, and the lame man that lay at the temple gate.

3. The Book of the Law was lost, but to whom? Not to God, simply to them. He had put it away, —concealed it. To-day it is simply lost to them who will not allow "the man Christ Jesus to reign over them." To them the Book will turn up again, will be found, when the event comes that they are to be "judged out of the things written in the books." Humility, feet-washing and anointing the sick are all lost to many professors to-day: but they will all be found by them either before, or on the event of that great coming day. With God nothing is lost.

4. To all appearances, Judah's kingdom seemed to have prospered without any Book of the Law, both in numbers and in wealth. So likewise many to-day seem to prosper in their religion with but little or no use of the Book of the Law. For conversion, feelings and human experiences are made the standard. As to ordinances to be obeyed they say, "Do just as you believe." As to the Communion service, they consult their church creed, which prescribes the bread and wine alone, taken at midday. They are wholly lost to the teaching of Isaiah, "To the law and to the testimony, for they that speak not according to this word, it is because they have no light in them."

5. Josiah and his subjects found out the facts in their case by reading "the book of the law." It is the Gospel that will give us the facts in our cases to-day. Some seek the facts in their case by consulting conscience, others consult their feelings, while others tell us that their heart dictates on this important question. To any and all of these, I simply say, "Thy word is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my pathway." Josiah's course, then and now, alone is proper and safe,—Consult the Book of the Law. "Life and immortality has been brought to light through the Gospel."

6. When the Book of the Law was found, a most vigorous effort was made to spread the message. Hilkiah, the priest, took it to Shaphan. Shaphan bore the good news to the king. The king read it to all the people. To-day we are urged to spread "the glad tidings of great joy," "teach all nations," "preach my Gospel to every creature." Parents are to "raise their children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord." We are to tell this story in our life, walk and conduct. We are to "be his epistles, written in our hearts, read and known of all men." "Apt to teach," "willing to communicate," are divine teachings.

7. Huldah, the prophetess, was immediately sent to, and consulted as to facts in this new found book. She gave it her sanction; that it was all true. Hear her thrilling words: "Thus saith the Lord, Behold I will bring evil upon this place, and upon the inhabitants thereof, even all the curses that are written in the book which they have read before the king of Judah: because they have forsaken me," etc.

I have likewise frequently been consulted relative to our Book of the Law. Like Huldah, I declare it all true. "For he that is sent of God, speaketh the things of God." Christ himself was baptized, "to fulfill all righteousness." It is ours to fulfill the same standard of right, for "he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved." Our Book of the Law does enjoin love, and defines the external manifestation of that love to be the salutation of the holy kiss. Christ's disciples were to teach "all things that he had taught them." We being followers of that same Jesus, follow the same line of truth. Paul plainly taught that Christ was coming a second time, "without sin unto salvation, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and have not obeyed his Gospel." Christ himself declared, "Till heaven and earth pass, one jot or one tittle shall in no wise pass from the law, till all be fulfilled." Hence if the old Law,—the shadow,—was all true, much more will the new,—the substance,—be true.

8. The fate of Josiah. But of Josiah the prophetess said, "Because thine heart was tender, and thou didst humble thyself, . . . and didst rend thy clothes, and weep before me, . . thou shalt be gathered to thy grave in peace, neither shall thine eyes see all the evil that I will bring upon this place." We read in our Book of the Law, "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted; blessed are the meek, for they shall inherit the earth."

Dear reader, like the king of Judah, we have great need to weep and mourn; we have great cause to be meek, that we may thus obtain a share of God's mercy. Surely, as given in the language of Judah's king, "Great will be the wrath of the Lord that is poured out upon us, if our fathers have not kept the Word of the Lord, to do after all that is written in this book."

The foregoing subject is the Sunday-school lesson for June 14. Being impressed with its importance, we made it our subject for June 21. Being further impressed with its present great need, we give this outline for the MESSENGER. We invite our ministers to take our outlines, revise, improve and use them. Let the thrilling truths of the subject be heralded all along the line. Let us strenuously guard against losing "the Book of the Law" of our day.

THE APOSTOLIC METHOD OF PREACHING.

BY B. C. MOOMAW.

"Rightly dividing the Word of Truth."—2 Tim. 2: 15.

THE great commission, as given in Matt. 28: 19, 20, Mark 16: 15, and Luke 24: 47, contains not only the divine authority for that method of propagating truth, commonly known as preaching, but also indicates the doctrinal order, or logical succession, by which the preacher should be guided in his presentation of the Gospel. Taking first the commission in Matthew, which is the fullest and most explicit report given by any of the evangelists, we have the following divisions, indicated in their logical order:

First part, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations," or as it is explained in the margin, "Make disciples or Christians of all nations."

Second part, "Baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost."

Third part, "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." In Mark 16: 15, 16, we have a repetition of parts first and second, in somewhat different terms, but in the same logical order, the third division not being mentioned at all. But the first part of this version of Mark is a kind of definition of the first part in Matthew, presenting a clearer expression of the Savior's meaning. We find here that the word teach, as used in the first part of Matthews' commission, means to preach the Gospel, to proclaim the glad tidings.

This is the part of the commission which directly refers to the unconverted world. Luke gives a still more explicit definition of this "first part" of the commission in chapter 24: 47, where he states the particular doctrines which are to be preached to the unconverted, namely, "Repentance and remission of sins." Only in Matthew and Mark is baptism included in the commission, and placed in its logical relation following repentance, and only in Matthew does the commission include the duty of the church to baptized believers; namely, to teach them to observe the "all things,"—the precepts and ordinances which he had commanded them to observe.

Now we have before us a plain statement of the mind of the Spirit concerning the logical order in which the truths of the Gospel should be preached.

First to the unconverted, "repentance and remission of sins." This would, of course, include all the correlative doctrines of sin, guilt and judgment, on the one hand, and the vicarious sacrifice, substitution, atonement, faith, and justification on the other, which, with the corollaries and amplifications of each doctrine, particularly the preaching of CHRIST, as a personal Savior, his life, his death, his resurrection, presents a wide field to the studious and earnest evangelist when he stands before the unconverted world.

Second, to the newly-converted sinner, the meaning, application, and observance of baptism.

Third, to the baptized believer, the precepts and ordinances, their relation to the plan of salvation, and to the spiritual life, the importance of observing them, and the rewards of obedience, holiness, benevolence, purity, charity, and every other Christian grace and precept. But the very best definition of the commission, in respect to the divine method of "rightly dividing the Word of truth," is to be found in the practice of the apostles themselves. They were certainly in the best position to understand the Savior's meaning, and were pre-eminently qualified, by the teaching which they had received from the Master, by his perfect example, and also by the direct inspiration of that Holy Spirit whose office was to lead them into all truth, to judge of the most approved and most effectual method of preaching and teaching the Gospel. Therefore we would do well to study critically, and to attend diligently to the authoritative examples thus set before us, and to deduce therefrom the rules which may serve as a safe guide to the preacher. First we will discuss briefly all those instances in the apostolic history where the Word was addressed to the unbelieving and unconverted, noting carefully the theological character of the discourse on each occasion, and the sudden changes, in this respect, in every case where the hearers were directly convicted and converted under the immediate influence of the preaching. Let us take for our first lesson

THE GREAT PENTECOSTAL SERMON

Of Peter, delivered in the first glow and glory of that sudden and overwhelming inspiration which had come upon all the disciples and apostles like a mighty rushing wind from heaven. This sermon may be, appropriately, regarded as the key-note of the Gospel. The whole Christian church was present and Peter was its spokesman. The whole unconverted world was represented in the cosmopolitan character of the congregation. The church and the world thus standing face to face, the message of the former to the latter must be regarded as the true type and standard of acceptable and effectual preaching for all lands and all ages. After the introduction, which was adapted to the special circumstances of the time, place and occasion, he preached JESUS, his wonderful life, his fore-ordained death, his glorious resurrection, and his exaltation at the right hand of God. He supported each proposition with copious quotations from the prophetical Scriptures, and made such an application of the most salient points to the present state of his hearers as to drive home the conviction of their guilt, incurred in the rejection and crucifixion of this Christ.

He succeeded, for when he had finished his discourse, they were "pricked to the heart," crying out, "Men and brethren, what shall we do?" Now came the time for specific teaching. They were in the proper frame of mind to receive it. There was a special portion of meat for this due season. "Repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins."

To have preached baptism before that moment would have been out of place and ineffectual. But the Apostle presented it just at the right time, and in company with its appropriate doctrine,—repentance, following it up with "many words of exhortation." This resulted in a tremendous ingathering of souls. With the exception of baptism, all specific teaching on the subject of the ordinances or discipline of the church was imparted to the new converts after their baptism, for it was not done before. These things formed no part of the public discourse of the Apostle, not even by inference. They logically and rationally belonged to another place, and to another time. The whole doctrine of the Apostle, while addressing himself to the unconverted multitude, was CHRIST CRUCIFIED and CHRIST GLORIFIED. His whole doctrine, when addressing the convicted multitude, was repentance and baptism.

On a subsequent occasion,—the healing of the impotent man,—he preached to an immense multitude the same doctrines in the same theological order, the resurrection of the crucified Jesus, and his exaltation as the Christ. Repentance and remission of sins was preached through his name. Acts 3: 12, 26.

Again, to the Sanhedrin he preached that name by which alone we may be saved. Acts 4: 12. Finally, in his sermon before Cornelius, the same doctrines appear in the same order, the life, death, resurrection, and ascension of Jesus Christ, and remission of sins through faith in his name. Acts 10: 34, 43. To show that this was not simply a characteristic of Peter's preaching, but was common to all the apostles and evangelists, we have only to make a few additional references. The discourse of Philip to the Eunuch had but one theme. "He preached to him Jesus." Acts 8: 35. Paul's first recorded sermon in the synagogue at Antioch in Pisidia has identically the same theological characteristics. Indeed it reads almost like a reproduction of Peter's sermons. There is just this one theme, JESUS, crucified, raised from the dead, and glorified. Forgiveness of sins to all who believe on him. Acts 14: 41. His before king Agrippa exhibited the same theological points in the same order. It is impossible that this uniformity of theological method among the apostles should have been a mere coincidence. It was the "mind of the Spirit" speaking through all of them alike. He gave them one theme which they were invariably to present to the unbelieving and unconverted. That theme was to have pre-eminence over all others. It was, on all public occasions, to occupy exclusively the time and attention of the preacher. The apostolic epistles, or letters to the churches, abound in a thousand things which are addressed to, and intended for, the baptized believer, or the church: but Christ crucified, raised from the dead, and glorified; repentance, and baptism for remission of sins, through faith in his name, is the one cluster of doctrines intended for the unconverted world.

Nothing could be clearer or more authoritative than the inspired example of the apostles in this particular, delivered to us with such remarkable unanimity. And nothing could be more striking than the contrast between this inspired example and the habit of many of our modern preachers, who, instead of "rightly dividing the Word of Truth," select their themes by fancy, or by accident, and preach to the world what belongs to the church, or to the church what belongs to the world. This error may be noticed among our own preachers, who, perhaps, have followed local customs or traditions without looking closely to the homiletic patterns, given us in the Acts of the Apostles,—patterns which were not determined by chance, but which are modeled upon principles of sound theology and common sense. In this system nothing is excluded, but everything is simply put in its proper place, and although many conclusions could be deduced from the premises thus laid down, we have only space to mention one or two of the most pertinent.

First, that Jesus is the paramount theme of the Gospel, engrossing all others, and rising infinitely above them in importance and significance. It may be objected that the apostles and evangelists gave special attention to this theme because of the necessity to establish his divine claims and that this necessity no longer exists when all admit that Jesus was the Christ. To this we reply that, while the great majority of men and women in the Christian world admit his divine claims historically, they do not admit those claims personally. They do not believe in him. They do not trust in him. They do not accept him and confess him as their Savior. The presentation of his historical and prophetical claims was merely an introduction to his personal claims. The latter was the saving sense. The need of this preaching of Jesus is just as pressing and just as universal now as it was then. The great need of men and women is to be saved from their sins, and to this end they must have the personal help, sympathy, guidance, intercession and atonement of the Christ. They must believe on his name. They must confess him before the world. They must have daily communion with him. They must know him, "whom to know is life eternal."

Second, That all the preaching and teaching of the ordinances, and order of the church, with the single exception of baptism, is intended for the church alone, and not for the unconverted world. The apostles never, in a single instance, preached these subjects to the unconverted for the simple reason that the solitary purpose and design of the ordinances and order, or discipline, of the church, is to promote growth in grace. They have no relation whatever to justification, and consequently could have no place in a discourse to unconverted sinners.

"AN EVIL REPORT."

WE read in the book of Numbers that when the spies returned from searching out the land of Canaan they brought two reports. We often hear it said that the faithless ten brought back a false report, whereas the record calls it an evil report. Much of it was doubtless true, yet it was so colored that it discouraged the hearts of the people. They confessed that the land flowed with milk and honey; they showed the fruit; but with this good confession they linked, by the doubting conjunction "nevertheless," "The people be strong that dwell in the land, and the cities are walled, and very great: and moreover we saw the children of Anak there." Num. 13: 28. They went on to speak of the different nations in the land, and, when the faithful "Caleb stilled the people before Moses, and said, Let us go up at once and possess it: for we are well able to overcome it," they replied, "We are not able to go up against the people: for they are stronger than we." What an intense difference between the "we" of the spies and the "we" of Caleb! One included God, while the other excluded him.

The spies continue: "The land, through which we have gone to search it, is a land that eateth up the inhabitants thereof;" and then follows the apparently contradictory statement, "And all the people that we saw in it are men of great stature." It would seem from their own statement that the people had eaten up the land, rather than the land the people. Unbelief often contradicts itself. Then follows the closing comparison, "And there we saw the giants: and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so we were in their sight."

So was David in Goliath's sight: and yet God so wrought through that tender stripling that the giant bit the dust.

The men and women who make evil reports are not all dead yet. They still tell all the bad or evil things they can hear of the vineyard of the Lord. They must tell of all the mistakes that are made, all the imperfect fruit there is on the vine, of every stumbling-block in the road, and all the obstacles in the way. What good things there are in the church they fail to see, or, at least, they never take the pains to tell the good. If they have any notion of getting to heaven, they certainly have a poor way of letting their light shine on the road.

"FORGIVE your fellow-man as if you never had anything to forgive. When brethren injure you, hope that they have made a mistake, or else feel that if they knew you better they would treat you worse. Be of such a mind toward them that you will neither give nor take offenses. Be willing to lay down, not only your comfort, but even your life for the brethren. Live for the joy of others, even as saints do in heaven. Love others so as to forget your own sorrows. So shall you become a man greatly beloved."

"KIND words are the music of the world. They have a power which seems beyond natural causes, as if they were some angel's song which had lost its way, and come on earth. It seems as if they could almost do what in reality God alone can do, soften the hard and angry hearts of men. No one was ever corrected by a sarcasm; crushed perhaps if the sarcasm was clever enough, but drawn nearer to God, never."

PLEASING GOD.

BY J. S. MOHLER.

"That ye might walk worthy of the Lord unto all pleasing." Col. 1: 10.

To please means so to live as to awaken emotions of joy and gladness in the hearts of those with whom we associate. The disposition to please is one of the noblest qualities of the heart, and yet it is a disposition that needs to be carefully guarded, lest, in the desire to please, we trespass against our better judgment. We must strenuously avoid pleasing unto evil. By a smile or nod we may give assent to what might seem to be a matter of small consequence, though bearing in the wrong direction, that, in the end, is ruinous in its results. Many a young man has been ruined by going into the saloon to please another, or to the ball-room, the gambling-den, and other places of wickedness. It affords us much comfort to realize that we are so near akin to God that we can please him, that a Being so great, and wise, and powerful, would condescend to notice so insignificant a creature as man, and allow himself to be pleased by him, yet such is the loving character of God. God is not only susceptible of being pleased, but he is easy to please. The smallest things, done in harmony with his will, please him. The giving of a cup of water, from right motives, is pleasing to him.

God is also of a disposition to please others. It pleased him to make the world and all things therein, and, when all was finished, he was pleased and said it was very good. Gen. 1: 31. "For it pleased the Father that in him should all fullness dwell." Col. 1: 19.

The disposition of Christ is also to please: "For even Christ pleased not himself." Rom 15: 3. But he so pleased the Father that the Father spake from heaven, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Matt. 3: 17.

If there is a being in all the universe that we ought to seek to please, above every one else, it is God, our Heavenly Father. He is our Creator, Preserver, the Source of our life and all the blessings we enjoy. By him we may have eternal life, and the greatest enjoyments in the world beyond.

We should seek to please him every day, and in every word and act of our life. How may we please him?

1. By faith. "Without faith it is impossible to please him." Heb. 11: 6. Hence we conclude that with faith we can please him. The more faithful we are the better we please him.

2. Faith exemplified means (a) our return to him. Returning to him from all our waywardness, with full purpose of heart to love and serve God. This is well pleasing to God. The returning prodigal so pleased his father that he could not wait his arrival, but he met him a great way from home and embraced and kissed his Son. (b). After we have returned to the Father we must continue to please him. Doubtless the returning prodigal sought to please his father better than he had ever done before. So when we have returned to the Father above, we mean to stay with him and to be on good terms with him. To do this successfully, we must obey him in all things. Obedience cements the union of children to parents, as nothing else can. This is equally true in our relation to our Heavenly Father. No better evidence does our Heavenly Father ask of us, in order to gratify our desire to please him, than this. A mere profession of our love to him is a small matter, but our ready obedience to do his will as it is done in heaven, is a matter that pleases him exceedingly well. "Not every one that saith unto me Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven: but he that doeth the will of my Father which is in heaven." Matt. 7: 21.

3. We may please him in our thoughts. Our thoughts are the germ of our life. Possibly we are not able to control the inception of thought, but we may control them by a concentrated effort of our moral forces. Thus we may suppress the evil thought, and indulge the good ones. God is pleased in our effort to have him in all our thoughts. The disposition of the wicked is to push God away, and not have him in all their thoughts, but God knows the thoughts of the wicked afar off, that they are vain.

We may please him in our words. Our words are "thought crystallized," and are a savor of life or death to others. The effect of words is tremendous: A word harshly spoken may crush a soul. A word fitly spoken may raise a soul from the pit of sin to the height of heaven.

The destiny of souls hangs upon words. Because of the importance of words Christ says, "Every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment. For by thy words thou shalt be justified, and by thy words thou shalt be condemned." Matt. 12: 36, 37. Paul admonishes, "Let your speech be always with grace, seasoned with salt." Col. 4: 6.

When our words are thus seasoned, they taste very sweet to the spiritual man. They are wholesome words, full of life, strength and power. We eat such words, spiritually, with a relish, as keen and desirable as does the epicure the finest dish. They are sweeter than honey and the honey-comb. With such words God is well pleased.

5. We may please him in our desires. Desires are a necessary part of our being, but they may be indulged in the wrong direction, and when that is the case, evil will be the result. We have the power to direct the desires. If our desires are directed in the channel of godliness, righteousness, truth, purity—heavenward, they are pleasing to God. The Psalmist desired to dwell in the house of the Lord all the days of his life. Ps. 27: 4. This was a noble desire, pleasing to God. Again, "There is none upon earth that I desire beside thee." Ps. 73: 25. Again, "What man is he that desireth life, and loveth many days, that he may see good? Keep thy tongue from evil, and thy lips from speaking guile." Here we are told how we may obtain a good desire,—long life on earth.

6. We may please him in our affections. Without affection, the exercise of love, we would sink beneath the brute. By our affections we give evidence of the importance we attach to the object upon which our affections are exercised. If that object is wealth, worldly honor, carnal pleasure, amusements, etc., then God is not pleased, for the reason that our affections are misplaced. But, if our affections, the noblest quality of the heart, are raised to heaven, and fixed on heavenly things, then they are located on the most worthy objects of praise, love and adoration, in all the universe of God. Then we can love God truly and seek those things that are above, where Christ sitteth on the right hand of God. Col. 3: 1. With our affections thus located God is well pleased.

7. We may please God in pleasing one another unto good. Paul says, in Rom. 15: 2, "Let every one of us please his neighbor for his good to edification." But just how to please each other best, is a matter of concern to us all. Perhaps a few hints on this point might not be amiss.

(a) We may please each other by friendly recognition when we meet or pass each other. Failing to do this leaves unpleasant feelings upon the heart. We begin to wonder if our brother has aught against us.

(b) We may please in the use of kind words. "A soft answer turneth away wrath." Prov. 15: 1. A great deal of pleasing, as well as displeasing, comes from this source.

(c) We may please each other much in kind deeds, in ministering to each other's wants when we are in distress, bearing each other's burdens, manifesting a deep interest in each other's welfare, temporally and spiritually. When we thus endeavor to live, by trying to please God by faith, obedience, thoughts, words, desires, affections, by pleasing one another unto our mutual good, we need not doubt in the least that our life is well-pleasing to God, and that God will be pleased with us, and will save us, and make us happy here and hereafter.

GOD'S WAY NOT OUR WAY.

BY HENRY ROYER.

From observation, as well as by reading the Scriptures, we know many things of the goodness of God,—his kindness and mercy shown toward us. Often we are made to wonder how he can be so patient and forbearing with us, since we are so forgetful and negligent of our duty toward him. We sometimes even feel like murmuring, in secret, if not audibly, and we find fault with him who, of a truth, is our best Friend. We censure him just because his way is not our way, and he does not always deal with us as we would like to be dealt with.

We are often afflicted in various ways, and then we say that God suffers it to be so, while we would rather not have it so, but would have our own way. Often, when we are cast on a bed of painful suffering, we wonder why it is permitted to be so, and sometimes our near and dear friends are called away from us by the irresistible hand of death. This is extremely hard for us, and we again wonder why we are thus permitted to be so terribly and deeply afflicted.

While we thus murmur in passing through these fiery trials, will we not raise our eyes beyond all terror and view God as he is? If we are sick, he gives us much comfort as well as patience to endure it. If death visit us, he kindly gives us strength, and helps us to bear it, if we will only consent to lean on his strong arm of love and mercy. How condescending God is, to be so patient and kind to us, when we are so frail, so prone to murmur and so undeserving of such love! If we are in trouble, or cast down in any way, he will bear us up as he has promised; he will meet us in the closet at all times and there answer our prayers, as well as hold sweet communion with us. Such intercourse is rich manna to the soul, as well as a true solace to the body.

We have, sometimes, in former life, murmured that our prayers were not answered, but now we look back and view things quite differently from what we then did. God sometimes answers prayer so entirely different from what we expect, that we are ready to accuse him of not answering at all, and thus accuse him of falsehood, because he has promised to give us the needed things we ask for; but on the condition that we have faith and ask aright.

I distinctly recall to mind an occurrence of some years ago. Faithfully and repeatedly I asked God to grant me a needed favor. Finally I ceased to ask for it, but wondered why such a favor could be withheld. Now I see plainly that it was graciously bestowed upon me, but in a different manner from what I expected, that I entirely failed to realize it until years afterward.

Truly, if we view God as he is, we have to exclaim, "He is all love and mercy and longsuffering to us, who are often, through weakness, ready to murmur, simply because God's way is not our way!"

CITY WORK.

BY JOHN S. GEISER.

It has long been a question in my mind as well as others', why there is such a deficiency of religious work done in the cities by our Brethren. I have questioned many of our Brethren about it, and I am indeed sorry to know that some of them think it useless to preach in the cities. Notice the language of Christ to his disciples after his resurrection, "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations," etc. Matt. 28: 29. He does not say, "Go and teach some nations, or go and teach where it suits you best, or when it suits you best," but "Go and teach all nations."

Christ was not partial in his teaching; he wanted all nations to hear, and accept his new plan of salvation. It is impossible for one to accept a thing before hearing or knowing something of it, and it may seem absurd to some, for me to say there are thousands of people in these United States, who know nothing of the German Baptists or Dunkards; nevertheless it is true.

Brethren, why do we not have more churches in the cities? Is it because the souls are not as precious as those in the country? Surely not, for we all have friends in the cities whose souls are as dear to them, as yours is to you or mine to me. Is it because there are not enough of ministers? Is it because the churches do not grow fast enough? Is it because the members will not dress plain enough? No, this cannot be the reason, for a true follower of Christ will dress in the order of the church, otherwise he is not a true follower of our Blessed Redeemer. "Then said Jesus unto his disciples, if any man will come after me, let him deny himself, and take up his cross and follow me." Matt. 16: 24.

Do we neglect city mission because Christ and his disciples did not preach any in the cities? No, for they did much teaching in the synagogues of Jerusalem and the surrounding towns. Notice how Paul traveled from town to town to preach the Gospel. Should not this be an example for us to follow? True, the temptations to allure one into the destructive fashions and follies of the world, are more numerous in the cities than in the country, hence it is reasonable that there should be more churches, more preaching, and more religious influences there, to counteract the works of our adversary, the devil. I hope and pray that we may, in the near future, have numerous and prosperous churches in all the cities (great and small) throughout the world. We can have it, brethren and sisters, if we go about it with the right spirit, and be more zealous in the vineyard of the Lord.

We should not be ashamed of our omnipotent Leader, for Christ said, "Whosoever, therefore, shall be ashamed of me, and of my words in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed when he cometh in the glory of his Father with his holy angels." Mark 8: 38. Then, to be ashamed of Christ, means to go to everlasting damnation.

I was made to rejoice last week (while on a visit to the brethren and sisters of Woodberry, Baltimore City, Md.,) to see how earnest they were, and the effort they put forth to promote the cause of Christ. May the grace of God ever be with us all, and inspire our souls with the love of God, that we may go forth with renewed energy, and new resolutions, to do more for the cause and upbuilding of the church of God. Let us pray to this end, brethren!

WORK FOR THE CHILDREN.

(Written by Emily Hylton shortly before her death.)

To work for Jesus among the children is the most hopeful and encouraging of all work. As we sow we shall also reap. It is a field in which the seed of immortality can be sown to great profit. We find in Matthew where little children were brought to Christ that he might bless them. He also used the same little children as an example to teach his disciples a lesson of humility. He taught them that unless they became as one of those little ones, they should not be subjects of his heavenly kingdom. Parents can now feel that their little ones are near and dear to Christ.

Why should we let our children spend the hours of the Lord's Day in a manner which is displeasing in the sight of God, when the Bible teaches us to bring up our children in the nurture and admonition of the Lord? Let us keep them on green pastures, and feed them on spiritual food. Let them drink of the pure Water of Life, and teach them to remember the Sabbath Day, "to keep it holy." Let the Sunday workers go forward in labors of love, performing all Christian duties with earnestness and zeal! Remember that the Lord will not overlook a mite cast into his treasury!

Many a child of an unruly disposition has been trained and won by being brought into the light of the Gospel. An active little child will be quite zealous in doing good deeds, if once it is started in the right path, and if cared for and helped by careful trainers.

Jesus spent his life in doing good, and if we have his spirit, we will follow in his footsteps, and not be discouraged by the difficulties in the way.

When we meet with the children on Sunday morning, it make us rejoice to see their loving faces, and bright eyes sparkling, as if they were looking for some father or mother, to lead them in prayer, or teach them those glorious truths of the Bible. Oh, where are those fathers and mothers who have their talents buried, and spend their precious time, as if they had nothing to do? What will the condition be of such people, when the Bridegroom cometh? I fear the message for them will be, "Depart from me, for I never knew you."

We would say to the parents, engaged in Sunday-school work, "You are laying up treasures in heaven by setting good examples before your children." Parents, come to Sunday-school with your children! Guard them well and try to keep them from the evil of this world, for they are as tender plants, and need careful training. As they become older, they will, after having made the proper beginning, follow the right way. If there be any in the Sunday-school that are discouraged by some difficulties in the way, let us give them words of comfort, a smile of love, and a look of sympathy, showing that we want them to be happy, and go on their way rejoicing.

A NEW OPENING.

There seems to be no end to opportunities for doing good. The following shows that there are many fields in which great good may be done by those who are willing to let their light shine. We clip from the Christian Standard:

"A new sort of mission work has been organized in New York, which recognizes that the gospel of culture is for every creature. An organization has been formed called the "University Settlement Society," and in it are such men as Pres. Low, of Columbia College, R. W. Gilder, of the Century, Felix Adler and Carl Schurtz. The purpose is to establish in the tenement-house districts, and parts of the city inhabited by laboring men, residences where college men shall dwell, and interest themselves in and identify themselves with their neighbors. Their prospectus says: "It has been demonstrated that educated men and women, living and working among the poor, associating with them as equals, but introducing into the tenement houses all that trained intelligence and friendly sympathy can give, can make themselves a most efficient means of bettering and elevating the mental, moral and physical condition of the people.' Nor is this wholly a matter of theory. Two years ago a company of young ladies, all college students, rented a spacious house in one of the dilapidated and crowded parts of the city. They called themselves the "College Colony," and made themselves "neighborly" with the poor and ignorant people. They established bath-rooms in the basement, and offered them to their "neighbors" at five cents a bath. A physician was installed in the same basement for their benefit. A playground for the children was fitted up in the rear, and a free circulating library established. The poor, tired mothers of the neighborhood were invited in at stated times. Great good has come of it.

One of our exchanges makes a good point against the infallibility of the Pope of Rome in the following: "The Roman Catholics have a good way of dealing with these indeterminate questions. When the public falls into doubt as to whether a certain alleged event ever really came to pass, the matter is referred to the Pope of Rome, and, in the course of time, he tells his people what was or is the fact in the case, and that ends the anxiety and the ignorance. In the astronomical matter brought before the Pope by Galileo the whole public regarded the decision, but the earth itself would not settle down; it went on around the sun; but this failure of the church taught it not to meddle with planets and suns and such heavy things, but to issue its conclusions over such old and dead affairs as are in no danger of making a motion at some unexpected time after the eternal rest had set in."

"Many a life is earnest in the service which still lacks the freshness of a conscious fellowship with God, and the joy of a constraining love."

The Gospel Messenger

Is the recognized organ of the German Baptist or Brethren's church, and advocates the form of doctrine taught in the New Testament and pleads for a return to apostolic and primitive Christianity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and maintains that Faith toward God, Repentance from dead works, Regeneration of the heart and mind, baptism by Trine Immersion for remission of sins unto the reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, are the means of adoption into the household of God, the church militant.

It also maintains that Feet-washing, as taught in John 13, both by example and command of Jesus, should be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper, instituted by Christ and as universally observed by the apostles and the early Christians, is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening or after the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ.

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That the principle of Plain Dressing and of Non-conformity to the world, as taught in the New Testament, should be observed by the followers of Christ.

That the Scriptural duty of Anointing the Sick with Oil, in the Name of the Lord, James 5: 14, is binding upon all Christians.

It also advocates the church's duty to support Missionary and Tract Work, thus going to the Lord for the spread of the Gospel and for the conversion of sinners.

In short, it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discords of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe.

Mount Morris, Ill., - - - - July 14, 1891

BRO. J. C. LAHMAN, of Franklin Grove, has been with us several days. He preached for us Sunday evening July 5. We always appreciate his presence and services.

BRO. P. S. MEYERS and wife, who have been spending some time in Southern California, have returned to their home at Cerro Gordo, Ill., where they may now be addressed.

BRO. M. M. BASHOR, of Oregon, went from the Annual Meeting to Tennessee, where he has since done a good deal of preaching. Eleven have united with the church at the points where he held meetings.

ON his return home from Hagerstown, Md., Bro. T. J. Nair, of Lordsburg, Cal., delivered an interesting discourse on the Annual Meeting. Discourses of that kind are appreciated by the members generally, and should be encouraged.

BRO. J. G. ROYER filled the appointment in Chicago last Sunday, July 5.

THE good work seems to be going on in Philadelphia. Bro. T. T. Myers reports four more received by confession and baptism, with good interest and deep feeling generally. May the Lord continue to bless the work!

ELD. JACOB TROSTLE, of Hope, Kans., has been visiting among friends and relatives in Ogle and Lee Counties, and also did some preaching before returning home. He called at the office during our absence. We regret that we could not meet him.

ELD. JOHN METZGER, of Cerro Gordo, Illinois, and his son, Eld. J. W. Metzger, of Indiana, have decided to make Southern California their home for a time, and with their wives left Cerro Gordo July 7, for Lordsburg, California, where they may hereafter be addressed. While we regret to lose the valuable services of these earnest brethren, we nevertheless rejoice to know that they are locating where their services will be much needed. May the Lord bless their future labors!

OUR meeting in the Chapel, on July 4, was very largely attended and much appreciated by all present. An address was delivered by Bro. Miller on our relation to civil government, and our duties towards those in authority. The meeting not only afforded a very suitable place for members to spend the Fourth, but enabled them to publicly thank the Giver of every good and perfect gift for this land of religious liberty. We probably do not appreciate the blessings we really enjoy.

OUR subscription list is already quite large, extending to nearly every State and Territory in the Union, as well as portions of Canada and Europe, but with a little effort upon the part of all our agents and friends, we feel confident that this list may be greatly increased. Remember that there are thousands who would take the MESSENGER if asked to do so, and informed of Bro. Miller's trip through the Bible Lands. Tell all of your neighbors and friends about it. The price of the MESSENGER to the end of the year is only fifty cents.

ANY country without the Bible is in darkness, so that the people can not see what they are doing religiously. But give them the light of the Gospel to light up their pathway, to light up the country, then they can see how to work understandingly. The Gospel light is as essential to the prosperity of a nation as it is to the success of an individual. It enables even the unbelieving man to see what is right between man and man. It enables unbelieving law-makers to enact laws in harmony with right principles, so that the righteous may live unmolested in the exercise of their Christian duties.

WE have a request to make of our readers concerning the life of Eld. Geo. Wolfe, who died near Liberty, Adams Co., Illinois, about twenty years ago. We are gathering information concerning his life and history, and therefore request our readers to send us every item of interest they know, and have heard about him from boyhood to old age. At the time of his death considerable was said about him in the Quincy (Ill.,) papers. If any of these papers are in existence, we would like to get the use of them so as to copy the information they contain, and will then return the papers to their owners. If our readers will aid us, as requested above, we may give them something after awhile that will prove exceedingly interesting reading.

IT is indeed encouraging to note that a number of congregations are already making preparations for a series of meetings early in the fall. Great good may result from these efforts if the members will also aid the ministers in the work. This they can do by their presence, prayers, singing and active zeal. There is nothing like well-directed zeal in a protracted meeting.

THE Brethren at Covina, Cal., are constructing a pool in their church-yard in which to do their baptizing. This frequently becomes necessary in countries where there is a great scarcity of water. At Covina water is brought from quite a distance for irrigating the lands. This pool is supplied with running water procured in that manner. In the times of the apostles all the baptizing at Jerusalem had to be done in artificial pools, some of which are standing to this day. The pool of Siloam, near Mt. Moriah, is still used by modern missionaries for that purpose.

BRO. ANDREW HUTCHISON has returned to his home at McPherson, Kansas, with the intention of remaining home during the present month. He thinks some of spending next winter in Southern California, trusting that it may, in a measure, improve his health. Of course he can never expect to entirely recover, having met with an accident in his eighteenth year, which internally injured him for life. He never knows what it is to be entirely free of pain, and yet he keeps constantly at work about his Father's business. If those who are thus suffering, labor so earnestly in behalf of the Master's cause, and yet do no more than their duty, what must be said of others who are strong, and have plenty of time and means at their command, and yet do little or nothing for the Lord?

ON Monday, July 6, Bro. D. L. Miller and wife left Mt. Morris on their long-contemplated trip to Europe and the Bible Lands. They expect to spend a few weeks among the churches in the East, and then sail from New York August 1, on the steamer "Aller." Parties desiring to write them before they leave America, will address them thus: "D. L. Miller, New York, N. Y., (in care of Oelrichs and Co., No. 2 Bowling Green, on outgoing steamer 'Aller')." Place the part, in parentheses, at the lower left-hand corner of the envelope. Bro. Miller has spent a good deal of time and means preparing for this trip, having had it in contemplation for several years. He goes well prepared, and if the Lord spares him, and gives him good health, we may expect many very interesting communications from him.

NEAR Naples, Italy, is the volcano Vesuvius. It is reported that two Brazilian travelers recently thought to climb to the top of the mountain and look into the crater. They were warned not to do so. In spite of this warning, accompanied by a guide, they determined to make the ascent. They did so and reached the top of the mountain in safety. There they were noticed to be standing near the crater, gazing into its mysteries. Suddenly the whole party was enveloped in a dense cloud of sulphurous smoke, which so stupefied the travelers that one of them reeled about for a moment, then staggered and fell headforemost into the crater. The guide, who accompanied the two Brazilians, had in the meantime caught hold of the second traveler and half dragged, half pushed him into a position where the crater fumes could not affect him, thus saving the traveler's life. The unfortunate traveler was Dr. Silva Jordan, a journalist. A Grecian philosopher met the same fate 2,500 years ago.

BRETHREN'S ALMANAC.

THE time is here when we must prepare our material for the Brethren's Almanac for 1892. The ministerial list is a very important department, and we wish to have it as correct as possible, therefore request our readers to immediately examine the list and send in all the corrections of which they have any knowledge. The names that are now in, and are correct, you will say nothing about, but mention only the corrections to be made, such as removing names of those who have died, or for any cause are no more in the ministry, adding the names of such as have been elected to the ministry, and altering the address of those who have changed their addresses.

We also need interesting and instructive articles to fill the space allotted to reading matter, and for this purpose solicit good biographical sketches, histories of churches, and items of general church interest. All matter intended for the Almanac should reach us not later than September 1.

BINDING AND LOOSING.

Please explain, through the MESSENGER, that part of Matt. 16: 19 which says: "Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." HUMPHREY TALHELM.

THIS language was addressed to Peter, unto whom were given "the keys of the kingdom of heaven." What was said to him concerning binding and loosing was intended for the other apostles as well, for in John 20: 23 we have the same principle, contained in language addressed to the apostles collectively as follows: "Whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained."

In Matt. 18: 18 we have the same language in substance, intended for the church, as a body, in all ages of the world, reading thus: "Verily I say unto you, whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven."

The power to bind and loose has been delegated to the church, accompanied with instructions how to use the power. The church is to properly use the power, but must not abuse it. Her limits are clearly defined in the Written Word. It should be remembered, that her authority to act is in writing; her limits to exercise this power are also in writing. Beyond this written document she has no power to either loose or bind. Her power, or authority, begins where the Gospel begins, and ends with the New Testament. At the close of the last chapter of Revelation (verse 19) the divine seal is set. Beyond that seal no human power can go. The New Testament, with the eternal seal of heaven set upon it, is handed to the church, containing her authority to act with full instructions. It is the duty of the church to take this book, and see that its instructions are fully carried out in every department of church work. It is not only her privilege, but her duty to interpret the book with a view of aiding all the members in rightly understanding their obligations to God and man. In the exercise of her authority the church has no right to add to, take from, or in any manner change any of the instructions or principles laid down in this book. It is her duty to study, to teach, and execute to the jot. What this book requires of members it is the bounden duty of the church to require also, and enforce. Whatever liberties the book grants to members must also be recognized by the church. Then, on the other hand, the church has no authority to grant liberty where it is not granted by the authority of the New Testament.

Furthermore, the church may determine whether an action, upon the part of a member or members, is in keeping with the spirit of the New Testament. If it is clear in her mind that it is not in harmony with the spirit, or accepted meaning of the Scriptures, then it is also her duty to see that such actions are condemned and her judgment properly enforced.

In every instance when the church binds anything on a member, and it is so required in the Scriptures, that binding is endorsed in heaven. About this there can be no uncertainty. If the church follows the written instructions, laid down in the New Testament, there can be no doubt about it. But when it comes to binding anything on a man according to the spirit of the Scriptures, great caution must be used. There are chances of being mistaken. The church should look at the case carefully, and be certain that she is right before she determines to bind. If she should lay on a member that which the Scriptures do not require, she makes a mistake, for which she will be held accountable. Her saying a thing is right does not make it right. The question of right or wrong must be determined by both the letter and spirit of the Scriptures. When it says, "Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven," it must be understood that the binding must be done strictly according to the instructions laid down in the Scriptures. If there is any departure from these Scriptural instructions, the binding will not be endorsed in heaven.

Equal care must be exercised in loosing, or granting liberty. If a member does that which is contrary to the Scriptures, and the church excuses him, or releases him from any requirements in the way of a confession, etc, that action will not be endorsed in heaven, "Whatsoever ye loose on earth" will not be loosed in heaven, unless it is done according to the Scriptures.

It is needful that the church use great caution in this binding and loosing, for if she goes too far, she oversteps her authority. If she does not go far enough, she neglects her duty. Hence there is great need of watchfulness upon the part of those who administer church government, as well as a necessity for carefully studying the Scriptures in order that we may fully understand our duties as well as our privileges.

The question of liberty, perhaps, deserves more attention than it has generally received. We should not use our liberty as a cloak, behind which to do that which is wrong, or in any manner displeasing to the church. There is such a thing as members using their liberty imprudently, so as not only to wound the feelings of their brethren, but to actually injure the cause itself. Liberty to do good and right is as wide as the world itself, but liberty to gratify our own desires, and for personal interest, is limited by the question of law and expediency. For doing what is right and good, the man is absolutely free—unbound. There is no law in heaven, or rule in the church to interfere. He is a free man. He will not fall into the judgment of either the church or heaven, unless he oversteps the bounds of his liberty.

"Whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven," or "whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them," is "the perfect law of liberty," referred to in James 1: 25. It liberates the entire human family from all the rights and ceremonies of the Old Law, and also liberates every penitent sinner from the burden of his sins, and makes of him a free man—free from the Old Law, free from his sins, and free to do that which is right.

The whole question of binding and loosing hinges on the right interpretation and application of the Written Word, the authority of the church being limited to what is written.

1. THE LAW.—"Sin is the transgression of the law." 1 John 3: 4. "Where no law is there is no transgression." Rom. 4: 15. Where there is a plain case of the transgression of the law, it becomes the duty of the church to act promptly, and see that the demands of the law are fully carried out.

2. EXPEDIENCY.—Paul says: "All things are lawful unto me; but all things are not expedient." 1 Cor. 6: 12. By "all things" is meant those things, not prohibited in the Written Word. While it may be lawful to do certain things, against which there is no law, yet it may not be expedient, hence the law of expediency must be put into execution. Expediencies may possibly vary in different ages, hence the necessity of the church approaching and handling such questions with great wisdom, so that she does not either overstep her authority or fall short of her duty.

3. APPEARANCE.—We are told to "abstain from all appearance of evil." 1 Thess. 5: 22. An act may not be evil in itself, but it may have that appearance. If in the mind of the church the appearance of anything is evil, it is certainly her duty to require members to respect her judgment. In dealing with the two last propositions, conclusions must be reached in harmony with the spirit and accepted meaning of the Scriptures. If the decision of the church is properly predicated upon the spirit and the meaning of the Scriptures, her action is binding both on earth and in heaven, not because the church says so, but because the Scriptures so teach.

4. ADVICE.—The church may give advice, but cannot enforce it. Even an inspired apostle did not presume to require that his advice be made a rule of faith or practice.

The Roman Catholic church claims the power to make laws, and then enforce them, and refers to what the Scriptures say concerning binding and loosing for her authority. But these Scriptures give no authority whatever beyond what is written. The power to make or enact laws, pertaining to religion, has never been delegated to man since the world began. All laws affecting the Christian religion are made in the courts of heaven, and stamped with the Divine Seal. These laws must be perfect; man can make nothing that is perfect, therefore the power to make laws, affecting our eternal interest, has never been delegated to him.

But to the church has been given the power to execute and interpret the law, which God has made and given to man. Not only so, but she is held responsible for her manner of executing and interpreting. She has the power to both bind and loose, but must always use the law for that purpose. At the end of the law is the seal. There she must stop. Whatever is found between that seal and the beginning, the church may and must apply, properly interpreted. She is not only to apply the letter of the law, but the spirit also. J. H. M.

On the Way.

JUNE 18 I was made happy to meet with the members of the Baugo church at their feast. Not so many members communed as on former occasions, owing to a heavy rain about the time of the meeting, nevertheless the feast was a pleasant one. Next morning they held a choice for one minister and two deacons. Bro. Peter Huffman was chosen to the ministry, and brethren Christian Metzler and Delbert Markham were chosen deacons.

June 19 the Elkhart church held their feast. Our feast was enjoyable. Good preaching and singing is the life of any meeting. How much joy and consolation it affords the Christian soldier, when engaged in the Master's work!

June 20 we met with the Solomon's Creek church in Communion services. Their large house was well filled. Here, as before, our ears were saluted with good music. How charming and soul-reviving such feasts are to the child of God!

I notice a grand improvement in our Communions, as held now, over those held years ago. The order seems so much better. We commenced at 5 o'clock with 300 communicants, and by 9 o'clock, or soon after, we closed. Twenty years ago I remember well that we commenced at the same time, with the same number of communicants, and often the meeting was continued until 11 o'clock, and sometimes later. The single mode of feet-washing gives better order and much time is saved. Then, too, no time is lost between the different services by waiting on the speaker. "Let everything be done decently and in order."

On my return from Annual Meeting I found that my wife had been sick for some time. She was taken sick at Bro J. C. Murray's, at Nappanee, Ind. Bro. Shoemaker, a skillful physician, soon had the patient on a fair way of recovery.

J. H. MILLER.

Goshen, Ind., June 23, '91.

A Sensible Letter.

[MANY of our readers will remember P. J. Brown, of Congress, Ohio, as formerly a minister among us, but now a minister among the Progressives. He has written a real sensible article to the Brethren's Evangelist concerning a convention they recently held in Ohio. We copy the following from the article, and commend the tenor of it to our readers, believing that it goes far towards establishing the fact that there must be a unity of action among congregations in order to keep themselves, as well as their ministers, in the line of consistency.—ED.]

"The work done at the late Conference is of the solid kind. Chief among it was the adoption of the constitution that was proposed a year ago, and upon which the churches voted during the year. It was found that all who took action (and all but three or four did), voted in favor of adoption, except one. That one was our neighbor Homer, in Medina county; but she instructed her delegates to change her vote in case a majority were in favor of adoption. The final vote on the question in the convention was, on a motion to make the decision unanimous, seconded by brother Jacobs, of Homer. This was adopted without a dissenting voice. Thus the Ohio churches are an association, an organized body ready for work, that will mean something more than an irresponsible lot of freethinkers. Ministers are made amenable to the church, and the church amenable to the Conference.

"This does away with that unlimited, unbridled congregationalism, tending towards individualism, anarchy and denominational suicide. When a minister undertakes to play hide and seek with the doctrine, the church is to set him right, and if the church fails to do so, the Conference will not fail to set the church in order. And the best way in the world for ministers and churches not to get hurt by the workings of this constitution, will be for all to stick to the Gospel, the whole Gospel and nothing but the Gospel, and not a hair on their head will fall. But if a church fails to do so, and tries to shelter a minister who is unsound in doctrine, or in morals, the Conference will send them a committee, who will set them in order, and the church will no longer be able to ask, Who sent you here to interfere in our liberty?

"We have already tested the workings of the new arrangement. One of our Ohio churches has been in a stew and broil, for more than a year, inaugurated by one of our would-be-smart young ministers, who assumed to hold his membership in the Brethren church at large, but would not be held responsible to duty in the local congregation; just as if I should say: 'I will be a good citizen of the State of Ohio, and claim the protection of her laws, but I acknowledge no allegiance to Wayne County. I will not pay any tax here nor vote.' All this he did because he could not control the church, elder and all, in some whimsical notion of his own. Then he began to work on the prejudices of some of the members, and with 'good words and fair speeches,' began to draw disciples after him and thus the church seemed to be hopelessly divided. We sent a committee of three brethren, who are sound in the faith, and who were able to discover the true state of affairs, and they got rid of the leader of the schism and opened the eyes of others so that peace and harmony are restored. Thanks to the workings of the constitution.'"

Laconics.

Two and one-half per cent of the population of the United States own one-half of all the wealth. The entire wealth of the United States is not far from sixty-five billions. The population is about sixty-five millions.

This gives an average wealth of about one thousand dollars. There are nine million mortgaged homes in the United States. The entire mortgaged indebtedness is about four billion five hundred millions.

There are twenty-five thousand mortgages in Maryland. Eighty per cent of all the houses in the United States are mortgaged.

The interest on these mortgages amounts to about three hundred sixty millions a year. There are mortgages in ten Western States amounting to one billion two hundred millions.

Congress and the States enact about twenty thousand laws per annum.

Business competition is properly called industrial warfare.

The United States has the largest tenant farming class of any nation in the world. The daily interest on mortgages for each man, woman and child is about one and two-thirds cents. Thirty-six billions of the nation's wealth is owned by thirty-one thousand persons.

There are five hundred fifty persons who average twenty millions. Two hundred persons own four billions. Wm. Vanderbilt owns one hundred sixty-five thousand farms.

Between Dobbs Ferry and Tarrytown, N. Y.,—a distance of six miles,—live sixty-three millionaires who own together, five hundred millions. One hundred millionaires live in Pittsburg, Pa.

New York has a thousand, or more, millionaires. Chicago has scores of them. Other large cities are the same. Secretary Windom said in a speech: "There are five men in New York, who by a single touch of the pen, or click of the wire, can reduce values all over the country from fifty to one hundred per cent." There were four hundred ninety trusts organized in less than three years.

The average mortgaged debt of the United States is about sixty-nine dollars per capita. The interest is over five dollars per capita, or about twenty-six dollars, for every family of five persons.

In 1847 only one man was estimated, in the United States, to be worth more than five millions. Now there are about seven thousand millionaires.

The taxes and interest against the products of the nation amount to more than one-half of the value of the products. Cost of production consumes in many cases more than the other half. This accounts for the fact of there being so many evictions, foreclosures and idle persons in the United States.

QUERY.—What bearing do you think all this has on the Brethren's misssionary enterprises? What bearing on crime? What bearing on Christianity in general? What bearing on the happiness and prosperity of the poor? What moral good accrues to the aristocracy?

J. L. SWITZER.

REMARKS.

A study of the above facts is both interesting and humiliating. Interesting because of the information contained therein. Humiliating because of the great burdens resting on the poor, and the unequal division of property. Still more humiliating because thousands of these poor are spending millions of dollars for unnecessary things in the way of intoxicating drinks, tobacco and gaudy dressing. Humiliating because so many are not making good use of what little the Lord has given them.

MORAL.—Let every man and woman make the very best possible use of that which they have, whether it be money, talent or influence. Let those who are rich help the poor, and then let the poor practice economy and industry. It is unfortunate that much wealth is in the hands of a few, and yet, if it were all equally divided among the poor it would soon find its way back into the hands of the few again. You cannot carry water in leaky vessels, and it is hard to get the water out of tight vessels without upsetting them. After all, perhaps, it is best for each man to attend to his own business well, do all the good he can, and trust God for the rest.

A nation like ours, with its vast population, wealth, debts, enterprise, resources, etc., is a big thing to handle. Were we to undertake such a task, with hundreds of years at our disposal, we would commence at the bottom among the poor and laboring classes, educating every child, give good moral and religious training, teach great economy, industrious habits, healthy living, get rid of leaky vessels, financially, intellectually and religiously, and thus prepare the masses to rise and pave the way for the rich to come down. But with all our efforts at reforming there will always be the rich and the poor. The rich will fall into many temptations, while the poor are here for our charity, to do them good when we can. The religion of Jesus Christ is the world's only salvation. Money belongs to the world, and though the rich may get more of it than they deserve, still they must render an account for all they possess, and when they take their departure from this world, must leave behind the last cent. Not so with Christianity. The more of that we have the more we will have to carry with us to heaven. Having food and raiment, let us therewith be content, seeking first the kingdom of heaven and its righteousness, and all else we need will be added if we only do our part. J. H. M.

A Witness.

"I shall not die, but live, and declare the works of the Lord. The Lord hath chastened me sore: but he hath not given me over unto death."—Ps. 118: 17, 18.

Joy and gratitude prompt me to perform a duty which I feel I owe to God and humanity in general, but especially to the sick, that is, that I should testify to the effect of the provision made for the latter in James 5: 14, 15.

For thirteen years I have endured physical suffering with only brief intervals of partial relief. All the physicians, whom we consulted, pronounced my case incurable, and the only benefit medical aid afforded me was temporary. "Wasting nerves, a delicate constitution and lack of vital force prevented a cure,"—so the doctors said.

After all human remedies had failed, with strength and vitality constantly declining, and the condition of a confirmed invalid seemed the only alternative, in answer to my "call" our elder and his co-laborer came May 9, 1891, and anointed me for "the healing of my physical infirmities," according to the Scripture referred to above. After the service,—even from the close of the fervent prayer offered for my healing, I began to gain strength, and have been constantly improving in health ever since. At this writing, June 19, I am stronger, and have less pain than I have had for long, weary years.

"Is any sick among you?"—why not avail yourselves of this service and receive the promised benefit? Truly it is verified in my case that "all the promises of God in him (Christ) are yea, and in him amen unto the glory of God by us." 2 Cor. 1: 20. O bless the Lord for this witness, and magnify his holy name, for he is worthy.

Thoughts Suggested by "Annual Meeting Notes."

IN reading the notes in No. 24 of MESSENGER, I was impressed with one special note, which narrates the little circumstance which occurred on Wednesday evening, at, or near, the Orphan's Home. There is something sublime and beautiful connected with it, illustrating the individuality and unity of the members of our Fraternity, and which can be said of no other denomination of people.

Assembled on the banks of that little stream of water were members from different localities of our great Brotherhood to attend to and witness the introduction of one of God's dear "little ones,"—a young sister,—into the great family of heaven. The candidate is said to be a resident of Cumberland County Pa., while another sister and I, who prepared her for the watery grave, live away off here in Indiana. The administrator,—Eld. Isaac Frantz,—lives in Ohio. He was assisted by Bro. D. D. Emmert who resides in Maryland. Though strangers in the flesh, yet we all belong to the "one body," and are children of the same family,—heirs of the same inheritance,—travelers to the same place! Oh, what a comforting assurance to believe, that, even though we parted as we met,—entire strangers,—never to meet again till we meet before the great tribunal bar of God, yet, if we prove faithful to our baptismal vow until death, we may meet again in that celestial home where parting will be known no more forever! SARAH M. SAUNDERS.

Landess, Ind.

From Tearcoat, W. Va.

BRO. J. W. ABERNATHY, of Garrett Co., Md., commenced a series of meetings in the Tearcoat congregation, at Pentecost, and continued about ten days. Bro. Abernathy labored faithfully and zealously, using the Gospel Sword with power, and, truly, we had a Pentecostal outpouring. As an immediate result, we had seven additions by baptism and one reclaimed.

On Saturday evening, May 23, we met to enjoy a Communion, which was one of the most enjoyable feasts we ever attended. At this feast we had the assistance of elders Samuel A. and Aaron Fike of Preston County, W. Va.

These brethren did good service at the sacred desk, and dealt out bountifully and earnestly the Bread of Life. We believe that all felt it was good to be there. From here brethren S. A. and A. Fike went to Beaver Run (our home church) and attended a council-meeting at which important business was transacted. At this council brethren George S. Arnold and George W. Leatherman were ordained to the office of elder. We hope these brethren may be efficient and useful in the good work and high calling of their office.

After this council our dear brethren gave us the parting hand to return home, and truly our best wishes go with them! We hope they may come again. Bro. Abernathy was called home on account of sickness, and all felt that the meeting closed too soon. We hope to report some more good news from this church soon. May the Lord bless Bro. Isaac and send him to us again!

D. B. ARNOLD.

From Salem, Oregon.

AFTER parting with the members in Neosho County, Kans., Bro. Joseph Grable and I boarded the train at Galesburg, May 18, and had a pleasant journey over mountains and canyons for five days and a half. We arrived in Salem, Oregon, May 23, where we met my husband. After an absence of over six months we were glad to meet again. Our home for the present is in the beautiful City of Salem. We like our new home well so far.

June 18 we went out into the country, about eight miles, to attend a love-feast, near the residence of Bro. David Early, at Macleay. We found our brother sick; he has been confined to his room over four weeks, but we found him strong in the faith, enjoying himself in the spiritual life. On Wednesday evening, June 17, the Brethren held a meeting at Bro. Early's. On Friday evening was our Communion meeting. About thirty or forty members surrounded the table of the Lord. On Saturday morning we had a social meeting,—the best social meeting I ever attended. The brethren and sisters nearly all took part in the social exercises. We felt that the Spirit of God was with us, and we were made to rejoice. At 11 o'clock an able sermon was preached by Elder Sidney Hodgden, and at the close of that sermon a young man came forward, weeping, wishing to unite with the church. There were also two added by letter. Our meeting lasted over one week. Ministers present were brethren Joseph B. Early, our resident minister, S. S. Barklow, of Coos Co., Oregon, and Sidney Hodgden, of Moscow, Idaho. The weather was unpleasant during our meeting, but it was a pleasant and profitable one. Saints were built up in the most holy faith of the Gospel, and sinners, like King Agrippa, were almost persuaded to be Christians. On Sunday morning was the children's meeting, addressed by Bro. Joseph B. Early.

SARAH BRICKER.

From the South.

As I have received many letters of inquiry in regard to our southern home, our climate, health, means of making a livelihood, etc., permit me to answer some of those questions through the GOSPEL MESSENGER, hoping that, by so doing, all may be benefited. The climate is all that any one could wish for.

This point is known as a great health resort for the northern tourist. We are only three miles from the Bay and about the same distance from the Gulf. The soil is of a dark, sandy nature and very productive. We have lived on this point just one year, and in that time have been very successful in growing vegetables of all kinds, such as cabbage, tomatoes, turnips, radishes, lettuce, beans, peas, squash, onions, mustard, cucumbers, and are now enjoying as fine water-melons and musk-melons as I ever saw in the North. The last winter we raised forty bushels of onions at a total cost of $14.00, including fertilizer, seed and help, and they net us $2.00 per bushel. We consider that very good for Florida. We earnestly ask our brethren and friends when they visit Florida to come and see this portion of country. We have some frosts here, but not enough to injure the mangoe, the avocado pear, or the guava. All who are acquainted with our Southern fruits know that these are very sensitive to the cold, and that there are very few sections in Florida where they can be successfully grown. The price will verify the fact, as the mangoe sells from 30 cents to 40 cents per dozen while the pear brings about $1.00 per dozen. The orange, lemon, lime, pomelo (or grape fruit), in fact all kinds of semi-tropical fruits, flourish in this section. Aside from this being a healthful country and a fine climate, it is a lovely country and is only waiting for industrious hands to make it a grand country.

I would again say to my brethren and friends, you, that are seeking homes in the South, do not stop until you have seen this portion of Florida, and then be your own judge. I do not ask any one to take my word; only come and see. There are thousands of acres of land, and good land, too, that can be bought for from $3.50 to $10.00 per acre, from four to five miles from St. Petersburg, but within from one-fourth to one mile from a shipping station and in sight of railroad. Any one desiring to know more about this country will please write me, inclosing stamp, and I will answer any and all questions as best I can.

SUSAN M. MOHR.

St. Petersburg, Fla., June 23, 1891.

[We do not publish the above with a view of advertising the country, but mainly for the purpose of calling attention to that part of the South as a suitable place for members to locate and build up a congregation of members. St. Petersburg is near Tampa, and about one hundred miles South of Keuka. At Keuka is the only organized church in the State, and there ought to be many more. But, in going to any country, look carefully, be your own judge, work hard, live up to your profession, trust God and keep up courage. Unless you have a good deal of courage you had better not go. It takes men and women of pluck to settle any new country. For such persons there is plenty of room in Florida, as well as other parts of the South, and also openings to accomplish much good.—ED.

From the White Church, Ind.

JUNE 3 was our quarterly council. A good deal of business came up before the meeting and passed off pleasantly, yet the pruning knife had to be used, to cut one branch from the body. This is never a pleasant matter, for it always leaves a wound to be healed, however small the branch may be.

But while it was painful to see the love of one grow cold, it was joy, on the other hand, to see one young man step out from the world to walk with the people of God. It encourages us to see the young devoting their lives to the Lord, all their days. May the earnestness and devotion of our brother reach far into the hearts of his associates, and those that are near him by the ties of nature, that it may be an incentive to move them heavenward.

O, how little we value the soul, when we prefer to stay in the world to gain a few of its fleeting pleasures! May the language of the apostle ring in our ears with all of its power, "Be ye not conformed to this world, but be ye transformed (changed), by the renewing of your heart and mind." If our affections are set on the things above, they will not be on the things of the world, and if they are not on the things of the world, the fashions will not keep us out of the church. Let us show our love to God by keeping his commandments, and to do that we must adorn these bodies in modest apparel. 1 Tim. 2: 9.

May God help us to read his Word with an understanding heart, and may we, with a willing mind, obey all its teachings!

Our Communion has been changed from Oct. 10 to Oct. 15. The usual invitation is extended to all. D. C. CAMPBELL.

Origin of the "River Brethren."

I WAS much interested in the query about the Origin of the River Brethren, as my mother's name was Engle and her father's father (Hans Engle) one of the first members of that church.

The answers that were given by Sarah Miller and J. L. Switzer are both good and satisfactory. I felt like adding the following to it which we have from a very reliable source, written by an aged minister of the United Brethren church,—John Fohl, of Chambersburg, Pa. It reads as follows:

"When I visited the Pennsylvania Conference of the United Brethren in Christ, in March, 1836, I was the most youthful of the whole body, consisting of about one hundred ministers, and now, after the lapse of fifty-five years, I am the only member that remains alive. To me this appears wonderful. By the goodnes of God my mental powers are not the least impaired, and I have physical strength to preach one, two, and three times each day. Surely the Lord has been very good to me, and to him alone I give all the glory. As I am nothing, Christ is all.

"A little over one hundred years ago Wm. Otterbein, of the German Reformed church, Martin Beam, of the Mennonite church, George A. Geeting, of the German Reformed church, Christian Newcomer, of the Mennonite church, John Neidig, of the Mennonite church, and a Rev. Treunerer of the Lutheran church, met in consultation. Having received the power of regenerating grace, and being of one heart and mind, they, in the Providence of God, became acquainted with each other, and were disposed to hold annual meetings in preaching Christ and the resurrection. Their meetings were generally held about Whitsuntide Sunday and the day following, and were very largely attended. They were changed alternately from Maryland to Pennsylvania.

"One of those places where their meetings were held, was on the East side of the River in Lancaster County, Pa., where the Lord had gathered to himself a people, and those ministers, in speaking of that appointment, were in the habit of calling them 'River Brethren,' or 'Brethren at the River,' in the way of distinction from other appointments.

"Amidst all their labors they, as yet, had no organization, but labored in union for the salvation of souls.

"In process of time the work multiplied, and their converts looked to them as ministers for instruction and spiritual food. No doubt, moved by the Holy Ghost, they saw the necessity of forming into an organization and adopting rules by which they should be governed in the future. Accordingly a first conference met in a log school-house in Westmoreland County, Pa., June 6, 1815. I visited the place in 1837, near Mount Pleasant, and saw the school-house. During their deliberations in forming a 'Discipline' at that first conference, they agreed on the name 'United Brethren in Christ,' as being the most appropriate, and, after agreeing on the 'Confession of Faith' and other articles, as contained in our 'Discipline,' when they came to the ordinance of baptism, they specified no mode, but agreed that each member might choose either immersion, sprinkling, or pouring. All the brethren and sisters in the different States endorsed the 'Discipline,' with the exception of the flock at the River, in Lancaster County, Pa., as they recognize baptism by immersion alone. These formed into a body called 'River Brethren;' hence we are 'Twin Brethren.'

"The foregoing, though given by tradition, is a true history.'" MARY ZERCHER.

New Pittsburg, Ohio.

At Home Again.

MY last I closed with my arrival at Roanoke, Va. After visiting a few relatives in the vicinity of that city, and resting awhile, the journey was again resumed, and, by the guardian care of a kind Providence, the place we call our earthly home was reached in safety, and we found the family in their usual health. The condition of my afflicted side has materially improved, so that I am about in my usual condition, so far as the physical man is concerned. Our spiritual man is always benefited by associating with the spiritually minded. The observing mind will, however, soon discover that the spiritual standard could be greatly elevated above the present mark, and still there would be room at the top. We may be brought in contact with certain persons who seem to have attained to a degree of purity and sanctity, such as make us feel reproved while in their presence, and yet we may, afterwards, feel benefited by being in their society.

Now I believe we all feel that we had a good and pleasant reunion at Hagerstown, Md. Suppose we all make a resolve that, if we are permitted to meet again next spring in Iowa, we will improve over the past, and that the devotional standard of the meeting shall be higher than any which have preceded it!

My present purpose is, to remain at home and rest until Aug. 8. The work is then expected to begin in Platte County, Mo.,—not far from St. Joseph. I expect to remain in that place or section, until Aug. 28. Next day I expect to begin with the Father's children at Falls City, Nebr., and will be with them till over their love-feast, Sept. 12. Then I shall go to Yale, Iowa.

I thus state the arrangements, so that persons will not ask for meetings at the same time elsewhere. I think some of going to Southern California, to spend the winter, feeling that possibly a milder climate will be of advantage to me. I sometimes feel as if the wound in my side may bring me suddenly to a close of my career in this life. But be that as it may, I hope to give whatever time I have, entirely to the defense of the principles of the Gospel. The church is my home, and when the principles, as held sacred by her, are infringed upon, then I suffer. I pity such as fail to discern the body of Christ. We must remember that the body of Christ is a visible body, so that it cannot be hid. Therefore away with the idea, that the heart is right while it is lusting after the giddy toys of earth. Such are not plants of the Heavenly Father's planting, and must be rooted up. A. HUTCHISON.

Notes and Jottings.

NEARLY two months ago I sent my last communication. May 9 the Mission Board of Southern Ohio again sent me to Oak Shade, a mission point one hundred twenty-five miles south-east, in Ross County, where I had been in April. Here I preached in a private house. I had to think of a time forty years ago, when I was a small lad, and when the Brethren used to preach in my father's house. Do we appreciate the great blessings we now have? We have good meeting-houses to go to,—good vehicles and good roads, and yet, with all this, we sometimes are absent from the religious services. This should not be when we are well.

When I get to the outskirts and see women walk three or four miles to church, over the hills, and carry a child, and then say they were so well paid, it seems as though they appreciate preaching. Brethren and sisters, it would do you much good to go to the outskirts. You could then appreciate your home blessings more.

Wife and I, in company with many brethren and sisters, started to Annual Meeting May 29. At Cincinnati we met many more. Among the number was our son Edward and wife, from McPherson, Kans. On account of a wreck, ahead of us, in the mountains, we did not reach Hagerstown till late on Saturday night. Sufficient has been said about the place, the crowd and the pleasant meetings, and I will not take the space to enlarge; but will only say that we had a pleasant meeting, and a profitable one. Let us all try to do a little better,—preachers, deacons and laity. To every one his work, is the command. Our work is to do right, not only in one thing, but everything. I was wondering, while at Annual Meeting whether it was the best thing to do, for so many brethren and sisters to board in town, when the brethren make arrangements to feed the people and are prepared to do so. It looks to me as though we ought to patronize them as, what is left after meeting the expenses, goes for missionary work. I believe in missionary work, but let us try and help in every way. If I can be the means of putting a few dollars to the mission work through Annual Meeting, is not that as good as if I take it out of my own pocket? If we can do both, so much the better.

On Sunday after Annual Meeting we were in Baltimore, but I was sick with asthma. This prevented me from visiting Bro. J. Quinlan. I would have been so glad to meet him as I was once at his school, where I preached three sermons and talked to the boys.

From Baltimore we went to Pemberton, in Cumberland County, Va., where Bro. William Bowser lives. He was one of the ministers from our church, and moved there last March. Oh how pleasant to meet with those who formerly met with us in the sanctuary. We were also glad to meet others, whom we never met before. We were pleased to meet sister Florida Etter, for we often read her articles in the MESSENGER.

We had expected to be at the love-feast at Cartersville, but on account of my ill health we got there one day too late, yet we had a few meetings.

We arrived at our home once more June 19 and found all well, for which we thank the Lord. Remaining at home over night, next morning wife and I set out for a thirty-seven mile drive to another mission point. Had we consulted our own feelings we would not have gone, as we felt tired and the heat had wearied me some on our trip. To start out and drive thirty-seven miles through the hot sun was not congenial, but we must be ready at all times for every good work. We sometimes talk about lazy preachers and what good they could do. I confess I do not know. "Work while it is day!" HENRY FRANTZ.

Forgy, Ohio, July 1.

From Baltimore, Md.

AFTER being restored to health again, I feel like devoting all my time to the work, and am now ready to receive donations towards the house of worship in Baltimore. All donations for the school and house should be addressed to the writer at 1315 Light Street, Baltimore, Md.

There is one,—David Lone Wolf, a negro,—who calls himself an Indian of the Sac and Fox Tribe, fifty-five or sixty years old, quite tall and with short, gray hair. He wears a Grand Army vest and badge, and has a white boy, about twelve years of age, with him, who, he claims, is a half breed, and has been attending the Indian school at Carlisle, Pa. I heard from good authority, however, that he never went there. He borrowed money from me to pay freight on some buffalo robes at the Pennsylvania R. R., but after he left I went to the R. R., and heard that there were no robes there. Bro. Oller calls him a "swamper." He is traveling through the country, deceiving the Brethren and taking in all that will let him. He is a flowery talker and will deceive the smartest. He said Eld. Jacob F. Oller preached for them at Indian Territory, and that they have 250 members there. He as well as the boy can tell any amount of untruths.

From the West Nimishillen Church, Stark Co., Ohio.

THE church at this place is moving along as usual. Most of the brethren and sisters seem to be alive in the work of our Master.

During the winter season we had a series of meetings, conducted by Bro. Edward Loomis, of New Philadelphia. He is not ashamed to declare the whole counsel of God. His sermons were surely soul-inspiring, and although there were no immediate accessions, yet the seed sown has manifested itself since, by two uniting with the church. May they prove faithful, is the prayer of the church.

We organized our Sunday-school April 5. It is conducted by Bro. Henry Schrantz and the writer. We are using the Brethren's Quarterlies and the Young Disciple. Although laboring under some disadvantage, the school is prospering beyond our expectations.

Our love-feast was held June 17. Quite a number of ministers from the adjoining churches were present on the occasion, and fed us with spiritual food. Eld. Loomis officiated. Owing to the inclement weather the attendance was not as large as has been before on similar occasions.

In connection with our feast it was decided to hold a choice for two deacons. The lot fell on brethren Abraham Herst and Alonzo Holl, who were installed into their office with great solemnity. May they feel the great responsibility resting on them, and may they hold out faithful until the end! S. J. HOLL.

From the Des Moines Valley Church, Ia.

OUR love-feast was held June 20 and 21. Owing to previous rains and muddy roads the attendance was not quite as large as usual. About seventy-five members surrounded the Lord's table, to commemorate the sufferings and death of our Blessed Lord and Master. The house was filled with our neighbors and friends.

Ministering Brethren present were Bro. Troup, from Indian Creek church, Bro. Folger, of Clarke County, and Bro. Hipes of Butler County. The latter stayed with us until the evening of the 24th, and held forth the words of eternal life. We trust that we were all spiritually strengthened during the feast and the meetings by partaking of the emblems of the Lord's body and by the earnest words, spoken by our dear Brethren. One dear soul promised to unite with God's people and follow in the footsteps of her Lord and Master. She will be baptized in the near future. May she have the prayers of all God's people!

Our love-feasts are surely an important factor in uniting our minds and spirits in love, and that oneness which is so necessary to our progress in the divine light. May we, with renewed strength and zeal, work for the bringing in of those who are wandering away from the fold of Christ!

Farewell.

IN the English language there are few words which convey to our minds so solemn a meaning as this one. It is one which we shrink to utter far more than almost any other. About the first time we find this word used is in Acts 15:29, where it is used as synonymous with, "I commend you to God," or "God bless you," at the close of a letter, written and sent by the "Apostles, elders and brethren to the Gentile brethren of Antioch, Syria and Cilicia." Acts 15:23.

There are times and seasons in the life of every individual when we look forward with delight, in the anticipation of meeting loved ones from whom we parted years ago. Our desires are realized! How pleasant the meeting! We enjoy the pleasure of sweet communion and social enjoyment, but, after a brief season of hallowed joy, comes the bitter parting hour when we must say, "Farewell."

How well do I remember when, in the days of my early childhood, my mother's parents (J. H. Price and family, of Illinois), would visit our home! Unalloyed happiness reigned supreme for a few short weeks. Then, for a few days, sadness was depicted on every countenance. Soon the bitter parting time came Amid falling tears we said, "Farewell," and our hearts were sad, yet we cherished the fond hope of meeting again.

While at our Annual Conference at Hagerstown, we were deeply impressed with the thought of meeting and parting. We enjoyed many happy reunions with loved and loving ones, which, for the time being, chased our sorrows away, but soon the time for our separation arrived, then came the time for that saddest of all words, "Farewell," "God bless you." Never again will we meet just as we did there. Ere another year rolls away, some of those dear old silver-haired fathers and mothers in Israel will have crossed over to the "shining shore," beyond the Jordan of death.

In reading Bro. D. L. Miller's farewell address to the brethren, friends and students at Mount Morris, a feeling of unusual sadness takes possession of my soul, thinking of the self-sacrifice on the part of brother and sister Miller, bidding farewell to home, friends, hallowed associations, kindred and native land, to brave the perils of the mighty deep, the dangers incident to a sojourn among the wild, uncultured people of the Orient,—all for the sake of Jesus and his glorious cause here below. Farewell, fellow-pilgrims, even though we may nevermore meet in this vale of sorrows, yet the united prayers of God's people will ever ascend the hill of God in your behalf. Father, guide, guard and protect them from harm, keep them near the foot of the cross, and if it be thy will, grant that they may sometime return to their home again! "God be with you."

From the Maple Grove Church, Norton Co., Kans.

ON Saturday, June 20, we held our quarterly council. Everything passed off in love and union, and, we trust, in the fear of God. May the Lord help us, as a Brotherhood, to maintain the purity of the church and may we all work together to that end! The church granted two members their letters who had gone away. We agreed to hold our love-feast sometime in October. Yesterday, June 28, a brother, who had gone with the Progressives, returned and was received in fellowship. His wife also united with us by baptism. Two others (husband and wife), who had gone away, returned to the fold some time ago, and will as they all expressed themselves, help us to labor in the vineyard of the Lord.

Thus we are still gaining a little. Love and union seems to pervade all hearts in our little congregation, which numbers thirty-three members. All seem willing to work together. Let us remember that we all have a work to do, and let us try to encourage one another on our way! Health is good and the prospects for the coming season are promising owing to the nice rains we are having. We feel to praise God for his goodness, and ask him to renew a right spirit within us. May God's blessing ever be with his dear children!

MARY E. GARBER.

Notes from Our Correspondents.

"As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

ONE BAPTIZED.—The members of the Maple Grove church Norton Co., Kans., received one by baptism June 28. One was also reclaimed,—the third one of those who had gone off from us and who have now been restored again. Our prayer is that they may be faithful and labor with us for the advancement of Christ's cause.—G. M. Throne, Rockwell City, Kans., June 29.

INTERESTING MEETINGS.—Bro. Jacob Heistand, of Swanton, Fulton Co., Ohio, came to our place, at Rock Run, Ohio, May 25, and held meetings each evening during the week, and twice on Sunday. During the week he visited his old home, his brothers and sisters, and also his old neighbors and friends. It seemed quite natural to have Bro. Heistand with us once more. We had a good meeting.—Alverty Buxton, Upper Sandusky, Ohio.

PRACTICAL SERMONS.—Bro. M. M. Sherrick, of Mt. Morris, Ill., came to us June 20, and gave us several sound, wholesome, practical sermons. His labors, while with us, were much appreciated by all who heard him. We feel that Bro. Sherrick possesses such qualifications as every true minister of the Gospel should possess. His work with us clearly shows that he has the worth of souls in view and that his God-given talents do not lie dormant.—J. W. Chambers, Rome church, Hancock Co., Ohio.

QUARTERLY COUNCIL.—The Washington church, Kans., met in quarterly council June 20. Not much business came before the meeting, but all passed off pleasantly. The church decided to hold a love-feast Aug. 15 and 16 at the house of Bro. Jacob Merkey, at Washington, Kansas, to commence at 10 A. M.—H. Talhelm.

INTERESTING MEETINGS. — Bro. Abraham Wolf, from Libertyville, Iowa, came to us May 30th and stayed over Sunday. He preached three able sermons to a well-filled house. Very good attention and good impressions were made, and we hope that the good seed that is sown may soon accomplish that for which it was sent. Our friend and neighbor, Mr. Austin, who was lying very low at the time of our meeting, passed away very peacefully, June 3. —Rebecca E. Hannan, Elrick, Iowa.

THANKS. We desire to thank our brethren and sisters for the receipt of $169.70 in cash, and fifteen and one-half bushels of seed potatoes that we received from Bro. B. B. Whitmer, of the General Aid Fund, for the benefit of the members and friends of the Pleasant View church, Phillips County, Kansas, and also for some private donations, which have indeed been a great blessing to us. May the Lord reward the donors in this life, and in the world to come give them eternal life! Our prospects for crops at this time are good. We desire an interest in the prayers of our Father's children. — J. W. Garber.

ENJOYABLE LOVE-FEAST. — The brethren and sisters of the Hickory Grove church, Miami County, Ohio, held their annual love-feast May 23. It was truly a feast to the soul, at least that was the common expression of all. One pleasant feature of our meeting was the presence of quite a a number of brethren and sisters from adjoining congregations. This always adds to the enjoyment of our feasts. Would that we could all fully realize the importance of attending and taking part in our love-feasts! Another pleasant feature of the meeting was that our members very generally communed. We are frequently pained to see so many sit back from the table on Communion occasions, seemingly forgetting that "Except ye eat the flesh of the Son of man and drink his blood, you have no life in you." Ministerial help was strong, composed of brethren from adjoining districts, with Eld. David Frantz, from Cerro Gordo, Ill. Bro. Jacob Frantz is, to use his own language, as an old tree that is slowly decaying, but while in his case the outward man is day by day growing weaker we are pleased to note that the inner man is growing stronger. We are in the midst of a bountiful harvest, but at this writing we are having much wet weather.—Jacob Coppock, Tippecanoe City, Ohio.

INTERESTING SUNDAY-SCHOOL.—The members of the Spring Creek church, Ind., are still doing for the Lord what little they can. Our Sunday-school is running smoothly, and is well patronized by the members as well as those outside. We are having, indeed, a very pleasant school. The weather has been very warm for a few weeks, and there has been a good deal of rain. All kinds of crops are doing finely. Wheat is just about ready for the harvester. Fruit is not very plenty.—E. Miller, Sidney, Ind., June 27.

SIX BAPTIZED. — We held our Communion meeting in the Sugar Creek congregation June 27. As far as known, all are in peace and union. We had pleasant weather. We had a large attendance at the meeting, but excellent order. Ministers present were brethren Noah Longanecker, from Stark County, Ohio; D. A. Norcross, from Glendora, Los Angeles, Cal., also four home ministers. One was baptized before the feast and five at the last council. All were young in years but one. The brethren fed us richly with the Bread of Life. How pleasant it is to meet with the brethren and sisters on such occasions, but it will be far better in the sweet beyond. —Sarah Middaugh, Berlin, Ohio.

COMMUNION MEETING AT A NEW POINT.—The first Communion meeting ever held in Clay County, Ind., to our knowledge, was held June 5 at Saline City. Bro. Isaac Billheimer was with us and broke unto us the Bread of Life. We had meetings every day and evening, from Thursday evening until Sunday evening. We had good preaching, good order, pleasant association, and, we hope, a profitable meeting all around. These meetings were held in the barn of my father (Jacob Mitchel). We had excellent order. Some old brethren were heard to say that it was the best Communion they ever attended. About sixty members communed. There was an old sister anointed on Saturday. This was the first anointing service ever witnessed by myself and many others. To-day was our regular meeting day. Bro. George Goshorn, from the Mount Morris school, was with us.—M. J. M. Hollenberg, June 28.

Literary Notes.

Day of Rest Notes.—THE American Sabbath Union, organized in 1888, is rapidly extending its auxiliary organizations into every State and Territory. In many of the States the work of forming County Societies and Municipal Leagues is going rapidly forward.

We are in receipt of pamphlets sent us by District Secretary Mills, of the American Sabbath Union, giving a brief account of the rise of the Union, and especially setting forth the progress of the work under his supervision, first in Ohio where he was the State Secretary, afterwards in the sixth district, to which he was appointed, and calling attention to the enlargement of his field to embrace eighteen of the States located in the Mississippi Valley. Persons desiring information should address him, inclosing stamp. Office, Rooms 72 and 73, 185 Dearborn Street, Chicago, Ill.

Eld. M. S. Newcomer, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa has placed on our desk a copy of his new book, entitled the "Golden Gleanings." It is the best printed, and the neatest put up book that we have received this season. We do not often read a book through at one sitting, but we started in at the preface and read extracts here and there until we had passed over the entire volume. We then pronounced it a gem. It is made up of some of the finest selections we have ever read, especially the last half of the work. Price, $1.50. The author may be addressed at 347 Fifth Ave., Cedar Rapids, Iowa.

FALLEN ASLEEP

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

FUNK.—At Jennings, La., June 17, 1891, of relapse of La Grippe and complication of other diseases, Bro. Wm. Funk, aged 70 years, 8 months and 27 days.

He was a member of the Brethren church for thirty-three years, and part of that time he labored in the ministry. His married life extended over a period of forty-four years. To the union were born seven children. Five have passed to the spirit world. Funeral services by Bro. S. A. Sonberger from Rev. 14: 13. Thus one is taken from the little nucleus of Brethren in the far South. May the kind hand of God rest upon those of the family he left behind.

S. A. SUTTER.

BILLIPS. — At Madison, Kans., May 29, 1891, sister Ven. Billips, aged nearly 60 years.

Deceased leaves three children and many warm friends to mourn the loss of one that longed to be with Jesus. Funeral services by Eld. Stowder and Bro. Garst from 1 Cor. 15 in the M. E. church, in the City of Madison. J. M. QUAKENBUSH.

MILLER.—At Peru, Miami Co., Ind., June 7, 1891, Anna Miller, aged 68 years, 9 months and 15 days.

Anna Miller (Erbaugh) was born in Rockingham County, Va., Oct. 22, 1822. Her parents, with her, moved into Ohio, near Dayton, in 1834. She was married to Abram Miller at the age of twenty-one, and came with him to this County in 1852, where she has lived ever since. She was the mother of nine children, eight of whom are still living. Early in her married life she, with her husband, united with the German Baptist church, of which she has been a faithful and consistent member. She was a faithful wife, and a very devoted mother. A noble spirit has gone from earth. Of her it may be truly said, "She has fought a good fight, she has finished her course, she has kept the faith, and henceforth for her is laid up a crown of righteousness."

Funeral services by Bro. D. P. Shively and the writer from Rev. 14: 12, 13, to a large congregation of sympathizing friends.

DANIEL BOWSER.

DANIELS.—One mile east of Middletown, Ind., June 7, 1891, sister Sarah Daniels, aged 72 years, 8 months and 12 days.

Deceased was admitted to the "Home of the Aged Persons, of the German Baptist church of Southern Indiana," Oct. 4, 1888. Her funeral was largely attended. The services were conducted by Bro. D. R Richards, of Fortville, Ind.

Sister Daniels joined the German Baptist church Oct. 31, 1886, and was a Christian in life and practice. She desired her funeral sermon to be preached from Mark 14: 8.

GEO. L. JENNINGS.

SHEPLER.—In the Peabody church, Kans., June 19, 1891, Eld. Abraham Shepler, aged 70 years, 4 months and 22 days.

Bro. Shepler was born in Shenandoah County, Va. He was elder of the Peru church, Elkhart Co, Ind., for many years, then moved to Hutchinson, Reno Co., Kans., and finally located in the Peabody church, where he lived about four years. Deceased was sick about three months. He suffered from a strange disease. The doctors said that his blood turned to water. Bro. Shepler was beloved and respected by all who knew him. Sister Esther has lost a kind husband, and the Peabody church a much needed elder. His departure leaves the church with only one young minister, but what is our loss is his eternal gain. Funeral services were held at his house by Bro. George Strycker from Rev. 14: 13. The remains were taken to Peru, Elkhart Co., Ind., for interment.

J. D. SHOWALTER.

WORKMAN. — In the Pleasant View church, Phillips Co, Kansas, May 24, 1891, sister Barbara Workman, aged 75 years, 7 months and 13 days.

Her maiden was Rice. She was married to Stephen Workman Oct. 10, 1833 She was the mother of thirteen children of whom seven are still living. Five of them are members of the Brethren church. Our sister had many trials during her life, but she was faithful until death. She was anointed during her last sickness, and seemed fully resigned to the Lord's will. Funeral services by the writer from Job 14: 14. J. W. JARBOE.

WILSON. In the Brownsville congregation, Md., May 21, 1891, sister Mahala Wilson, aged 59 years, 4 months and 7 days.

Deceased was a member of the church for about thirty-five years, and lived a very consistent life, — very strong in the faith. She always took pleasure in attending public worship. She was a good neighbor and never refused to respond to calls in time of affliction and want. She was a kind wife and mother, careful to impress upon the minds of her children the value of adorning themselves with Christian graces. She died suddenly, leaving an aged husband,—a father in Israel,—and eleven children, four of whom belong to the church of the Brethren, and we trust the rays of her shining light may linger to guide the others into the church. The large attendance at her funeral bore testimony to her Christian worth. Funeral services by Bro. Eli Yourtee and the writer, from Heb. 3: 15. DAVID AUSHERMAN.

HOLLINGER.—In the Upper Cumberland church, Pa., March 26, 1891, Jacob Henry, son of George and Annie Hollinger, and grandson of Eld. Jacob Hollinger, aged 13 years, 8 months and 13 days.

Harry has gone and left little Charley alone with his parents. He will not return to you, but you can go to him. So prepare now, while time, place and opportunity is afforded you. Remember, "Blessed are the dead that die in the Lord."

HOLLINGER.—At the same place June 20, 1891, sister Mary Ann Hollinger, aged 63 years, 3 months and 27 days.

Deceased was a consistent member of the church for many years. She leaves behind a husband (Eld. Jacob Hollinger), seven children and fourteen grandchildren to mourn their loss, which, we believe, is her eternal gain. Funeral services by elders Daniel Keller and J. F. Stamy from the words, "Precious in the sight of the Lord is the death of his saints." Ps. 116: 15.

J. E. HOLLINGER.

An Expert Opinion.

THE "Medical and Surgical Journal" for March 1891, says editorially:

"This pretty little city of Idaho Springs, Colorado, is situated in a beautiful park about 37 miles from Denver, and is about 7,500 feet above sea level. It is thrifty, prosperous, and has become noted for its hot and cold mineral springs, which contain medicinal properties of extraordinary value. Idaho Springs as a health resort cannot be excelled this side of the world-renowned Carlsbad Springs of Germany, whose waters and the waters found at Idaho Springs bear almost an identical chemical analysis.

"In the early stages of consumption these waters, combined with the invigorating air of this beautiful climate, are almost a specific. We take pleasure in recommending these waters to all suffering from coughs and catarrhal affections. It is the best place to go to for the cure of phthisis. Those of our colleagues who have been sending their patients to this grand health resort all join in praising the satisfactory results received from the invigorating waters and climate. We would therefore urge physicians to advise their patients, threatened with consumption, not to procrastinate, but to try, before it is too late, the salutary effects of the waters of Idaho Springs. The Union Pacific are making special efforts to carry the public to and from this famous resort, with all the modern comfort and ease which the tourist seeking health and pleasure can desire." 22–34.

Grand Excursion to Yellowstone National Park and Other Western Resorts.

THE Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," proposes to run, in July, 1891, a grand excursion from Omaha to Yellowstone National Park, Great Shoshone Falls, Idaho, Ogden, Salt Lake City, Garfield Beach, Denver, Clear Creek Canon, the famous Loop, and other points of interest. The Union Pacific will furnish six horse Concord Coaches, which will carry the party from Beaver Canon, Idaho, to and through Yellowstone National Park. These Coaches will also be taken to Shoshone Station, and used for the ride to Great Shoshone Falls.

From Beaver Canon to Yellowstone National Park, the trip will occupy three days going, three days returning, and eight days will be spent in the park. Excellent tents and good equipment for camping out will be furnished by the Union Pacific, en route from Beaver Canon to the Park, and while in the Park the tourists will be quartered at the various hotels.

The very low rate of $250.00 per passenger has been made from Omaha. This rate includes Railroad, Pullman, and Stage Fare, Meals and Hotel bills from the time of leaving Omaha until the return of the excursion, in all 30 days. No half fare rates.

Only thirty-five passengers can be accommodated, and as accommodations are limited EARLY APPLICATION for same should be made.

In ordering tickets, send money for same by express, to Harry P. Deuel, City Ticket Agent, U. P. System, 1302 Farnam St., Omaha, Nebraska.

Garfield Beach on Great Salt Lake, Utah.

THE famous health resort, Garfield Beach, on Great Salt Lake, 18 miles from Salt Lake City, is reached via the Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," and is now open for the season.

This is the only real sand beach on Great Salt Lake, and is one of the finest bathing and pleasure resorts in the West. Owing to the stimulating effect of the brine on the skin, or the saline air upon the lungs the appetite is stimulated, and after a bath, the bathers are ready for a hearty meal, and feel greatly invigorated.

Fine bath-houses, accommodating 400 people, have been erected at Garfield Beach, in connection with which there is a first-class restaurant and a fine, large pavillion built out over the lake. All of these are run by the Union Pacific, which guarantees a first-class resort in every respect.

For complete description of Garfield Beach and Great Salt Lake, send to E. L. Lomax, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent, Omaha, for copies of "Sights and Scenes in Utah," or "A Glimpse of Great Salt Lake." 22–34.

ELD. J. T. MYERS, of the Green Tree church, Pa., is spending a few days in town, visiting his mother-in-law, sister Quinter. He reports encouragingly of the Master's work.

THE Philadelphia church, under the ministry of Bro. T. T. Myers, seems to be taking a new lease of life. They are having increased attendance at their church services, and a number have been added to the church.

WE were made sorry to learn of the illness of Eld. J. Z. Replogle, but were informed, the other day, that he has almost recovered his former condition of health. Bro. Replogle is one of the elders of the Yellow Creek church, Pennsylvania.

WHILE attending the State Teachers' Association, held at Bedford, Pa., we had the pleasure of meeting Bro. W. G. Schrock, of Berlin, Pa. Bro. Schrock is alive to the issues of the times, and makes it a point to keep posted. This is right. The successful minister should keep himself abreast with the times.

BRO. JOSEPH FITZWATER, of the Green Tree church, while oiling his wind-pump, slipped and fell to the ground, a distance of some fifty feet. His injuries are very serious, but, from last accounts, hopes are entertained for his recovery. Bro. Fitzwater is one of the leading men of the place, and an active worker in the church. He and the family have our sympathies.

WE enjoyed a pleasant call, last week, from Dr. Phillips, Principal of the West Chester State Normal school. He has so fully met the wishes of the trustees of that institution, that they have provided for him and his wife a trip to Europe, and they sailed on the 13th.

A PLEASANT VISIT.

ON last Saturday we, which included sister Brumbaugh, made a visit to the very hospitable home of Eld. Wm. Howe, of the Lewistown church. At the depot we were met by the family and made to feel at home in a household very entertaining and kind. So many of the aged and infirm ones have shared the Christian hospitality of this place, that it is spoken of as the "Old Folks' Home," and we are sure it is a good place to be.

At this time they have with them an aged sister, also Bro. Isaac Rothrock, who is there on an extended visit. Bro. Rothrock has been an invalid for over thirty years, and for the last twenty-six years has been confined to his couch, upon which he lives day and night at home and abroad. When he travels it is taken along, or, rather, he is taken with it. He has spinal trouble, and though constantly lying on his back with his eyes heavily bandaged, so that light has not fallen on them for twenty or more years, he is not an extreme sufferer, and is the embodiment of patience and Christian resignation. Indeed, it is a real pleasure to be in the presence of a spirit, so happily resigned to the Father's will. He is a living teacher of patience, and does credit even to Job.

And then, his memory is just marvelous. He is an unwritten Bible, appendixed with sermons and literary productions. For those whom he entertains he reads Scriptures, sermons, literary productions, preaches, sings and prays, all from the Great Book that God has given him within. In this home his custom is to conduct the evening family worship, and we were most glad not to have him change because of our presence, as we were anxious to enjoy the service thus conducted.

At the hour of prayer, after a hymn was sung, he said: "I will read the latter part of the third chapter of James, beginning where I left off yesterday evening." He then read, feelingly and intelligently—this is not always done by even those who can see—the passage of Scripture spoken of. After this he led in prayer—all this with his eyes heavily bandaged, and while lying on his back. Such knowledge, such faith and implicit trust and resignation cannot but be helpful to every life that comes in contact with it, and to say that we were entertained while with him, only partly expresses it.

On Sunday morning we were taken to preaching services, which were held in a school-house near, or in the suburbs of Lewistown. And while the house was well filled, we noticed that the congregation was made up of members and others who came in from the country, and the members that live in town.

The citizens of the town were not there and you may ask why. The reason may not be a good one, but we must accept conditions as they do exist, and not as we think they should be. First, school-houses are not suitable places for church services: the seating is not at all comfortable, and the surroundings are not as inviting as those of a place of worship. And, second, there is a certain degree of prejudice on the part of people in towns, where there are comfortable churches, against going to such places to worship. All these things must be made considerations in the conversion of the world and we, as a church, must not overlook them.

We cannot convert people unless we can get them to come to hear us. And, to do this, we must use all lawful means within our power. This truth is every-where being demonstrated. The services of the Philadelphia church, while held in halls and hired rooms were sparsely attended. Since the church has been completed, we are told, the congregation has doubled, and the possibilities for doing good greatly enlarged.

So we believe it would be with our Lewistown brethren, if they had a suitable house conveniently located in town. To make the work there, or in any other town or city, successful, a good church building is needed, where a Sunday-school can be organized, and all the other services comfortably held.

This is a matter on which the salvation of our children and others depends, and dollars and cents should not be a consideration when the possibilities are ours. We would rather die, leaving for our children the legacy of the religion of Christ than thousands of dollars or farms without it. God will hold us wonderfully responsible for that which he has given us.

After services we were taken to the pleasant home of Andrew Spanogle, near town, and in the afternoon taken out to the church, near Eld. Howe's, where they have a well-conducted Sunday-school, good attendance and much interest manifested. After the close of the school, preaching services were held, after which we were again taken to Bro. Spanogle's and hospitably entertained for the night. Bro. Spanogle is well "fixed," as the saying runs; he is a zealous minister of the church, and has the possibilities of doing much for the promotion of the good cause.

Bro. John M. Mohler, one of our most active evangelists, resides in this congregation, and, at this time, is at home, and probably will remain there during this month, not because there is no work to do, but because he feels that a short rest is needful.

Our visit to this church, and to the families named, was pleasant indeed, and we are sure we appreciated the kindness shown us.

ESSAYS

"Study to show thyself approved unto God; a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth."

"LET YOUR GARMENTS BE ALWAYS WHITE."—Eccl. 9: 8.

PILGRIM on life's rugged pathway
Traveling to your home above,
Let your life be one of kindness
And your conversation—love;
Let no evil passion swerve you
From your noble manhood's might,
God's pure eye is ever on you
"Keep your garments always white."

Should some slanderous tongue assail you
With its foul and poisonous stain,
Robbing you with fiendish pleasure
Of your fair unspotted name,—
Let the stamp of God's true greatness
Put to shame the withering blight,
Walk serene with his approval
"Keep your garments always white."

Never give the battle over
Though it should be fierce and long,
Boldly meet the wily tempter—
By God's grace you may be strong.
So when life's last foe is conquered
You shall join the "saints in light,"
In that land so pure and holy
Where the garments all are white.

THE TEACHER'S AIM.

BY J. E. MILLER.

WHATEVER is done should be done with a definite aim in view. The world is full of those who find failure stamped on all their attempts,—it is full of those who never succeed in accomplishing what they expected, or what is expected of them. In glancing at these persons, four classes may readily be perceived. The first consists of those, who, in their work, always aim too low,—the conception of their work is too mean. The second is made up of those who ever aim too high, they cannot lower themselves to a level with those whom they wish to benefit. The third class includes those who strive for the wrong thing; they forget that the blacksmith's business is to shoe horses; the shoemaker's, to make shoes; and the miller's to grind. The fourth and last class consists of those who go through life without any fixed purpose in view; they have no aim.

In one of these classes may be found every Sunday-school teacher who does not succeed. Yes, in one of these classes may be placed many teachers who succeed comparatively well. The great need of the Sunday-school is teachers,—holy, consecrated teachers! Teachers who realize the importance of their work; who know what are the desired ends and how they are to be reached.

What, then, should be the teacher's aim? To be sure he should lead his class to be good; he should impart Bible knowledge; he should lead them to Christ; he should give them spiritual food. There are a thousand and one other things which he should do. In fact, it seems because there are so many things to be done, the young teacher (and not infrequently the older one, too), is at a loss as to what he shall do first.

Forgetting all preconceived notions as to what should be the teacher's aim, let us set up these two: First, the teacher should lead his pupils to think; second, the teacher should lead his pupils to act. The consecrated, trained teacher, who ever keeps these two ends in view, will be the stay of his class, a benefit to the school, an aid to the church, and the inspiration of those under his care.

The teacher, then, should lead his pupils to think. Let him cause them first to think of their surroundings. As they begin to think of their own environments, they will go out further and embrace in their comparison more. The discreet teacher will direct their line of thought, and so can lead them to the palace of the rich and the hovel of the poor; to the den of the sot and the fireside of the truly temperate; to the house of rejoicing and the house of mourning; to the house in which the Bible is taught and obeyed, and the home from which it is excluded, and where it is derided. He need not stop here, but may lead them to the home in which the Gospel has never been known and where the name of Jesus,—the sweetest name on earth,—has never been uttered. Here the pupil may see the hand-made god and he can not fail to see the superstition, the sorrow, and the woe which accompany it.

Now the pupil is in a good mood to learn something about God. He has seen the Christian home, he has seen the heathen home, and, unless he is extremely dull, he will wonder whence the vast difference between them. Since his curiosity is aroused let the teacher contrast the heathen god with the true God. As he brings out the power, the knowledge, the justice, the holiness, the love of the Creator, he is leading his pupil to concentrate his mind on God, and when he thinks of him, he is drawn nearer to him.

As the pupil has now become interested in God, the teacher has the best opportunity for directing his attention to the Bible as God's revelation to man. He needs now to be very cautious in his manner of procedure. The pupil's surroundings may be such as will prejudice him against the Book. A comprehensive and thorough knowledge of the Bible, an understanding of the pupil's disposition and needs, and a longing to supply these wants, are of incalculable value to the teacher. He should bear in mind that the idea he presents of the Bible, and the manner in which they are presented, will wield a mighty influence over the class, when they form their estimate of that Book.

There are many men who pretend not to believe in the Bible, yet they cannot give a single reason for their unbelief. May there not be some who believe in it, but cannot give any reason for "the hope that is within them?" The teacher should so present Bible truth that the pupil believes it, and knows why he believes it.

No one can study the Bible without being led to think of himself. Thus far the teacher's work has been to lead the pupil to think of himself. When he studies the Bible, he finds it addressed to man. He learns more about God, more about the origin of the universe, more about himself. In it he finds his relation to man and his duty toward him; his relation to God and his duty toward him. He is told of sin and its consequences. He finds addressed, to each individual, these three words, "Believe, repent, obey." He ponders them and, lo! they are designed for him. A deep concern rolls over his heavy heart. The teacher sees this and is now brought to his second point—to lead his pupil to act.

Having placed his pupil in a position to understand his surroundings, his relations to his fellows, his duty to God, and his own sinful nature, the teacher's great concern should be to direct into proper channels the pupil's desire to work. Is he outside the church? He should be brought within the fold. Once in, he will need constant care and guidance. Is he within the church, he needs to be revived to more active and energetic work. Thinking men are usually working men. The only reason there is not more interest in temperance, Sunday-school and mission work is, that men and women do not think about these things.

Teachers, are are you interested in your school? Would you love to see your classes grow and become more active? Then arouse their curiosity, give them food for thought, and you will have a working school and its pupils will be gathered into the kingdom.

"THE HIGHER CRITICISMS."

GOOD DEACON HARTWELL, was an "Old School," and had been brought up from his youth to accept the Bible as the undoubted Word of God. He had no more question as to the authenticity of the Scriptures than his own existence. He was therefore very much surprised, on the second Sabbath after the coming of the new pastor (of the new school of Higher Criticisms), to hear him declare that the first few chapters of the Bible were a myth; that the author did not intend to give a literal account of the creation, but wrote this fanciful record to counteract the polytheistic tendencies of his times, and lead the people to accept the doctrine of one God.

When the deacon came home, he said to his wife, "Mary, bring me the scissors."

"What do you want with the scissors?"

"Why, our new pastor says that these first chapters of Genesis are a myth. Now I don't want any myths in my Bible, and I am going to cut them out."

"Well, I wouldn't spoil my old Bible that we've read so often together, and that we love so much."

"Oh, it won't spoil it! We want the truth. The new pastor knows better than we, for he is a scholar."

They were cut out.

Not long after, the deacon called for the scissors again. This time the whole Pentateuch had to be removed. When the wife remonstrated, he said, "Why, the pastor says that 'the best scholarship' declares that Moses did not write these books, that they were pamphlets collected from various sources, some of them borrowed from the Assyrians or Egyptians; and some statements made in them show that they were written centuries after Moses died."

They were cut out.

Again the scissors were called for. This time the last half of the Book of Isaiah was removed, because the pastor said that, "while he would not say that he fully believed they were not written by Isaiah, the son of Amoz, yet the higher criticism of the schools had declared that some unknown author or some unknown Isaiah had added the last twenty-five or thirty chapters."

A few Sundays followed, and then the good deacon was surprised to hear that there were grave doubts among scholars concerning the Book of John, that precious Gospel, so full of the teachings of the Blessed Master, and from which he had gained so much comfort and instruction in the time of trouble.

Then the books of Ruth, Esther, Ecclesiastes, Song of Solomon, were cut out. The story of Jonah was made to appear so ridiculously strange that the deacon imbibed something of the spirit of the pastor, and slashed through it in no easy manner.

Almost every Sunday there was a reference made by the pastor to some interpolation, and the deacon didn't want interlopers in his Bible."

They were all cut out, just as the scholarly pastor said.

Thus it went on to the end of the second year. One day the deacon said, "Come, Mary; let's go up and make our pastor a call. We haven't been to see him very lately."

"Are you going to take your Bible with you?"

"Oh, yes! I want him to see how the 'higher criticism' or 'the best scholarship' has improved it."

They called and were seated, and the pastor noticed the peculiar-looking book in the hands of the deacon.

"What have you there, deacon?"

"My Bible."

"It is a queer-looking Bible; what have you been doing to it?"

"Well, now, pastor, I'll tell you. Every time you doubted any passage of Scripture, or said it was an interpolation, I have cut it out. All the books of doubtful authenticity are gone. The stories borrowed from the heathen nations, the myths, everything that you implied was questionable, I have removed according to your teaching. But thank God, my dear pastor, the covers of the good old Book are still left. All the rest is about gone, and I want to thank you so much for leaving me the covers."—Zion's Watchman.

GO, WORK!

BY ELMER WOMBOLD.

"Son, go work to day in my vineyard.—Matt. 21: 28.

THE language of our Savior in this sentence cannot be misunderstood. It has a direct application to those who profess to be God's sons by adoption. "For as many as are led by the Spirit of God, they are the sons of God." Rom. 8: 14. Then, if we are the sons of God, it is our duty to be obedient to his commands and we have the assurance that we may know if we are his children. The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit, that we are the children of God. Rom. 8: 16. If we have the testimony of the Spirit of God in our behalf, we should not fear men. Our Savior said, we should not fear man; but fear him that has power to destroy soul and body. "Fear not them which kill the body, but are not able to kill the soul: but rather fear him which is able to destroy both soul and body in hell." Matt. 10: 28.

We find, by carefully searching the Scriptures that our Savior has said, through his apostles, that he would destroy the works of the devil. He that committeth sin is of the devil, for the devil sinneth from the beginning. "For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that he might destroy the works of the devil." 1 John 3: 8.

May our works be such that when we appear before the judgment seat we may hear those welcome words, "Come unto me." Well has the poet written the lines in which he said:

"'Go work in My vineyard;' there's plenty to do;
The harvest is great, and the lab'rers are few;
There's weeding, and fencing, and clearing of roots,
And plowing, and sowing, and gathering the fruits.
There are foxes to take, there are wolves to destroy.
All ages and ranks I can fully employ.
I've sheep to be tended, and lambs to be fed;
The lost must be gathered, the weary ones led.'"

We can see at a glance that there is plenty to do in God's vineyard if we but get the consent of our wills and go about to do it. We must not sit idle when there are so many on the downward road to ruin. May we awaken to a sense of our duty, and show by our works that we are the children of the Most High. "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." Matt. 5: 16. If men are to see our good works, how can our works be seen, if we are not at work? How can we do the duty which has been laid down to us in the Great Book? "Even so faith, if it hath not works, is dead, being alone. Yea, a man may say, Thou hast faith, and I have works: shew me thy faith without thy works, and I will shew thee my faith by my works." Jas. 2: 17, 18. If we can show to this world by our works that we have faith, then we can expect the promised blessing.

We are to understand, by the language of the apostle, that we cannot please God excepting we have faith and works united. There is a labor we should not be desirous of doing, as the apostle has said, "Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life, which the Son of man shall give unto you: for him hath God the Father sealed." John 6: 27. May our labor for God and his church, on this earth, not be to receive praise of men, but may we, at the hand of God, receive the promised gift which he said he would give unto his faithful servants, "Behold I come quickly; and my reward is with me to give to every man according as his work shall be." Rev. 22: 12. "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22: 14.

Then, if we are at work in God's vineyard, what is our standard? The Hebrew children took the works of Abraham as their standard, and it may be proper to ascertain what is our standard. If we expect to be God's workmen we must have his words as our standard, for they are they which testify of the promises which he has given unto us. "Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." Heb. 4: 1.

If God's words are our standard, we can prove our works. Thus we shall know if it will agree with what he said it should. "But let every man prove his own work, and then shall he have rejoicing in himself alone, and not in another." Gal. 6: 4. May we, as a church people, see the importance of being at work and not idle our time away, when we should be improving it by good works, and by sowing good seed for the Master. This will give us a bountiful harvest in the last day.

We cannot make a pretense of this work. We may be very cunning and deceive man, but God is not deceived and has a record of our deeds. The Savior said, "No servant can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one, and love the other; or else he will hold to the one, and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." Luke 16: 13.

We know that we cannot please God except he has a home in our hearts. Then we are sure that he will aid us on the path that leads to heaven. Should we have anything in our hearts that may not be pleasing in his sight, then we should remove it, that we may be pure and blameless before God.

OPPOSED TO MISSION WORK.

BY J. S. FLORY.

"The general Synod of Lutherans openly remonstrate against 'certain American denominations, under the name of foreign missions, attempting to secure the transfer of the Lutheran people of Denmark, Norway and Sweden to their churches while there are millions of heathens still unreached by Christianity.'"

THE above item of news is going the rounds of the press. If true, it strikes at the foreign mission work of the Brethren, as well as all other denominations who may be doing mission work in the countries mentioned.

If everything, called Christianity, had in it the essentials of salvation, the remonstrance of the Synod would be well taken. In our judgment, however, there is as much need of mission work in the field of errorism as in heathen lands. It takes less money to prosecute religious work at home than abroad, and, to our way of thinking, a soul saved at our own doors is as commendable in the sight of God as one in the wilds of heathenism.

A HEBREW IDYL.

BY ELIZABETH H. DELP.

ONE of the sweetest stories is that of Ruth and Naomi. So much sacred history is grouped about these two central figures, that we study them with keen interest. Among the many prophecies and revelations that were made concerning Christ, this story takes its place as a pastoral symphony of the Messiah.

The scene is Palestine, the era is the time of the Judges. The enemies of Israel may have invaded the country about Bethlehem Judah, and destroyed the harvests, or, perhaps, the rains have failed. Starvation awaits the inhabitants unless they go to more favored lands for bread. Among the number who left their native land, we find Elimalech, with his wife Naomi, and their two sons. They were tempted, by the richly-watered uplands of Moab, and they journeyed there just as Lot, years before, had chosen this fertile country for himself. Here they have bread and to spare, but trouble and sorrow overtake them. Naomi is left, a widow and childless. In her desolation she longed for home, her native country, where she had been happy, and where they called her Naomi, "the lovable." Her daughter-in-law, Ruth, without any hesitation, accompanied her.

The love of Ruth for Naomi is a type of true friendship. The strong affinity between these true, deep natures, drew them irresistibly together. Naomi, with tender solicitude, pleaded with Ruth to remain in her own country with her kinsmen. The steadfast purpose of Ruth remained unshaken, and she made the pathetic appeal: "Entreat me not to leave thee, or to return from following after thee; for whither thou goest, I will go; and where thou lodgest, I will lodge; thy people shall be my people, and thy God my God; where thou diest, I will die, and there will I be buried: the Lord do so to me, and more also, if aught but death part thee and me."

It was poverty, bereavement, and exile that developed Ruth's sublimity of character. Trouble is a great educator. You may see the inspiring, delicate touch of sorrow in the finest painting, or hear its tremor in the sweetest song; there is no music so sweet as that which comes forth from instruments finely strung, and attuned to the tuning key of God's chastenings.

Ruth and Naomi set out together; they must cross the desert and the hills of white lime-stone, cloven by narrow, waterless ravines. They enter the town of Bethlehem, hungry and homeless. Their future outlook was dark and gloomy. Naomi told her friends to call her Marah, for the Lord had dealt very bitterly with her. But the brave heart of Ruth might have said,

"I cannot know why suddenly the storm,
Should rage so fiercely round me in its wrath,
But this I know, God watches all my path,
And I can trust."

She gleaned day after day in the fields of barley. She performed this menial work with grace and simplicity, and her patient industry received its due reward. To-day the name of Ruth stands in the Bible, as the mother of a line of kings, and the Savior of the world himself was descended in his humanity from this homeless exile. A dark morning may be the prelude of a gloomy day, and yet "at eventide there shall be light."

Sometimes in our spiritual career, we start off in a very dark path, we are impelled towards it. We may shrink back and falter, but there is something within, or a voice from above that bids us go forward, bearing our cross. We may not understand it, but we can trust, until he bids us join in singing the new song before the throne.

THE NEW TESTAMENT IDEA OF CHURCH GOVERNMENT.

BY B. C. MOOMAW.

SEVERAL remarkable passages of Scripture, which have been construed as the foundation of all authority in church government, and have consequently moulded the ecclesiastical history of the world, demand our attention in the beginning of this article. They are to be found in Matt. 18: 18; 16: 19, and John 20: 22, 23, and read as follows: "Verily I say unto you, Whatsoever ye shall bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever ye shall loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." "And I will give unto thee the keys of the kingdom of heaven: and whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven; and whatsoever thou shalt loose on earth shall be loosed in heaven." "And when he had said this, he breathed on them, and saith unto them, Receive ye the Holy Ghost: whosesoever sins ye remit, they are remitted unto them; and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained."

It is safe to say that in all human history there is not a darker page,—one that contains more crime, presumption, oppression and despair, than that which has sprung from the perversion of these Scriptures. Designing men, always fond of power, and ready to abuse it, have in this way held the rod of terror over the heads of ignorant and superstitious multitudes for ages. The Roman Catholic hierarchy has always stood behind these spurious buttresses of ecclesiastical power, claiming the delegation of divine authority, and wielding that authority like a scepter of iron over oppressed and deluded nations. By this means it has perpetrated and justified all the horrors of persecution, the rack, the dungeon and the stake.

It sounds strange to any student of history, to hear men now-a-days quote these Scriptures as the foundation of judicial authority for the church. Such an argument reads like a chapter borrowed from the Dark Ages, when the ignorance of the masses was only equaled by the presumption of their religious teachers. It ought not to take a second reading of the Scriptures referred to, in order to see that the presence of the HOLY SPIRIT in the church,—the invisible church of true believers, with whom alone the Holy Spirit dwells,—delegated to that church a divine measure of moral and spiritual (not judicial) power. This is the distinction between the Truth as it stands, and that perversion of the Truth which was the nightmare of the Dark Ages,—not the delegation of JUDICIAL power, but MORAL and SPIRITUAL power.

This is strictly true in the nature of things, for reason, observation, experience and history, all go to prove that ungodly men may sometimes influence or even control the ecclesiastical power of the church; but no ungodly man can have the Holy Spirit, or wield the power which that Spirit alone bestows. Think of an unconverted man, or for that matter any man, or any number of men, judicially forgiving or retaining sins, binding on earth and in heaven! The very mention of it is monstrous, and yet, when we take the ecclesiastical perversion of those Scriptures, and expose it to the daylight of its own history, we see clearly that men are quite capable of this presumption. Men who are in power, but not in grace, can sometimes do very remarkable things. But since the power, delegated to the church by the Savior, is moral and not judicial, it rests with the invisible CHURCH, the elect of God, who are led by the Holy Spirit, with certainty, into the approval of all that is good, and the condemnation of all that is evil.

If this had been a bestowal of judicial instead of spiritual power, the apostles, who, of all others, were the best qualified to exercise it, would have generally done so in the government of the church, and we would find them definitely transmitting the same authority to their successors. But in the whole course of their history, we do not find them using it more than once or twice, and that in a most limited and guarded manner, basing their action even then more upon moral than upon ecclesiastical grounds.

The oft-quoted apostolic council at Jerusalem may be taken as an illustration. A vast multitude of prohibitions might easily have been imposed upon the Gentile Christians at Antioch, and would have been, if the apostles had acted upon the judicial and legislative idea of church government. No doubt the necessity existed then, as much as it exists now, for numerous specifications, covering the whole range of human conduct, for human hearts and human sins have been the same in all ages. But beyond a very few matters, covering the most flagrant violations of the moral law,—idolatry and fornication,—the decree of the apostolic council explicitly laid upon them "no other burden." Besides this we have, in the whole course of the New Testament history, only one case of judicial action, which was the suspension of the Corinthian fornicator, until deep repentance gave him a right to restoration. Nothing is more foreign to the apostolic practice, and nothing is less supported by the sanction of the Scriptures, than the idea of church government by legislation. If this had been the divine plan, where, we ask, are the records? Surely Providence would have preserved to posterity documents so valuable as these. Have we any evidence in history,—sacred or profane,—that they ever held but the one council? All the evidence goes to show that, in the government of the churches, the apostles themselves relied upon pastoral admonition, and not upon legislation.

This view is, of course, arrayed against the judicial idea of church government. The idea of church government upon moral instead of ecclesiastical grounds, is every-where prevalent in the Scriptures,—a government which sought to control individual conduct by conversion, rather than by coercion, and which, in this way, secured the obedience of consent instead of the external compliance of constraint. God has made the human mind free, and to attempt to force it, instead of trying to persuade it, will at once weaken our moral hold upon it, and place it in an attitude of antagonism. In this way church councils weaken rather than strengthen their authority just at the point where it is of the greatest importance, namely, in the affections and respect of the people.

Church councils may and should deliver their opinions, advice and admonition, and in this way endeavor to create and sustain, in the church, a public sentiment against every general or special form of sin, and pastors should enforce these counsels as they do every other moral duty, on the high ground of conviction, and not the low plane of coercion.

The gain under this system would be very great, even though there was less outward conformity to the church council, for, in my opinion, the conformity of constraint is worse than none at all, whereas the conformity of consent is everything, both in its effect upon the individual, and upon the body of the church. This can never be the case, however, under a mandatory or judicial form of church government, for the reason that, under such a system, authority rather than duty, is made the leading motive of obedience; and outward conformity takes the place of inward conviction. A life or a line of conduct which does not rest strictly upon consent and conviction, leads by a straight road into one or another of the many forms of deception and hypocrisy.

PEACE ON EARTH AND GOOD WILL TO MEN.

BY B. F. MOOMAW.

Number One.

THE following is a reply to an article that appeared in the Rockingham Register, published in Harrisonburg, Va., in the early period of the late American War. The article came into the hands of Bro. John Cline who afterwards became a martyr for the cause of our blessed Christianity. He sent it to me with the request that I should meet it in the defense of the principles of the Gospel, as understood by the Brethren. I sent the copy, but as he refused to publish it, it was returned to me.

To the Editor of the Register:—

In your issue of the 5th inst., I notice an article of the signature Ne qui Nemis, addressed to the Tunkers and Mennonites, proposing a discussion of certain religious principles held by them. He has given to the public his views and arguments. As yet nothing has been heard on the other side of the question, and as the old adage is, "One side of a story is always good until the other is told," and since his opinions are now before the world, I think, in all fairness, we should be heard, and then leave it to the impartial judgment of an honest and intelligent public to decide. Believing from the history of your character, that you are favorable to a free expression of opinion, and the freedom of the press, I venture to ask of you the favor of an insertion of this communication in your columns, with a request to all other papers, that have copied the former article, to give it publicity.

I must acknowledge that I undertake the task with reluctance, being sensible that my hand is better suited for the plow than for the pen, especially when I consider that in this case, at this time, under the much excited and distracted state of the public mind, the principles which I am called upon to defend are so very unpopular, but may I not hope that in this once happy country of boasted religious liberty and liberty of speech, that charity, due from one free man to another, will be awarded me?

We are much obliged to the gentleman for the eulogy he has passed upon us as a body of Christians, contributing materially to the interests of the country in which we live. I hope he is candid, and I pray that I may be enabled to show that respect for him that he professes for us, and be preserved from trifling with his good sense, as it appears to me he has done toward us in some of his remarks.

The main question to be decided, as I understand it, is not whether our country is involved in war, or by whose action we have been precipitated into it. Nevertheless, I will make a few remarks upon this subject, as, in the absence of a disposition to be brawling upon all occasions, so as to be heard, and make ourselves popular in the eyes of men, our position is called into question, and attempts have been made to brand us as tories and traitors.

That war, and that of a most dreadful character, does exist, is lamentably true, but by whose action it exists is a question. The North says, the South are the aggressors, that they have rebelled against the Government that should have been permanent and perpetual; they have commenced hostilities by an attack upon our forts, arsenals, etc.; they have also stolen our property, and have left with us the only alternative,—either to submit to the loss of all this, our revenues, the ruin of the best Government the world ever saw to dishonor and national disgrace, or resort to the only means of defense. Then, turning to their oracles,—the popular ministry,—they inquire, "What shall be done?" In answer, with all their Jesuitical hypocrisy, they tell them, "Call out all your military strength. Go up against those rebels; they are sinners before God. Their institutions are opposed to the laws of human nature, and if not to God's revealed law, they are opposed to a higher law, and they have presumed to arrogate to themselves the right of self-government. Go up," say they, "and the God of battles will prosper you. We will appear for you at the throne of God at home, and we will go with you to the battle field, and be engaged for the success of your arms, and, if needs be, we can shoot, we can cut, and we can thrust." O shame, where is thy blush!

When we enquire of the South who has brought this conflict upon us, we are told, "The North is altogether responsible. They have wantonly and without authority, either human or divine, interfered with our institutions. They have invaded our rights; they have stolen our property, they have violated the Constitution; they have denied to us our equal rights, guaranteed to us by the Constitution. They have slandered us at home and abroad; they have criminated and recriminated us. They have invaded our soil and shed the blood of our citizens, and severed every tie that bound us together in fraternal feeling, so necessary to happiness. They have invaded our country with an overwhelming army, to overpower us and bring us into subjection."

We have now presented the charges of each against the other. The question, then, will naturally arise, "What part have you taken in the matter?" I only answer for myself and those who will indorse it: "I have all the while been willing to submit to anything, to make any Christian sacrifice for the sake of peace, so long as there was any hope for peace. I was in favor of union. When that hope failed, I was in favor of secession of the entire South, in the hope that peaceable secession might be granted, and that there would be a chance for peace in the separate Governments, which was now out of the question in the Union." In this I was mistaken. Peaceable secession was not granted, and we are now in a state of war, and what is to be done? The world says, "Defend it to the death." The law of self-defense says, "This is the first law of nature, and must be obeyed." Self-love says, "I will defend myself and my property."

But what say the Tunkers and Mennonites? They say that if all had been of them, there would have been no war. Yea, more, if all professed Christians had been Tunkers and Mennonites, there would have been no war, but they were not and many of them being busy in other men's matters, have brought about this sad state of things. Indeed, the popular ministry is largely responsible for taking an active part in matters, inconsistent with the spirit of Christ. I repeat that if all had been Tunkers and Mennonites, there would have been no war.

Taking this view of the matter, it seems to me that we ought to be entitled to some forbearance, for I suppose that I may venture to say, that if our brethren, respectively, would engage in this war, they of the North would outnumber us in the South, at least twenty to one. While there will not be one faithful member of either of these denominations engaged in arms against the South, that being the case, have we not reason to expect that we will be allowed to occupy a quiet and neutral position, according to our conscience, produced by, what we understand to be, the teachings of the divine law, as exhibited in the New Testament?

In the first place our author admits, that all wars and fightings are opposed to the spirit of the Gospel, that Christ is the Prince of Peace, and that his precepts, strictly followed, would soon lead all men to beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks and learn war no more. This is conceding all for which we contend.

That being the case, where is to be found the justification for any warring or any fighting? If the spirit of the Prince of Peace prevailed in the hearts of those who profess to be his subjects, whence would come the spirit of fighting? Except ye have the spirit of Christ ye are none of his."

It is admitted that the spirit of Christ is not a fighting spirit; from whence, then, have his disciples a fighting spirit? If the spirit of the Prince of Peace would lead his subjects to beat their swords into plowshares, etc., where would be the missiles of blood? Our author's explanation would have us to understand that this only shows that the aggressors in every war are wrong, and acting contrary to the spirit of the Gospel, but by what mode of reasoning he arrives at that conclusion, from these premises, I am at a loss to know.

Again he says that the right of resisting wrong, done by one nation to another, is no more destroyed by the Gospel than the right of resisting an individual attempt upon your person or property. We take both arguments, and when we have established the one, we have established the other, which, if the discussion is confined to the divine code, established by our Savior and his apostles, we think is very easily done.

BALAAM.

BY SALOME A. STONER.

Beside the swollen current of the swift-flowing Jordan lay the camp of Israel. Green trees and waving fields wore the joyous look of spring. The gladsome spirit pervaded every heart in the vast throng so lately halting there. With the present place inviting, and the promised land in view, songs of praise and shouts of hallelujah, bursting forth from every tent, reverberated through the long corridors from Reuben unto Dan.

But what means that strange appearance on yonder mountain-top? From seven points broad-forked flames leap up in devouring mood and are succeeded by others not less hungry. Two men are there, one active and impatient, the other, moving with slow and measured step, disappears and comes again. Now he looks toward heaven and extends his hands as if to call down a cloud on the multitude below. Who is this personage? Balaam of Mesopotamia. In his present attitude he attempts to curse the chosen people of the Lord. A prophet of the Lord, attempting to curse the Lord's unoffending people, would seem incongruous did we not know that a traitorous friend is the most dangerous enemy.

Balaam was a man of talent, a man of ability, a man of culture, a man of good intentions, a man of wide reputation, a believer in Jehovah, a prophet of the Lord; but he had not a sincere and fixed heart, he had not an established character, he was not true to himself. Though he had communication with God, he had not communion with him. His obedience was full in letter, but lacking in spirit. Balaam would have preferred to do just right, had not right-doing interferred with his prospects for pleasure, his promise of honor, his love of gain.

Balaam shows how it is 'easier to be great than to be good.' Having enjoyed the esteem of his countrymen, and the recognition of his Creator, he goes down to Moab conscious that his acts must be in harmony with the divine will, his prophetic ceremonies must be prefaced by a sacrifice of clean beasts to the Revealer of Destinies; but in his heart he cherishes the soothing hope that words of condemnation, words of blighting execration may be given him. Not that these are more pleasing, not that they are right, for he knows they are wrong, all wrong, but they will bring honor, influence, wealth; they are profitable.

Without the journey of the southern princes, Balaam might have been saved from disgrace and ruin.

But they came. Balaam, as every other man, must decide upon a course of action. God and right on one hand,—self and wrong on the other. One less endowed than a prophet could have told in less than one night whether the Lord would have his people cursed. A convicting question and a prohibition bring restraint, but not condemnation. The divine answer, "Thou shalt not curse for they are blessed," is withheld from the messengers.

A second embassy with greater inducements leads to an appeal from the first decision. It is given on conditions. O wretched man, to whom God at thy importunity, grants thy own chosen way! O the insiduousness of sin, it dare not be tampered with! O deplorable humanity, that will persist in a downward course! O boundless divine love, that follows falling man, warning him in the narrow passes along the road to destruction! As Pharaoh, forty years before, looking out over the wasted land and the Egyptians mourning for the dead, yet dared pursue the fugitives and forget the Lord's chastisements, so Balaam, in blind, perverted zeal, moves on with eyes closed to the strong import of the angelic visitations.

Look, for a moment, at that thrice performed, sevenfold sacrifice! An offering to Jehovah on the high-places of Baal, planned by the Lord's prophet, executed by a pagan prince! Justice would have sent a thunder-bolt from heaven, condemning the presumption.

Balaam fails to pronounce the required curse; he wins a dishonorable dismissal. The desired honor is withheld. The coveted gold is not given. Disappointed and self-condemned, he turns homeward. In unrighteous madness, he suggests to Balak unlawful alliances, and perishes with the Moabites, as a reward for his labor.

The Lord's prophet falls, but the Lord's cause prospers. Seeking the wages of unrighteousness, Balaam becomes an involuntary and unrewarded servant of the Lord. Attempting to hold favor with God and gain a position with mammon, he loses both. Greed for gain invites a questioning of God's Word, obscures the warning angel, and disappoints and leads to death its faithful pursuers.

Well might Balaam desire to die the death of the righteous, having attained an old age attended with blessings. But death follows life, and is like it in kind. Obedience to the letter, refraining from cursing, is not righteousness; and sympathy with the wicked insures death in the ranks.

If parents knew more of Christ, and practiced more of his religion, there would not be so many little feet already starting on the wrong road, and all around us voices of riot and blasphemy would not come up with such ecstasy of infernal triumph.—Talmage.

LESSONS FROM THE WANDERINGS.

BY P. R. KELTNER.

Our subject comprises a space of forty years, from 1491-1451 B. C., and embraces a period in the history of God's chosen people which is full of lessons, not only for Israel in all ages, but for nations to the end of time.

This period, of less than half a century, called the wanderings, gives an account of many spiritual truths, and is filled with as many sad recollections, as any one period of equal length since the creation of man. It not only teaches us these, but Israel's sad experiences are felt in future generations. Nor is this all. We read, in 1 Cor. 10: 11, "Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples, and they are written for our admonition, upon whom the ends of the world are come." This teaches us that they were God's chosen people and that, as such, God had a special care over them.

He was willing to deliver them from the bondage under which they were oppressed, and also destroy their pursuers. He supplied them with water from the rock, and fed them day by day with manna from heaven. He helped to fight their battles for them, and led them with a gentle and forgiving hand to a promised land.

It also teaches us the sad results of disobedience and sin, which was characteristic of this peculiar people. In this we notice the great loss they sustained by their departure from the law.

From the foregoing statements we draw a few practical lessons which will apply to us.

Israel of old is a type of God's chosen people to-day. While his people then only included the Israelites, it now includes all nations and tongues who are willing to be led by his Word. In every nation he that feareth him and worketh righteousness is accepted with him. Acts 10: 35. Israel had gone down into Egypt, and during their stay, God greatly multiplied their number. Then they fell under a heavy oppression. The Egyptians were their task-masters. They bound upon them grievous and heavy burdens, and they were sorely oppressed, so much so that their cries went up to God, and he heard them and began making a way for their deliverance. He sends them a deliverer in the person of Moses, who was a type of Christ. He was to be their deliverer, and to lead them from a land of bondage to a promised, peaceful and fruitful land.

The lesson from this is, "All men have become sinners by transgression, and have fallen so low that no hand but God's can extricate them." God heard our cries. He saw and, with tender compassion, pitied our condition. He sent us a Deliverer and a Redeemer in the person of Christ, who made a way for our lost condition. He will willingly lead us with a loving hand to a promised and heavenly land.

"Now all these things happened unto them for ensamples, and they are written for our admonition." Mankind had all gone down, spiritually, into Egypt. "By the transgression of one man, all have become sinners," says Paul. All mankind had fallen deeply into sin, with no possible hope of getting back to the Eden of purity. God saw us and pitied our lost condition, and sends us a deliverer, and as Moses was to lead Israel to the land of Canaan, so Christ,—God's only Son,—has come to break the fetters that bind us. He will lead us to a promised and heavenly home. But as Israel must pass through the wilderness to get to the promised land, so must we pass through a wilderness of sin, where are many difficulties and temptations, in order to reach the haven of rest. God rescued Israel from Egypt by destroying all their pursuers. After they had given permission to the Israelites to go, the Egyptians started in pursuit of them again, and attempted to pass through the Red Sea, and were all destroyed. So is it with the child of God. The Ruler of all miraculously delivers the true believer from his enemies, and he is permitted, by obedience to his Word, to have his sins washed away in the blood of the Lamb, and arise to walk in newness of life.

But, after we have yielded obedience to God's will, and have properly applied the means for our salvation, we have only started to the promised land. The wilderness is yet before us. Israel met with many difficulties on the way, and so does the Christian. But, as God fed the Israelites manna day by day for forty years, and from the foot of Sinai's barren and flinty rock, caused to gush forth a refreshing stream, to quench the thirst of the Israelites and their herds, so will God do to the Christian. God not only permits him to eat and drink of the temporal things, but he may eat the Heavenly Food and drink of the Spiritual Rock which will secure for him sufficient strength to cross over the wilderness and gloriously enter the heavenly Canaan.

Let us notice some of Israel's mistakes. The apostle Paul says, "But with many of them God was not well pleased. 1 Cor. 10: 5. They soon forgot God's love and care for them. They forgot how God had manifested his power in their deliverance in helping them across the Red Sea, and in bringing forth water out of the flinty rock. They forgot the mighty thunderings and the quaking of the earth on Sinai's hights, and the terrible aspect under which the Law was given them. With all these evidences of God's power and love, they murmured, they complained, they disrespected and disobeyed their Leader and Deliverer. They wandered after strange gods, and they longed to be back again in bondage in Egypt. Saddest of all, on account of these things, the vast majority of Israel failed of reaching the Promised Land.

We may be able, by the account of this strange people, to learn many lessons, and God certainly intends we should profit by their mistakes. The difficulties, the obstructions and temptations they met with, and the failures they made in a temporal way, are all typical of what we may meet with and make in a spiritual way. It is certainly a sad picture to look at Israel after forty years in the wilderness, and to know that only two out of that vast number of 600,000 were permitted to reach the land of Canaan, and this on account of disobedience. So will it be sad to look over our lives if they are misspent, and to know we have failed of reaching the promised reward.

"Let us therefore fear, lest, a promise being left us of entering into his rest, any of you should seem to come short of it." Heb. 4: 1. "For if the word spoken by angels was steadfast, and every transgression and disobedience received a just recompense of reward; how shall we escape, if we neglect so great salvation?" Heb. 2: 2, 3.

YOUR FAITH.

BY HONTAS UTZ.

"According to your faith be it unto you." Matt. 9: 29.

It appears to me that many handle this Scripture without being able to comprehend or even grasp an idea of its true meaning, and seemingly derive a great deal of comfort from it. It is indeed comforting and encouraging to those who believe aright, but ah, here comes the trouble,—do we believe according to the Scriptures, or do we believe according to our own inclinations, or to suit parents, friends, or even the adversary, "who is going about, seeking whom he may devour," and is always scheming and devising for the destruction of souls?

Let us have the text again, "According to your faith be it unto you." Now let us define it, "If you believe right, it will be right with you." Then common sense would teach us that if we believe wrong, it will be wrong with us.

Some infer from this Scripture that they are allowed any kind of faith they choose, and they are willing to justify themselves. They say they cannot believe otherwise and even believe that religion consists in remaining steadfast in one, or their own, belief. This is another sad mistake. They should contend for the faith once delivered unto the saints, and then remain steadfast and unmovable in all good works. "According to your faith be it unto you," does not say, "It will be well with you," unless you believe well. If the blind man had doubted Christ's power, or ability, or willingness, to cure him, do you suppose he would have been cured? I will venture to say, No, but he was in need as we all are. He was in deep distress as we all should be, before we come to Christ. He believed, as we all should do, when we come to Christ.

The question comes to us: "Do we believe Christ is able and willing to save us? Do we believe he meant us to keep all his commandments, as he has laid them down? Do we believe he is the Author of eternal salvation unto all that obey him? Heb. 5: 12. Some may even believe all this and then not do. Then their faith is a dead faith. It moves not, it lives not for God. It will not benefit them. The devils also believe and tremble. James 2: 19.

What God wants is a strong, living faith,—a faith that assures us that if we do as Christ has commanded us, he will surely do as he has promised, and save us from our sins,—not in our sins. When we see some of our dear church members neglecting their religious duties and committing irreligious deeds, in spite of admonition, entreaties and prayers, then the sad thought, "According to your faith be it unto you," for unbelief, prevails. Their former faith is weakened and sin is the result.

When such is the case, we are a stumbling-block in the church, a laughing-stock in the world, and make our own destruction sure. Let us all believe right, and ask the Lord to help us that our faith fail not, so that, when we are truly converted, we may strengthen one another!

"During the summer a man hung his canary's cage outside the window. Every day a number of sparrows congregated near the cage. Before the summer had passed away the canary had lost all its song, and would only chirp like the sparrows. The canary had got into bad company. Beware of bad company. You may think you can have bad associates and not be like them, but you can't. Choose your friends with care. Good friends will help you to form good habits. With good associates the hours of recreation will pass pleasantly, and will not be marred by quarrels or followed by the stings of a guilty conscience."

Whatever affliction befall us, let us be willing to say, with one of old, "that it was good that I was afflicted, for then I thought upon the Lord." Whatever may be our station in life, why not be content and thankful that it is as well with us as it is!

"Without earnestness no man is really great great, or does really great things. He may be the cleverest of men; he may be brilliant, entertaining, popular; but he will want weight. No soul-moving picture was ever painted that had not in it depths of shadow."

"NOTHING is eternal but that which is done for God and others. That which is done for self dies. Perhaps it is not wrong; but it perishes. You say it is pleasure,—well, enjoy it. But joyous recollection is no longer joy. That which ends in self is mortal; that alone which goes out of self into God lasts forever."

A LAD in Boston, rather small for his years, works in an office as errand-boy for four gentlemen who do business there. One day the gentlemen were chaffing him a little about being so small, and said to him: "You never will amount to much; you never can do much business; you are too small." The little fellow looked at them. "Well," said he, "small as I am, I can do something which none of you four men can do." "Ah, what is that?" they asked. "I don't know as I ought to tell you," he replied. But they were anxious to know, and urged him to tell what he could do that none of them were able to do. "I can keep from swearing!" said the little fellow. There were some blushes on four manly faces, and there seemed to be very little anxiety for further information on the point.—Ex.

"THE piety that Christ smiles upon is a piety that will stand a pinch and face a storm; that would rather eat an honest crust than fare sumptuously on unholy gains; that gladly gives up its couch of ease to sally on its mission among the outcasts; that sets its face sternly against fashionable sins. We talk glibly about 'taking up a cross,' but a cross is intended for somebody's crucifixion. On Calvary's cross we know full well who bled away his precious life. On our cross self is to be the victim. Paul, the heroic, was emphasizing that fact when he commanded Christians to mortify their members which are upon the earth. The American Revision of the New Testament hits the sense of this passage more accurately: 'Put to death your own members,' etc. Loyalty to Christ often demands the plucking out of the right eye and the amputation of the right arm. The sublime glory of Abraham's offering really was that he was willing to thrust the knife through the very heart of self. Oh, it is not the taking up, it is the giving up, that makes a strong, athletic, heroic Christian!'"

"MIND your heart. It is the great engine that moves all the machinery of life. It is the life-clock, beating away your lives every hour. Above all things, do not let sin creep into your heart. Satan is hard after it, and unless you are very careful he will capture it. Keep out bad desires. Let love, obedience, and kindness dwell there. Make your heart the very throne of honor. Mind your heart."

THE Christian Cynosure very truthfully says that while the church of Rome and the heretics of the orthodox Protestant churches of this country are unitedly raising their voices against the authorized version of our Bible as an errant and uninspired book, the American Bible Society, with similar societies here and elsewhere, sustained by the prayers and supported by the money of millions of Christians, is continually engaged in distributing copies of it, in all languages, throughout the world; and the best of it is, that, wherever it is carried and read, not only the religious and moral character of the people is improved, but it becomes also an important factor in the physical and industrial progress of those nations where it is most kindly received and its teachings most deeply revered.

THE OUTLOOK.

BY GALEN B. ROYER.

THERE is now the promise of a bountiful harvest throughout those parts of Kansas, Nebraska and Colorado, where, last year, there was a famine. During the past winter the Brethren and friends responded nobly to the calls for relief, for those living in this section, but our responsibility does not end with supplying them. We have a greater and more important work now on our hands.

God only knows how much of all this distress he sent upon them to bring them, as well as the givers of the relief fund, nearer to him. We know, however, that while the necessaries to save the people from starving were administered, many were made to think of the salvation of their souls. This is not an unnatural result. When men and women have eaten their last morsel of food, and in their extreme want, without any hope of relief have laid down to die, and an unlooked-for messenger steps in and gives them food to eat and clothes to wear, there is an inclination to look upon that deliverance as heaven-sent, and, in their gratitude, a desire is born to return a sincere service in thanks for the same. Such incidents were not infrequent while distributing the funds, and because of this, we now urge active missionary work in these localities.

When we come to consider this new opportunity, we find the field is very large and the force for proclaiming the Word small. Under "Our Resources and Our Field," in GOSPEL MESSENGER No. 13, Bro S. P. Weaver shows that we have 192 ministers in Kansas, 52 in Nebraska, and 12 in Colorado. From what we can learn, the greater number of these live in the eastern part of Kansas and Nebraska, where distress was not particularly felt. This places few ministers in the immediate field with thousands of spiritually hungry, scattered over a great scope of country, to be fed. Now it is simply impossible for these few ministers to do all this work and we should not expect it of them. Most of them felt the famine as bitterly as the remainder of the people and are now compelled to provide for their own. The territory is too large, even if they could give their entire time to it. Neither can the General Mission Board, according to her constitution, work directly in these Districts. Into whose hands, then, does the responsibility of this work fall? We know of none other than the District Mission Boards of those parts where the work is to be done. There it rightly belongs.

Fall and winter, the special harvest season for souls, is rapidly approaching, and we hope the Boards of the several Districts will take this matter under advisement immediately, and prepare to do effectual work in their respective fields. The first and most important thing is to engage suitable men to go and preach as soon as the busy season of the farmers is over. The next is to provide for their expenses and time; for it cannot be expected that the one who goes should meet this all himself. This calls up the other side of the question.

The Boards in these Districts are, of course, practically without funds. But there is a remedy for this. Let them calculate how much it will take to push the work judiciously, yet vigorously, for the fall and winter, and call on the General Board for that amount. Let those churches and persons who responded so liberally to the call for help for relieving bodily wants, answer as promptly and as liberally now for the feeding of souls.

Cannot the same ones who helped last year to make the $15,000 that passed through the hands of the Committee, appointed by the Northern District of Illinois, come up this year—this year of promised abundance—with the same or greater amount for the salvation of brothers in the West? Will not those who did not help in the relief fund, this year, be willing to increase the fund still more? Brethren and sisters, let us raise $20,000 this year to help build meeting-houses, preach the Word, and establish churches all over this beloved land of ours. Here is an opportunity for great home mission work, and we feel sure if we enter the field prayerfully, trustingly and humbly, yet boldly, earnestly and fearlessly, that there will be a great harvesting of souls for the kingdom. Let us pray for a great ingathering this year! Let us labor for it! Let us all be willing either to give liberally or to say, like one of old, "Here am I; take me!"

The Gospel Messenger

Is the recognized organ of the German Baptist or Brethren's church, and advocates the form of doctrine taught in the New Testament and pleads for a return to apostolic and primitive Christianity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and maintains that Faith toward God, Repentance from dead works, Regeneration of the heart and mind, baptism by Trine Immersion for remission of sins unto the reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, are the means of adoption into the household of God,—the church militant.

It also maintains that Feet-washing, as taught in John 13, both by example and command of Jesus, should be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper, instituted by Christ and as universally observed by the apostles and the early Christians, is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening or after the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That the principle of Plain Dressing and of Non-conformity to the world, as taught in the New Testament, should be observed by the followers of Christ

That the Scriptural duty of Anointing the Sick with Oil, in the Name of the Lord, James 5 : 14, is binding upon all Christians.

It also advocates the church's duty to support Missionary and Tract Work, the sending to the Lord for the spread of the Gospel and for the conversion of sinners.

In short, it is an advocator of all that Christ and the apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discords of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe.

Mount Morris, Ill., - - - - July 21, 1891

IN the obituary notice of sister Ann Kingery, page 414, the State should have been Indiana instead of Maryland.

BRO. J. G. ROYER is spending a few weeks with the Brethren in Southern Indiana. His first stopping place is Ladoga.

ON June 8th, Eld. David Glick, of the Greenwood church, Texas County, Missouri, met with a very serious accident, caused by a runaway team. His recovery is thought doubtful.

BRO. D. L. MILLER reports large meetings and excellent interest at his meetings in Mansfield, Ohio, where he has been stopping a few days. From there he went to Hagerstown, Maryland. After reaching Denmark his address will be, Augustegade 26, 1 Sal. Amager, Copenhagen, Denmark, Europe, care of C. Hansen. Letters thus addressed will require five cents postage.

WE are still receiving many orders for that excellent little book, "Alone with God." It is the best work to cultivate the spirit of prayer, of which we have any knowledge. Price, 75 cents.

WITH the best of us, life cannot be long, so let all of our words be kind. Let us leave behind us the marks of kindness on every hand! Let us strew our pathway with kind deeds and kind words!

BRO. J. C. LAHMAN has returned to Pennsylvania, where his wife has been since the Annual Meeting. They expect to reach their former home in Franklin Grove in the course of a few weeks.

TWENTY-FIVE years ago the Brethren at New Enterprise, Pa., organized their Sunday-school, and it is still running. That is encouraging. We need all the Sunday-schools we can have. Let us keep the good work going.

MUCH honor was heaped upon Mr. Stanley because he rescued Emin Pasha, and brought him safely out of Africa. but greatly to the astonishment of the civilized world, Pasha returned. He prefers to live in the Dark Continent.

IN our last report of money received for the Western sufferers, the $1.00, credited to David Swihart, should have been credited to Mary Miller, while the amount credited to Samuel Pontius should have been $2.00 instead $1.00, as stated in the report.

THE Lord willing, Bro. Hope will accompany Bro. D. L. Miller and wife to Denmark. He is now making preparations for the trip. His family will remain in America. We cannot say how long he will stay, but while there he expects to devote all of his time to the work of the ministry.

IT will be quite a favor to us, when ministers are elected, if our correspondents will always give their names and addresses on a separate slip of paper, so we can get them correctly in the Ministerial List of the Almanac. As a general thing, when mention is made by correspondents of brethren being elected to the ministry, nothing is said concerning their address. Hence the above request.

IT is to be regretted that the Advisory Committee of the Bridgewater College, Va., did not present their report to the Annual Meeting at the time the other schools were reported. We, by request of the Committee, publish the report in this issue, but suggest that hereafter these reports be made to the Annual Meeting, where they properly belong, so they can be published in the Minutes.

"QUINTER'S Life and Sermons" is now out, and ready for filling orders. It is a neatly-printed and well-bound volume of over 400 pages, containing an interesting biographical sketch of Bro. Quinter, accompanied by a number of his sermons. Price, post-paid, $1.25. We shall have more to say about the book in next issue. Agents will write us for special terms to those who desire to sell the book for us.

ON another page of this issue will be found a selected article on "The Higher Criticisms," that will prove exceedingly interesting reading to those who are in any manner troubled by the havoc modern critics are making of the Bible. The deacon's conduct, in this case, reminds us of the man who called the saloon-keeper out, and told him to set his sign up, pointing to a drunken man lying on the side-walk. A Bible, with all the leaves cut out, would very appropriately represent the faith and practice of most of these so-called high critics.

THE Powell's Valley church, Oregon, has decided to build a meeting-house. The action of the church in making an effort to secure a place for worship, and the appointing of solicitors for the general missionary work, as well as home work is truly encouraging. Success to the Brethren in Oregon!

ONE of our readers has the MESSENGER sent to a very intelligent lady friend. She writes thus to him concerning it: "I received the MESSENGER for three weeks, for which I am very thankful to you. I think it is a very instructive paper, for I have gained a great deal of comfort from it. I have read them all through, and enjoy them very much. I am convinced your church is the right one, but I have so much opposition that it is hard to decide."

FULL REPORT.—We still have on hands a number of the Reports of our late Conference, which, we think, is the best report that we have yet sent out. It not only contains the speeches as they were presented and properly corrected, but in these speeches may be found many arguments pro and con on questions of vital interest to our readers. Many of the speeches would make excellent reading in the MESSENGER. Also, the reading of this Report will enable the reader to understand more fully the reasons for many of the decisions made by the Conference. It is probable that, if our Brethren always understood the reasons for the decisions, that are adopted by our Brotherhood, they would generally be more interested in carrying them out. Price, post-paid, twenty-five cents.

SUNDAY, July 12th, it fell to the lot of the ministers at Mt. Morris to fill several appointments away from home. Bro. Amick filled the appointment at the Meyers school-house, ten miles northeast from here. He reports good congregations and the best of interest. Bro. J. G. Royer preached twice at Franklin Grove, where he had large congregations. One was baptized. Your Office Editor filled the appointment at Milledgeville in the morning, and Lanark in the evening. At both these places we had good congregations, and the best of attention paid to the preached Word. Two appointments in the College Chapel, and one at Salem, two miles south of here, were also filled by our brethren. While we have a number of ministers located here it will be seen that we are by no means idle.

THE POWER DELEGATED TO THE CHURCH.

ON another page of this issue will be found an article on "The New Testament Idea of Church Government," by Bro. B. C. Moomaw, treating a subject of general interest to our entire Brotherhood. We hope Bro. Moomaw will pardon us for offering a few remarks on the same subject, in connection with his article, not in the sense of controversy, for it is our aim to avoid discussions between brethren through the MESSENGER, as much as possible, but we are confident that our people, as a body, look at that question quite differently, and it is for the purpose of setting forth the position of the general Brotherhood more fully, that we write this article.

Last week we stated that the authority to bind and loose was given to the church, limited however to the Scriptures. Unto the church this has been committed, with authority to interpret and enforce, and then the church is held responsible for the manner in which she uses that authority.

There are three powers in the universe: Legislative, Judicial and Executive.

Legislative, is the power to make or enact laws. So far as it affects religious law it is the highest power in existence, and belongs to Deity alone. The power to make or enact laws, pertaining to religion, has never been entrusted to man in any age of the world. God makes all of his own laws, puts his seal upon them, and then transmits them to man. We trust that this point is clearly understood.

Judicial, the power to pass judgment or sentence. The power to interpret the law, and also examine into the conduct of members, and decide whether they have violated the law of which they are accused. It interprets and applies the law which God has made and given to the church. In its interpretation it can go no farther than that law. This Judicial power is given to the church. The church may decide whether dancing or card-playing is a violation of the law. She may decide any question submitted to her concerning the duty and privileges of members.

To the church, at the council in Jerusalem, was submitted the question, concerning circumcision, after the manner of Moses, being a condition of salvation. After discussing the subject carefully and prayerfully, the council decided that the church had no authority to require circumcision and the keeping of the law, of its members. In this case the church was acting purely in her judicial capacity. And her decision in that case was sanctioned in heaven, not because the council so decided, but because the law which God himself had given to man so taught. The church at Antioch had a Gospel right to settle this question, in the same manner, for themselves, but it seems they could not to the satisfaction of all the members. Paul and Barnabas held that circumcision after the manner of Moses, and the keeping of the law was no part of the Gospel, but they could not get the entire church to see it that way. If they could have convinced the church on that point, the question would never have gone to the apostles and elders at Jerusalem from Antioch. But because they could not settle the matter at home it was wisely deemed necessary to send it to Jerusalem, where there was a greater number of members and elders with the inspired apostles to assist.

It should be remembered that Judicial authority is given to local congregations as well as to the general church, only it is deemed proper that all general questions be submitted to the churches in her general assemblies. Any congregation has a right to decide any and all questions pertaining to her own membership, provided she decides them aright. If all congregations could and would decide all questions aright, there would be no need of a General Conference acting on any question pertaining to the conduct of its members or churches. Just so with the question of circumcision in the days of the apostles. Had the local church at Antioch settled it satisfactorily among themselves, according to the Gospel, that would have been the end of it, and the council at Jerusalem would perhaps never have been held. If all of our local congregations, here in America, could decide every question, pertaining to our conduct, in harmony with the Gospel, and to the satisfaction of all the members, there would be no need of us sending any query up to either the District or Annual Meeting for a decision. But because local congregations, separate and apart, do not decide important questions alike, and in keeping with the Gospel, it is deemed both wise and necessary that we have these General Conferences, and this, too, for the same reason that the church at Antioch was permitted to send a question to Jerusalem where there happened to be a more general assembly.

But in making all these decisions, the churches, whether local or general, act purely in their Judicial capacity. A question is presented to them and fully explained. They now go to the law and testimony to see what it teaches on that question. If the decision is in harmony with either the clear reading or spirit of the Gospel, it is all right and should be respected. The decision, however, is a purely Judicial act, and not a Legislative act. The Legislative act took place in heaven when the law was made. The Judicial act takes place on earth when a council makes her decision. If these Judicial acts are in perfect harmony with the Gospel, they will be recognized in heaven: if not authorized by the Word, they stand condemned.

Executive, the power which executes, or carries the laws into effect. This power has also been given to the church. It is in her place to teach, and see that the Word is fully obeyed by all those who are members of the body.

Of the three powers named above, only one is withheld from the church, and that is the Legislative. Man is, therefore, not responsible for any of the laws contained in the Scriptures, but he is held responsible for his manner of interpreting and executing them.

The church exercises her executive power whenever she binds and looses, according to Matt. 16: 19, which says, "Whatsoever thou shalt bind on earth shall be bound in heaven," etc. She also acts in the same capacity in remitting or retaining sins in harmony with John 20: 23, "Whosesoever sins ye remit they are remitted unto them, and whosesoever sins ye retain, they are retained unto them." Paul says: "Withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly." 2 Thess. 3: 6. This is also a duty in which the members act in their executive capacity. We might refer to other Scriptural instances, coming under this head, but will let these suffice.

We need, however, to keep in mind the facts, that the power that makes a law is Legislative. That power is in heaven. The power to interpret and apply the law is Judicial. This power is in the church. But the power to execute or carry the laws into effect after they are made in heaven, and interpreted on earth is the Executive power. This power is also in the church.

These two last-named powers must, of necessity, be in the church; it could not be otherwise. In their nature, however, they are both moral and spiritual, because they deal with moral and spiritual questions for moral and spiritual purposes. And while they are both moral and spiritual in their nature, they are nevertheless Judicial and Executive. To be moral and spiritual without being either Judicial or Executive, would require that they be merely persuasive. Hence to say, in this sense, that the only power given to the church is spiritual and moral is not sufficient, and is, at the same time, more or less misleading. Of course all religious questions must be considered spiritual. It is also neither wise nor Scriptural to limit the power of the church to mere questions of morality. One may live a strictly moral life, and yet be far from living a religious life. The church, in the days of the apostles, did not limit herself to questions of morality. Paul reminded the church at Corinth, that it was out of order on a doctrinal point, because in eating the Lord's Supper every one took before another his own supper. After pointing out their error, he then says: "The rest will I set in order when I come." The question submitted to the council at Jerusalem was not a moral question; it was a doctrinal question. Some of the Jews contended that they could not be saved unless they were circumcised after the manner of Moses:—a purely doctrinal question. The council acted on this question, and decided it according to the law of the Lord. We might refer to a number of cases, showing that the apostles and the ancient church took cognizance of doctrinal as well as moral questions. It is not enough to say the cases we have cited were merely spiritual. The term spiritual decides nothing in the school of controversy, for everything, religiously, may be considered spiritually right or wrong.

If the church would exercise no authority whatever over the faith and practice of her members, we would soon be in a state of confusion, for some men, creeping into the church unawares, would introduce heresies, and thereby corrupt our holy religion. We had a case of this kind mentioned last week, in the extract taken from the article written by P. J. Brown. A young preacher thought that, because he belonged to a church which had no conference, he could do as he pleased, hence he introduced erroneous doctrine and made trouble. That is just what we will have whenever we limit our authority to mere moral and spiritual questions only, and act alone upon the persuasive basis.

We are aware of the dark pages of ecclesiastical domineering of the past, and especially of the dark ages, but it should be borne in mind that those dark crimes were perpetrated by a church that claims Legislative power in religious matters, — a power that God has never given to man since the world began. Some other churches may have abused both the Judicial and Executive powers God has given them; this does not, however, prove that they do not possess the power legitimately. We can abuse any right thing. With mere moral and spiritual power no church can keep her members in the line of Scriptural duty. A glance at the popular denominations of the day, who operate solely on the moral and spiritual basis, ought to convince any one that Primitive Christianity cannot be thus maintained.

We, too, believe in conversion instead of coercion, but unfortunately there are members who will not be converted after a first, and even a second admonition. In such cases Paul says: "A man that is a heretic, after the first and second admonition, reject." Tit. 3: 10. Men who will not be converted to the way of the Lord must be rejected. This is a principle clearly laid down in the Scripture, and without it we would have disorder and sin on every hand, and unlimited confusion. But it should be remembered that we do not coerce members, or any one else, in the sense that the word is now generally used. We set the right way before erring ones—at least it is our duty to so do — and then urge them to desist from the evil and cleave to the good. This is both Gospel and reason in its highest sense. We want our readers to examine this subject with care, for it lies at the very bottom of church government, and concerns every member of the body.

J. H. M.

MIRIAM HETH.

Is the title of a neat little volume of seventy-four pages, sent us by John B. Alden, New York, written by Rev. A. J. Holt, while in the City of Jerusalem:— "A Tale of the Times of Christ," in verse. We can not be expected to read entirely the many books sent us for review, but this one we read from beginning to end, and a part of it the second time. For the entertainment of the lovers of poetry we quote a number of verses. The following description of the Sea of Galilee is a gem:

"And now his eye is on the sea
Of gleaming, glorious Galilee.
The shadows from both hill and town
Had sweetly smoothed its dimples down,
Until it mirrored on its breast
The hills whose shadows gave it rest,
And seemed to sleep in tranquil blue,
So azure in its changeless hue,
As if an angel from on high
Had dropped to earth a piece of sky.

"The mountains, such was nature's part,
Formed framework for this gem of art,
While silvery pebbles, circling round,
Enclosed the golden sands that bound,
This sacred sea with inner strand,
Most beauteous of the Holy Land."

Miriam, a child of wealth, is the subject of the poem. Before sin had marred her soul or body she is thus described:

"That face defied the painter's art,
For every line and tint apart,
Told that an ardent, loving heart
Beat warm beneath that bosom fair
Veiled with her wealth of raven hair.

"Her cheeks had caught the almond's down
Where pearly white was tinged with brown,
While underneath her sweeping lashes
Her sparkling eye with gladness flashes.

"The poise of head with aimless art,
The fresh red lips, the bounding heart,
Told of a wealth of love within,
Untouched by time, unsoiled by sin."

She finally was engaged to be married to a cruel young man against the earnest protest of her venerable father, Nabal Heth.

"The cruel blow, with fatal stroke,
The heart and life of Nabal broke.
Her tarnished name, disgrace and shame
Quite overcame his feeble frame;
With Miriam that death had come,
To take away both Heth and home."

Years came and went. Her unfortunate marriage filled her soul with sin. Crime after crime marked her career. The once pure soul unsoiled by sin was transferred into a demon. The man to whom she surrendered herself when as harmless as a babe, has become the object of intense hatred.

"'I do not,' to herself she said,
'I do not want or wish him dead;
I rather wish that he and I
Could just live on eternally;
That I could evermore impart
New tortures to his treach'rous heart.

"'If I could burn him inch by inch,
And mock him every time he'd flinch;
And when by death relieved from pain,
Revive him, and begin again.'"

One would think that a being so pure could never be brought to such a state of degradation. It speaks volumes to every pure-minded woman who values the purity of her soul.

As the story progresses Christ makes his appearance on the Mount of Beatitudes, or Horns of Hattin, and is thus described:

"No earthly temple could contain
The crowds that flock from sea and plain;
To see and hear and speak to all
He climbs the sides of Hattin tall.

"His head was bare, His face was fair,
And sunshine nestled in His hair.
His brow was high, while from His eye
Beamed benedictions from the sky.

"A garment, seamless, spotless too,
Dropped from the shoulder to the shoe,
Concealing form of faultless mould,
Whose symmetry could ne'er be told."

Miriam still continued in sin, but decided to hear what Christ had to say, for

"She felt a womanly desire
To risk her all in danger dire,
To hear the words He might advance
Which could such multitudes entrance.

"At first she thought that too high-wrought
Was all the happiness He brought;
His ideal was out of reach;
To angels He might fitly preach.

"But as each rounded sentence swung
With winning wisdom from His tongue,
They fell and fed upon her heart,
As if He talked with her apart.

"The words of truth so wisely spoken
Left Miriam's guilty heart all broken.
'Eye for an eye, and tooth for tooth,'
Had gained her no relief, in truth."

She met Jesus time and again, saw the miracles he performed, heard his warning voice, and at times resolved to lead a better life, but her soul had been so long steeped in sin that she had not power to release herself from the grasp of Satan. Finally came the feast, mentioned in Luke 7: 36–48. We let the poet tell the rest of the story:

"The feast was spread, a grand affair,
And many a guest was gathered there;
Some to eat, and some to see,
And some with Jesus there to be.

"Shrewd Simon sat with stately grace
Complaisantly at chiefest place;
Feeling flattered at such a thought,
His hospitality had brought
So great a Guest as this to be Within his house, where all might see.

"But in the height of honor's hour,
What caused his countenance to cower?
'Twas outraged Miriam's tearful face
That robbed him of desired grace.

"With downcast eye and smothered sigh,
She hurried in and crowded by,
Until to Jesus' feet she came;
And then, o'ercome with grief and shame,
She prostrate fell, 'twixt hopes and fears,
And rained upon His feet her tears.

"He did not bid her to depart,
And soon there dawned upon her heart
The beauteous, bright and burning ray
Of pardon's everlasting day.

"She lingered at those feet, so fair,
And dried them with her flowing hair,
Unmindful all of who might see,
Contented with her Lord to be.

"His feet, devoutly, she had kissed,
The Master still did not resist;
So, bringing forth her ointment rare,
She bathed His feet with perfume there.

"When Simon saw the deed so bold
His heart at once grew hard and cold.
He said within his troubled mind,
This man is but a creature blind,
For if a prophet, he would know
This woman at his feet so low

"Then spake the Master, knowing all
That had been, or that would befall:
'Simon, I have somewhat to say.
Two debtors would their master pay;
Five hundred pence the first was due,
And fifty owed the other, true;

"'When neither could his debt discharge,
The creditor, with heart so large,
Freely forgave them all the rest;
Now, which of them will love him best?'

"A little puzzled looked the host:
'I judge he who was helped the most.'
Replied the Master, 'That is fair;
Seest thou that woman kneeling there?

'I entered as thy guest, methought,
No water for my feet was brought;
But Miriam, through contending fears,
Hath brought me here a bath of tears.

"'No kiss thou gavest at thy door,
But she my feet hath covered o'er;
And when thy hand withheld the oil,
Behold, the spikenard's precious spoil
Upon my feet in fragrance shed,
And dried by hairs of Miriam's head.

"'So now, I say to thee, and all,
Her grievous sins, both great and small,
Though many, they are all forgiven,
And she is now an heir of Heaven.'

"Miriam's heart with glad surprise
Sprang from her bosom to her eyes;
And when the Lord her pardon spoke,
One cry of joy the silence broke.

"With clasping hands, and flashing face,
And heaving heart, and gladding grace,
Still there she knelt, and motioned not,
Rooted with rapture to the spot.

"The Lord recites her sweet release:
'Thy faith hath saved thee; go in peace;
Thy heart, thy way, thy life shall be Devoted hence to serving me;
The last to leave; the first to give
The message that the dead doth live;
I change thy name to match thy mien,
Hence thou art MARY MAGDALENE.'"

From Kansas to Philadelphia.

I LEFT my home at Bird City, Kans., June 1, for an extended visit to the Eastern part of our United States. I first stopped at Hagerstown, Md., to attend the Annual Conference at that place. Being a delegate, I stayed, of course, until the Conference adjourned and can say that this was one of the most pleasant as well as the most profitable Annual Meetings I ever attended. Everything was decided in a good Christian spirit and no harsh or disrespectful words were spoken. From Hagerstown I visited among the brethren and sisters of the Broad Run and Brownsville churches, in Washington and Frederick Counties, Md. Everything seems to be moving along harmoniously here, there being seemingly no difficulties whatever. I preached a few times for the Brethren in these places and was well pleased with the interest manifested in the Lord's work. We wish to express thanks for the many kindnesses shown us here and shall ever have kind memories for old Maryland.

After rusticating in and around South Mountain for a time, I went to Washington and there spent several days, visiting places of national interest. From Washington I started for Baltimore, Md., where I arrived June 25.

Here is where Bro. J. T. Quinlan has been laboring so earnestly for the poor boys and girls of the City. Bro. Quinlan welcomed me very kindly, and on the evening of the 25th I had the pleasure of being present at the "Young Folks' Prayer-meeting" which was conducted in an interesting manner. I also met our zealous missionary,—sister Eliza J. McGaughey,—who is doing a good work by distributing tracts, not only in Baltimore but elsewhere.

From Baltimore I took the steamer "Elizabeth" for Philadelphia, to visit my old friend and playmate,—Bro. T. T. Myers,—who has charge of one of the Brethren's churches in Philadelphia, on Dauphin St. I certainly had a very enjoyable time among the brethren and sisters of this place.

They are very energetic workers and deserve much credit, for they certainly work under great disadvantages in this large city. They have finished a new stone church and have very encouraging prospects. Four were baptized June 28, – one brother and three sisters, all young. May the Lord keep them safe from the snares of the evil one until the end, is our prayer.

I did not get to visit Bro. Reiner's congregation very much, but those I did meet, including Bro. Reiner and family, were wide-awake Christians. I also visited our old stone church, – "the church primeval,"—at Germantown, adjoining Philadelphia. I found the ancient edifice still in a good state of preservation. The church stands back from the street, making room for a beautiful lawn, which is kept in a good condition by Bro. Bigger and wife, who kindly showed me through the building and grave-yard. The grave of that venerable "soldier of Christ,"—Alexander Mack,—may be seen in the adjoining grave-yard. As I gazed upon this old stone church, the birthplace of the Brethren's church in America, I wondered if posterity will not revere the dear old spot even more, a hundred years hence than we do now. I have had a pleasant time in Philadelphia and am reluctant at leaving, but to-morrow, July 1, I start for New York City and, after visiting Saratoga and Niagara, I expect to return home via Northern Illinois and Central Iowa to Bird City, Kans.

O. C. SLIFER.

Old Folks and Orphan Children's Home of Middle District of Indiana.

To avoid unnecessary correspondence, and even disappointments, as some have come to the Home expecting to stay, who were not eligible, thus being disappointed,—because of these and other reasons, we deem it necessary to get the rules, governing the Home, more fully before the members and churches.

(a) The Home is only intended to accommodate members from the Middle District of Indiana, as it is owned, controlled, and supported by Middle Indiana, and no aid has been solicited outside of that District. The question has often been asked by parties, outside of the District, "If we pay our board, could we not come?" We have never done so. Again, "Cannot the poor members of adjoining Districts be transferred to Middle Indiana, and then be admitted?" We cannot accept such. See Minutes of A. M., 1867, Art 3.

(b) Members who are pronounced full church charges by the church, in which they hold their membership, are eligible to the Home.

Members who are only partial charges should be kept at home; as they can be kept cheaper than we can keep them. For example, a member has a little home, and can make a large part of his living. Such should be helped at home.

If a member has some property, or money, and wants to bequeath it to the Home, he can do so, and then make the Home his home for life.

No person who has children, that are able and willing to keep them, can be admitted to the Home.

(c) All applications must be made to the Superintendent, through the church wherein such member holds his membership, and such application must be signed by at least a majority of the officials, and the church, sending inmates, shall bear the expenses to and from the Home. The Home pays no traveling expenses of inmates.

(d) All applications for admission of orphan children shall be made to the Superintendent, through the friends or guardian having charge of such children.

Children must be admitted subject to the disposal of the Trustees, who shall procure homes for them among the Brethren, if possible, otherwise among honorable families.

(e) All persons must be cleansed of all contagious diseases before they can be admitted.

(f) It is expected that all inmates work to the extent that they are able.

(g) In case of sickness the Home secures medical aid, and in the event of death gives a respectable burial, but in case the friends desire to remove the remains, they can do so by paying the expenses.

(h) It shall be the duty of churches sending inmates to the Home to furnish them with a change of clothing.

(i) And as District Meeting has advised elders to be careful in granting applications to those who are able to work, we also urge that care be taken, and the above points considered, that the Home be not imposed on by those who would thus take the place of some who are old and feeble, and need the comforts of the Home.

(j) Churches making applications should always give the name of the person, the age, and, if disabled in any way, how.

(k) FORM OF APPLICATION.

From Macleay, Ore.

THIS morning Bro. Shellenberger and wife, from Covington, Ohio, and the writer, took the train at East Portland, for Macleay. Upon arrival at that place, we were met by Bro. Joseph Early, who took us to his home. Here we met a few of the brethren and sisters. Bro. Barklow, of Norway, Coos Co., Oregon, and Bro. Sidney Hodgden, from Kansas, were among the number. We are sorry to state that grandfather Early has been quite sick, but it is thought that he is now on the road to recovery. May the Lord spare him to his dear family! In the evening we met at the Union church and were addressed by Bro. Sidney Hodgden, Bro. Barklow assisting. We had regular services the next day and also council-meeting. All seemed to be in harmony and peace. The brethren and sisters here are very zealous. After council-meeting we again had services, and in the evening we had a love-feast, at which about thirty-eight members participated. The attendance was generally small, owing to the inclemency of the weather. On Saturday morning they had a social meeting, then regular services. At 2 P. M., we were again addressed by our dear brethren. Brethren Barklow and Hodgden are both able speakers and contended earnestly for the cause.

On Sunday morning quite a number of brethren, sisters and friends assembled for children's meeting. The little ones occupied the front seats, and were addressed by Bro. Joseph Early. Although young, yet he is an interesting speaker. He spoke from Prov. 22: 1, 6. The first part of his discourse was directed to the children, the latter to the parents. The little ones were highly pleased, and I think all were benefited by the remarks of the brother. At the regular meeting, at 11 A. M., we were addressed by brethren Barklow and Hodgden. At the close of the afternoon services, we met at the water-side, where one dear young man was made to rejoice in the God of his salvation. The meetings closed with the evening appointment.

On Monday morning we bade farewell to the brethren and sisters and friends. Bro. Early took us to Salem, where we took the train for East Portland, our present home. May the grace of God be showered on all those who love and serve God aright!

Notes by the Way.

AFTER enjoying our Annual Meeting at Hagerstown, Md., I returned to East Tennessee by the way of Bristol, Va., at which place I was met by Bro. Daniel Wine, who conveyed me to his father's. The next morning, Sunday, June 7, Bro. Benjamin Wine conveyed me to the Pleasant Hill church, where I commenced meetings in the evening. Elders Henry Garst and Joseph Wine have charge of this congregation. Notwithstanding the very busy time of harvest, it was requested that I should remain with them and preach during the week, which I did with increased congregations and interest. I preached thirteen sermons in all, and as a result of the meetings nine were baptized and one dear young sister reclaimed.

June 2 I arrived at the Pleasant Valley church. This is the home of my father and oldest brother, Conrad Bashor. Here I preached five sermons and two united with the church.

I next went to the Old Limestone church, where I held two meetings on Sunday, and on Tuesday, June 30, we attended the funeral of our dear old sister, Susan Sherfy, who lived a faithful member of the Brethren church for about forty-seven years.

At this writing wife and I are at the house of Eld. J. B. Pence, who has charge of this congregation.

Limestone, Tenn., July 2.

From Shannon, Ill.

WE had a children's meeting on July 4, when a goodly number of members, children and friends assembled.

We spent about two hours in singing and having short addresses from the brethren and sisters, mostly upon the Sunday-school work. All seemed to think it was a good place to be on a national holiday. Certainly it was far better than to be engaged in reveling, banqueting and abominable idolatries, as many are on such days.

July 3 we held a council, and three, who desired no longer to walk with us, were disowned. It causes sorrow when men's hearts become so corrupt that they no longer find enjoyment in the house of the Lord! May they soon see the error of their way, and return to the fold!

On this Lord's Day, July 5, one erring one came penitently, seeking admittance into the fold. As the Great Shepherd never turned away from the penitent, so the church also was glad for the return of the wandering lamb. The tears of joy and sadness which fell from the eyes of rejoicing souls, were many, as she was being taken into the fold. May the guardian angel ever hover around us, and keep us near the cross!

THE Exeter church met in council June 27, 1891. Eld. G. Stambaugh presided. We had a good meeting. Considerable business came before the meeting, but everything passed off with the best of feeling. We received some good exhortations from the brethren, and we believe that impressions were made that will cause us to keep nearer the cross of our Blessed Savior.

The church decided to hold a love-feast, the Lord willing, Oct. 10 and 11, commencing at 10 A. M. The meeting is to be at Bro. Heiny's place, three and one-half miles north-east of McCool Junction, York Co., Nebr. The brethren and sisters of the adjoining congregations are earnestly invited to be with us. Come and we will rejoice once more together, and try to make one step nearer that haven of rest, prepared by our Heavenly Father for all those who love him. If we love him, we will keep his commandments, and thus become heirs to that inheritance which will stand as long as the years of eternity roll.

Report of the Visiting Committee of Bridgewater College.

As an explanation it will be proper to state that this report should have been made at the close of our last Annual Meeting, at Hagerstown, Md., but owing to circumstances, over which the Committee had no control, it was not then presented. By request it is now given through the columns of the GOSPEL MESSENGER, which, we trust, will be satisfactory.

Agreeably to our appointment, Bridgewater College was visited after the opening of the Fall Term of 1890, and again after the opening of the Spring Term of 1891. At our first visit, after the usual devotional and class-room exercises, at a suitable hour the teachers were called together, and the object of our visit briefly stated. We were gratified to learn that the feeling and views of the Faculty were fully in accord with ours. The teachers agreed to conform to, and work in harmony with the general order of our Brotherhood. They also agreed to labor together to secure, as far as possible, a conformity to the order of the church among the members in attendance at the school. To secure this, we recommended the holding of members' meetings in which the young members could be instructed in the duties they owe to the church, to one another, and to God, thus laying, in early life, the true principles of correct discipline and church government.

The following is a brief statement of the work, and the progress of the school:

"MORNING WORSHIP. The students and Faculty meet each morning in the chapel at 8 o'clock for worship.

"PRAYER-MEETING. A weekly prayer-meeting is conducted every Sunday morning at 9 o'clock by the students. Many students date the beginning of their public religious worship to these meetings. Here the students enjoy special training, which lays a good foundation for effective service in the church.

"SUNDAY-SCHOOL. The Sunday-school in the afternoon of each Sabbath consists in the study and exposition of the Holy Scripture.

"PREACHING.—All the students are expected to attend preaching in the chapel every Sunday evening.

"MEMBERS' MEETING.—A very admirable feature of the religious training is observed in the members' meeting held bi-weekly. All the members meet for a short season of worship in which service the endeavor is made to build each other up in the faith of the Gospel, and to cultivate a love for the principles and plainness of the church. We are pleased to state that the order of the church receives due attention. Students, not accustomed to observe the order of the Brotherhood at home, here see and learn the beauty of non-conformity.

"BIBLE CLASS.—A daily Bible Class is conducted. The class, during the first session, studied Names and Titles of Christ, prophecies relating to Babylon, Tyre, etc. Also, Christ's life from childhood to his ascension. Then were considered Paul's missionary journeys, and his voyage to Rome.

"An impressive series of sermons were delivered during the past session in the College Chapel by Bro. H. C. Early. Two students were received into the church."

The school was under careful discipline, and the recommendations of the committee were reasonably well observed.

West Virginia as I Found It.

I, LIKE many others, after our late Annual Meeting, visited other parts of the East. To say anything pertaining to the Conference at Hagerstown, at this late date, would be superfluous, as the readers of the GOSPEL MESSENGER have been favored with much that is of interest, pertaining to the meeting.

My son, O. D. Lyon, and I, after hearing Bro. B. C. Moomaw preach in the Tabernacle June 4, hastened to the train, and reached Keyser, W. Va., at 8: 30 P. M. We were tired and sleepy, and accepted the first offer to be shown to a hotel.

Next morning, we took the hack for Maysville. The first familiar face I saw, was my relative, Elizabeth Davis, bereft of the dearest of husbands, since I last saw her. She is strong in the faith, however, and is proving the precious promise of him who said, "I will be a husband to the widow."

Upon arriving at Laurel Dale, I met cousin E. Hilkey, also a widow, who only lately lost her husband, with whom I had many happy hours, in days of yore.

Our next point was Black Rock, where we greeted sister Nancy Reed and her kind family (a sister in the flesh). Here again Death had lately done some of his most distressing work, taking the head of the family. While on a journey homeward with a team, he was stricken down without a moment's warning. His last resting place is near that of my mother's, on the old farm, around which cluster so many recollections. I visited the spot, a half hour after arriving on the old homestead. O, that is a precious spot, where we deposited all that was mortal of my own dear mother, in 1863, at a time when our country was bleeding at every pore!

We stopped with sister Ann Clark (another sister in the flesh), who lives with her son, Dennis Clark,—a minister of the Gospel. Here we enjoyed ourselves very much. This is in the vicinity of Maysville, where we also visited sister Susan Smith and her kind family. When I visited them fifteen years ago, they were an unbroken family, but, alas, here also Death has stricken down a husband, a father and protector. We were shown the place that marks the last resting place of our brother, upon the knoll above the house. Upon returning to the house, we were shown five large family Bibles which the departed one had purchased for his five sons previous to his decease. Surely those Bibles will be appreciated! One of the sons was away at school, but had written home to his mother that if she needed him at home, he would leave school and come home. Surely, such a boy will be blessed!

Accepting the offer of Bro. John Armstead, we were taken in his buggy across the Alleghany Mountains to Bro. Raphael Baker and family. From there we went to sister Sarah Rinker's, a widow of seventy-four years. We found her well for one of her age, and possessed of a sound mind.

From here we went to Cousin Zack, and Keziah Hendrixson's, where we enjoyed a good visit. We also visited friends in Gorman and Bayard; then went to the Abernathy neighborhood, where we had but a few hours to spend, but met with Bro. James Abernathy, N. Rinker and wife, J. Anderson and wife, I. Abernathy and wife. Here we spent a short time very pleasantly, after which we enjoyed a season of devotion together, feeling assured that it would be the last exercise of the kind we would enjoy in this world.

We next visited sister Martha Clark (also a widow). We found her as well as could be expected, having just lately been bereft of her companion. We were glad to find her so much resigned to the will of God, who is too good to err, and whose dispensations are always right.

Sister Lydia Ebert, my own cousin, is also a widow and living with her son, Otis, a minister of the Gospel. I visited many others that space will not permit me to name.

If there is a people in our country that excels in hospitality and kindness, it surely is found in West Virginia.

June 29 I, with sister Jessie Reed, and Leoti Lemon, boarded the train at Keyser for Chicago, where I arrived June 30, at 12 P. M. I reached Hudson next day at 3 P. M., and found all well, for which we thank God.

My Trip East.

MAY 14 I boarded the train at Conway Springs for Meriden, Jefferson Co., Kans. I arrived at Meriden next day, at 4: 50 P. M. I preached three times in the M. E. church in Meriden.

May 18 I went to Ozawkie; I held four meetings in Ozawkie in the Brethren's meeting-house.

May 20 I went to McLouth. Here I visited old neighbors and friends, and, on the 21st, went to Chicago en route to Annual Meeting.

May 22 I stopped off at Tiffin, Ohio, where I held several meetings with good interest.

May 27 I boarded the train for Hagerstown, Md., where I arrived at 2: 30 P. M., but as satisfactory accounts have been already given of the grounds and general character of the Meeting, I will not occupy space for that.

Returning, I left Hagerstown on the morning of June 5 for Myersdale, where I stopped off to attend a love-feast. Notwithstanding the rainy weather we had a very good meeting. About three hundred members communed.

June 6 I attended a funeral of S. C. Myers' two children who had been consumed by the flames during the burning of a dwelling on Thursday night. It was a sad sight. I was also present at the funeral of sister Miller, of which a notice will appear later on.

June 10 I boarded the train for Washington, Washington Co., Pa., where I arrived at 8: 30 A. M. The next day I reached the "Old Brick" meeting-house in the Ten Mile congregation, Washington Co., Pa. This meeting-house was erected in 1832. Here I was born into the church, here I was called to the ministry in October, 1849, and ordained to the eldership in October, 1854.

Many sacred memories cluster around this hallowed place. Previous to my arrival, the brethren had been preaching for some days and evenings. Arrangements were made for a love-feast on Saturday, June 13, at 2 P. M. A goodly number of members gathered at the house of God, to enjoy the occasion. Ministers present were N. Christner (a resident minister), J. H. Myers, Markleysburgh, Pa.; S. Johnson, Garrison, Iowa; A. Debolt, Pa., and the writer. This congregation suffered much from the effects of our late church trouble. Thirty-five members communed. The order, on the part of the spectators, was very good. I never attended a more quiet meeting at this place.

After the meeting, which closed on Sunday evening, I visited old friends and relatives in this and Fayette Counties, until the morning of June 19, when I was taken to Washington, by Bro. Reuben Bales. There I boarded the train for Cameron, W. Va. My letter, announcing date of my arrival, not having been received, I walked four miles to my youngest brother, Benjamin Wise. After visiting a few relatives here, I boarded the train for Tiffin, Ohio. Here I stopped off over Sunday, and reached my home, in Conway Springs, Kans., on Wednesday morning, June 24, after an absence of nearly six weeks. I found all in reasonable health. My wife is still suffering, and desires the prayers of all saints. Thanks to God for his goodness, and to the many dear ones who contributed to my wants. JOHN WISE.

Conway Springs, Kans.

From Sawyer, Pratt Co., Kansas.

WE, in this part of God's heritage, have great reason to rejoice. This Lord's Day morning, while we were on our way to meeting, and while our eyes beheld the fields of grain yet to harvest, we were made to think of the language of our Savior to his disciples at the well of Samaria, while talking with the Samaritan woman, John 4: 35, "Lift up your eyes, and look on the fields; for they are white already to harvest." This is figurative language, having reference to the harvest of the soul. No wonder the Savior said the harvest is great and the laborers are few.

This is our experience here. The field is large and calls more than we can fill. On the fifth Sunday of May we had the pleasure of leading three dear souls into the cleansing fountain. Prospects are good for more to follow in the near future.

While the Lord is blessing us spiritually, we also feel that he is greatly blessing us temporally, in sending us plenty of rain. We have never had better crops at this season of the year since we are in the West. It makes us feel that we are in a goodly land. Any one desiring a change of location to work for the Lord, should come and help us in the great work of harvesting souls. The time has come when every true watchman should cry aloud and spare not, for there is a famine in the land,—not for bread and water, but for the pure, unadulterated Word of God.

May 9, we had the happy privilege of meeting with the brethren and sisters at Conway Springs, Sumner Co., to enjoy their feast. It did us much good to meet with them and especially our dear old brother John Wise. God be thanked and praised that we still have many good old fathers who are working hard for the prosperity and upbuilding of the church. Our prayer to God is to spare them, that a greater and a nobler work may be done, so that, finally, there may be a great rejoicing in that grand reunion in the Kingdom of our God. May the Lord keep and sustain the lambs of the flock, and keep them from the evils of this world, unto his heavenly Kingdom!

N. F. BRUBAKER.

From Cartersville, Va.

I AM happy to state through the beloved MESSENGER that the good work is moving on nicely. We have good meetings and interesting Sunday-schools and singing-schools. What a charm there is in music! It carries our minds far into the future, when we shall meet in that grand city, and join the heavenly choir! I almost think myself in sight of the city as I sing the beautiful songs of Zion.

Bro. Bowser has two other places where he preaches. Those three, with another that he will have after while, keep him busy. Our church meeting was last Saturday evening. Everything passed off nicely. Bro. Bowser gave us some good exhortations on Gal. 5. We will do well to remember its teachings. We may know all the Blessed Book says, but knowing and doing are two different things. To know our duty and not do it, will profit us nothing. God does not expect us to do any more than we understand or know, but there is no excuse for us, as he has given us his Word, which is plain enough even for a child. I received of Bro. J. N. H. Beahm 96 cents toward our Hymn Books, which amount had been handed him by others for that purpose. May God continue to bless the good work, is my prayer!

FLORIDA J. E. ETTER.

July 6, 1891.

From the Powell's Valley Church, Oregon.

OUR quarterly council-meeting occurred June 13, at the residence of the writer. All business was disposed of in a Christian spirit. We were glad to see this meeting so well represented. Four new members have moved into this congregation during the last two weeks. At this council we had brethren with us from Ohio and Iowa, whom we were glad to meet, and we hope that some of them may settle among us.

As we have been deprived of a house of worship since last March, necessitating us to use our dwelling-houses, we decided, at this council, to build a house of worship. To this call the brethren donated liberally, though we are in very limited circumstances. We trust the Good Lord will be with us in this important work. Our dear brethren, W. Shellaberger and Inman, from Ohio, saw our need of a house, and lent us a willing hand, which was kindly accepted. Sister Mattie Wakefield was chosen as solicitor for the General Church Erection and Missionary Committee, sister S. E. Day was appointed as solicitor for the State Mission. The writer was chosen as correspondent from the Powell's Valley church.

Bro. S. S. Barklow, from Coos County, Oregon, was with us at this meeting and did some preaching for us on Sunday. The Brethren and friends were glad to hear Bro. Barklow's voice again. All say, Come again. J. A. ROYER.

Messages Dropped by the Way.

THAT our western correspondents have, for some time, been rather silent should by no means, be taken to mean that the Western churches are drooping. Having traveled considerably among the churches both East and West and having taken observations much more extensive than my travels, I can safely say that the work of the churches is, by no means, unimportant, nor is church-work and general spiritual energy running comparatively low. A few observations taken seem to call for some suggestions like the following:

1. Should not elders take some care to educate their flocks as to what would be proper measures necessary to be taken, in order to hold special, private family Communion services, in order that, when brethren are called from a distance to officiate in such services, things, places, and persons, might be found in readiness and in order?

2. Should not churches, which perform their general visit, and appoint their love-feasts three or four months in advance, have matters in pretty fair shape for a love-feast?

3. Should not churches under charge of elders at a distance, and which can ill afford the expense of frequent visits by their elder, therefore correspond frequently with him, and be sure that he be present, if possible, at least when they hold their council preparatory to Communion?

4. What comfort and spiritual satisfaction can it give a deposed minister to be re-instated into his office, simply to retire from life in office, unless he also occupy and "magnify his office," and, if possible, redeem some lost time? C. C. ROOT.

Ozawkie, Kans.

An Enjoyable Meeting.

AS previously reported, our Communion meeting was appointed for June 18. We were favored with delightful weather and quite a number of brethren and sisters from adjoining congregations were with us. This certainly has a tendency to bind us closer together in the bonds of Christian affection. Good order was maintained during the entire services, although the house was filled to its utmost capacity and quite a number were not able to gain admittance. Good attention was given to the Word preached. Ministers present were Eld. Edward Loomis, J. J. Hoover, Eli Stroup, Geo. Carper, Samuel Sprankle, and E. Holms. Bro. Loomis officiated.

On Sunday morning, promptly at nine o'clock, we met again for Sunday-school work. The house was again filled and we had the Brethren deliver addresses to the school, which they did to the full satisfaction of all. Good music was rendered by the school between each speech. Good thoughts were presented and I trust all will profit by them. After these exercises were over, Bro. Loomis delivered an able sermon from the words, "The night cometh wherein no man can work."

After services we were called to the water-side, where baptism was administered to one that became willing to follow Christ. Rejoice with us, the good work still is carried on and souls are being saved. Thus ended a pleasant feast and to him that is worthy be all praise!

Notes from Our Correspondents.

"As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

STILL AFFLICTED.—Our aged elder, Bro. Samuel Mohler, is yet lingering with his broken limb. At times we are hopeful of his recovery, and at other times our hopes grow faint. His life has been one so long and useful among us, that we feel loth to part with him.—I. J. Rosenberger, Covington, Ohio.

PROFITABLE MEETINGS.—We had a good meeting at Coon River meeting-house, Iowa (near Panora), July 4. Addresses were delivered on nations and church in forenoon, and we had children's meeting in the afternoon. We find these meetings helpful, to our young members, especially when the world has her places of amusements near by.—J. D. Haughtelin, Panora, Iowa.

THREE BAPTIZED.—July 3 Bro. Samuel Forney and I were called to the bedside of sister Bechtelheimer to anoint her. Since then she seems to be somewhat revived, but craves the prayers of the brethren and sisters of the church. The Lord bless her, is my prayer. July 5 I baptized three more, to walk with Christ. May they ever prove faithful till death, is my prayer. The general health is good.—J. J. Kindig.

TO THOSE DESIRING MINISTERIAL AID.—I purpose to do some traveling this fall in Illinois and Iowa, if the Lord will permit. If any congregations desire my labors, and are not situated too remote from the road over which I intend to travel, I will stop with them and hold some meetings. If they will correspond with me, I will make further arrangements. — Joseph Holder, Deweyville, Ohio, June 22.

NEW MEETING-HOUSE.—The Brethren of the Osceola church, Kans., have built a meeting-house 30x40 feet in size, at the south end of their congregation. They have it inclosed but not finished inside. We organized a Sunday-school with N. A. Weed as Superintendent, and Abel Stone, Assistant. — N. A. Weed, July 3.

PROSPERING. — According to previous arrangements we commenced to repair our church-house three weeks ago, and have done considerable work thereon. The paper hanger commences to-day. It will be several weeks yet before we will have it ready for services. While the Litchfield church has been a success so far, we much need the prayers of God's people. When you approach the Throne of Grace, remember us.—J. P. Studebaker.

FIVE BAPTIZED.—The members of the Sugar Creek church, Ohio, are still trying to move along in the work of the Lord. The spring visit found the members in love and in sympathy with the church. Our council-meeting was held May 23. Five were added to the church by baptism at our council. Our love-feast occurred June 27. It was a season of refreshing from the Lord. Bro. Noah Longenecker, from Stark County, Ohio, and Bro. D. A. Norcross, of California, were with us. Bro. Longenecker officiated. The Sunday-school met at the place of the feast on Sunday morning at 9 A. M. Addresses were given by the ministering brethren. Many good admonitions and much encouragement was given to the school. May the Lord bless all! — Simon Harshman, Baltic, Ohio.

PLEASANT QUARTERLY COUNCIL.—The members of the Paint Creek church, met June 27th, in quarterly council, which had been postponed for two weeks by reason of the absence of their elder, S. Click. Eld. Jacob Appleman, of Cherokee County, could not be with them at the regular time. Everything passed off pleasantly. It was decided unanimously to have a series of meetings, both at the church-house on Paint Creek and at Fort Scott, each to close with a love-feast. The former is to commence Sept. 12, just after the close of the regular quarterly council, with Communion services on the 19th, and meetings to close on the 20th or 21st. The series of meetings is to commence at Fort Scott on the 22nd, at 3 P. M., at the residence of A. B. Fisher, unless some other suitable place can be procured. Meetings at this point are to continue to the 26th, the time of our love-feast, and close the day after, unless at that time it is thought advisable to continue them longer. We trust members of adjoining churches will be with us at these meetings, and encourage the work of our Savior. We desire to awaken a deep interest in this County and City, if there is any chance to do so. We are without any ministerial help except Bro. Wm. Stockmyer, who is in his declining years, and living eighteen miles from both the Paint Creek church and Fort Scott. We greatly desire some minister to locate either in the city or near the church. The undersigned was appointed correspondent for the MESSENGER in this church, and all letters of enquiry will be gladly answered. — A. B. Fisher, Ft. Scott, Kansas, July 3.

FIVE BAPTIZED.—The members of the South Waterloo church have just enjoyed a pleasant love-feast. Bro. Royer was with us and preached us a number of good sermons, which, we are sure, made good impressions upon some. Five were made willing to forsake sin and engage in the work of the Lord's vineyard. Many others, we think, are near the fold. May they turn from their evil ways before it be eternally too late! We will not forget sister Ida Royer's visit among us. We think she exerted a good influence while here.—J. H. Fike, Waterloo, Iowa.

IN PROSPEROUS CONDITION.—The Brethren at Falls City, Nebr., recently held their quarterly church council. Our dear elder, Bro. P. E. Whitmer, was with us. We had a good meeting. All seemed to feel that it was good to engage in the work of the Lord. We decided to hold some meetings in September. Bro. Hutchison has promised to be with us. Our little band is in good working condition, and we are now enjoying a season of peace, such as we have not known for many years. We have an interesting Sabbath-school, with Bro. Jacob Ross as Superintendent. He is full of zeal in the work. May it prosper, is our constant prayer! We use the Brethren's literature. It is second to none. I have just examined the new Juvenile Quarterly, and find it adapted to our wants. Our regular appointments have thus far been punctually filled, by brethren Whitmer and Peter Eisenbise, of Morrill, Kans.—Mrs. C. P. Shaffer.

ONE BAPTIZED. — We have just been down to the Willamette Valley, attending a meeting, at a distance of one hundred and sixty miles, where we had an enjoyable gathering. Our Communion was held on Friday, June 19. It was soul-refreshing to all. Our ministers were Bro. Sidney Hodgden, of Moscow, Idaho, Bro. Samuel Barklow from Coos County, and Bro. Jos. Early. They preached the Word with the spirit and with power. One was baptized. May he prove faithful, and be a bright and a shining light to the world. We met with some of our members from Ohio, who had come out to take a look at Oregon. For their benefit, and that of others, I would say that land can be had from $10 to $15 per acre. Most all kinds of vegetables and small grain do well here. Our winters are short, and last only from forty to sixty days. The summers are very pleasant; our water is good. Our country is certainly a very healthy one. We want to build up a church here, and we need a minister, who is sound in the faith, to settle among us.—Franklin Davison, Erskineville, Sherman Co., Oregon, June 28.

IN PEACE AND UNION.—The Chippewa Creek church, Mich., met in council July 4. All business before the meeting was adjusted in a Christian spirit. We were made sad to see that two of our members would not go with us any longer, but preferred to follow the giddy rounds of the world. At present writing this church is in peace and union, and trying to press toward the mark of the high calling in Christ Jesus. May we ever be faithful soldiers! We are having an interesting Sunday-school here this summer. We have appointed Sept. 26 for our love-feast. Brethren coming by rail will be met at Rodney, Sept. 25 at 10:30 A. M. and 6 P. M.—Wm. F. Jehnzen, Rodney, Mich., July 6.

The Greatest Fight in the World. Rev. Charles H. Spurgeon's Conference Address. From "Fight the Good Fight of Faith."—1 Tim. 6: 12. 12 mo, Leatherette, 64 pp, 35 cents, post free. New York: Funk & Wagnalls.

A capital book, one of the most striking and telling utterances of England's greatest preacher. It comes into the Inspiration contest just in the nick of time. It is a conference address of which the divisions are "Our armory (the Scripture), our army (the church), and our strength (the Holy Spirit)." Nearly one-half the address is occupied with a vigorous, unfaltering, uncompromising defense of the Verbal Inspiration of the Bible.

On this point Mr. Spurgeon fitly says:

"After preaching the Gospel for more than forty years, and after printing the sermons I have preached for more than six-and-thirty years, reaching now to the number of 2,200 in weekly succession, I am fairly entitled to speak about the fulness and richness of the Bible as a preacher's book."

"Believe in the inspired volume up to the hilt." "If this book is not infallible, where shall infallibility be found? . . . 'The depth saith, It is not in me;' yet those who have no depth at all would have us imagine that it is in them."

"Now, Farmer Smith, when you have read your Bible, and have enjoyed its precious promises, you will have, to-morrow morning, to go down the street, to ask the scholarly man at the parsonage whether this portion of the Scripture belongs to the inspired part of the Word, or whether it is of dubious authority."

The address is one of remarkable power. It is full of those striking Spurgeonisms, which one never forgets.

Whatever views of the recent theories any one may hold, he cannot but find it stirring and inspiring to come in contact with the abounding faith of the great preacher in the Old Gospel—his love of it and his joy in it. The portions on the church, and the Spirit's presence and power are worthy of the man and of the theme.

Of revivals he says (p. 52): "Is it worth while to get up a revival? Are not all true revivals to be got down? We may persuade ourselves that drums and trumpets and shouting will do a great deal. But, my brethren, 'the Lord is not in the wind.' Results worth having come from that silent, but omnipotent worker whose name is the Spirit of God."

This thoroughly helpful book for every preacher and for every Christian, may be ordered from the MESSENGER office.

MATRIMONIAL.

"What therefore God hath joined together, let not man put asunder."

IZER—GORDON.—By the undersigned at his residence, May 28, 1891, Mr. Elmer Izer to Miss Agnes Gordon, both of Franklin County, Pa.

WM. A. ANTHONY.

FALLEN ASLEEP

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

SHORB.—At New Windsor, Md., June 8, 1891, Elizabeth Shorb, wife of Bro. Joseph Shorb, aged 61 years.

She was a consistent member of the Brethren church for a number of years.

EPH. STOUFFER.

GREENWAY.—At Clover, Polk Co., N. C., June 26, friend Nannie, daughter of Bro. John and sister Greenway, aged about 23 years.

Friend Nannie was in the bloom of youth, and of a kind and gentle disposition. After a short discourse from John 14, by Eld. Geo. Branscom, the remains were laid to rest in the churchyard of the Brethren of the Mill Creek congregation at Clover, Polk Co., N. C. J. M. PUTNAM.

COHENOUR.—In the Rock Creek church, Whiteside Co., Ill., June 11, 1891, of spinal meningitis, Minnie, daughter of David and sister Kate Cohenour, aged 10 years, 4 months and 2 days. Funeral services by the Brethren from John 11: 28.

JOHN A. MYERS.

ROTHROCK.—In Bethel church, Thayer Co., Nebr., July 1, 1891, of whooping cough and measles, Ellie Catharine Rothrock, aged 3 years, 8 months and 3 days.

Funeral services were improved by the Brethren. D. H. FORNEY.

MOYER.—At Matthias, W. Va, June 28, 1891, sister Delilah Moyer (nee May), aged about 40 years.

Her husband preceded her to the spirit world several years before, leaving her alone to provide for her family of five small children. By strict economy she provided for them a comfortable living. After a long period of intense suffering, from consumption, she passed away in the triumph of a living faith Several weeks previous she called for the elders and was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord, according to James 5: 14, which, seemingly, gave her much relief.

In her death the church has lost a devoted member, the vicinity a worthy citizen, and the children an affectionate mother

During her suffering she seemed fully resigned to God's will, and patiently awaited her summons from on high.

PERRY B. FITZWATER.

LEAHUGH.—At her home, north of Garrison, Iowa, June 20, 1891, Mary Joann Leahugh, wife of Wm. Leahugh and daughter of Joseph and Elizabeth Flickinger, aged 36 years, 9 months and 29 days.

Sister Mary was a member of the Brethren church for several years, and died in the triumphs of faith. She leaves a husband, one son, a mother and one sister to mourn their loss. Funeral services by Eld. Stephen Johnson from 1 Pet. 1: 23-25, assisted by Eld. Peter Forney. LIZZIE JOHNSON.

Bible Lessons
FOR YOUNG CHILDREN.

Schools who are not using the International System of Lessons,—such as are found in our Quarterly,—often lack a good help in the instruction of the smaller classes. To supply such a need we have prepared the "Bible Lessons." We have put them within the reach of all,—only five cents per copy, or fifty cents a dozen. Address this office.

An Expert Opinion.

THE "Medical and Surgical Journal" for March 1891, says editorially:

"This pretty little city of Idaho Springs, Colorado, is situated in a beautiful park about 37 miles from Denver, and is about 7,500 feet above sea level. It is thrifty, prosperous, and has become noted for its hot and cold mineral springs, which contain medicinal properties of extraordinary value. Idaho Springs as a health resort cannot be excelled this side of the world-renowned Carlsbad Springs of Germany, whose waters and the waters found at Idaho Springs bear almost an identical chemical analysis.

"In the early stages of consumption these waters, combined with the invigorating air of this beautiful climate, are almost a specific. We take pleasure in recommending these waters to all suffering from coughs and catarrhal affections. It is the best place to go to for the cure of phthisis. Those of our colleagues who have been sending their patients to this grand health resort all join in praising the satisfactory results received from the invigorating waters and climate. We would therefore urge physicians to advise their patients, threatened with consumption, not to procrastinate, but to try, before it is too late, the salutary effects of the waters of Idaho Springs. The Union Pacific are making special efforts to carry the public to and from this famous resort, with all the modern comfort and ease which the tourist seeking health and pleasure can desire." 22-34.

Grand Excursion to Yellowstone National Park and Other Western Resorts.

THE Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," proposes to run, in July, 1891, a grand excursion from Omaha to Yellowstone National Park, Great Shoshone Falls, Idaho, Ogden, Salt Lake City, Garfield Beach, Denver, Clear Creek Canon, the famous Loop, and other points of interest. The Union Pacific will furnish six horse Concord Coaches, which will carry the party from Beaver Canon, Idaho, to and through Yellowstone National Park. These Coaches will also be taken to Shoshone Station, and used for the ride to Great Shoshone Falls.

From Beaver Canon to Yellowstone National Park, the trip will occupy three days going, three days returning, and eight days will be spent in the park. Excellent tents and good equipment for camping out will be furnished by the Union Pacific, en route from Beaver Canon to the Park, and while in the Park the tourists will be quartered at the various hotels.

The very low rate of $250.00 per passenger has been made from Omaha. This rate includes Railroad, Pullman, and Stage Fare, Meals and Hotel bills from the time of leaving Omaha until the return of the excursion, in all 30 days. No half fare rates.

Only thirty-five passengers can be accommodated, and as accommodations are limited EARLY APPLICATION for same should be made.

In ordering tickets, send money for same by express, to Harry P. Deuel, City Ticket Agent, U. P. System, 1302 Farnam St., Omaha, Nebraska.

No children will be allowed on this trip. For further information relative to this excursion and itinerary, apply to

THE closing of the College has made quite a change in our church attendance, and yet we are glad to feel that all are enjoying the vacation.

BRETHREN W. S. Howe and D. B. Showalter have returned from Louisiana, where they have been engaged in teaching during the last year.

SOME of our great men, so-called, have got to swinging around, religiously, until they, themselves, are puzzled to know when to stop and where to stand. Men may afford to be singular and to speculate about things of time, but about that on which our eternal all depends, it is best to stand on the tried foundation.

WE are sorry to learn that we have those among us who are so exceedingly narrow and contracted in their views, that, had they control, they would practically close the door of the church to every one who could not come within the limits of their views of religion, which is formal, mechanical and spiritless. If such brethren would study carefully the life of Christ, and the epistolary writings, they would learn that the mission of the embassadors of Jesus is to save souls, rather than to have a special form of government. The latter is essential only so far as it can be made to accomplish the great object intended. We must not forget that Christ came into the world to save sinners, and to do this he mingled with such, and labored where most such were found. Are we following the same rule?

BRO. A. KONIGMACHER and wife, of Ephratah, Pa., have been in town for the last few weeks. They are stopping with their son-in-law, M. G. Brumbaugh, near the Normal College buildings.

SOME people seem to think that the only way to rest and recuperate is to go abroad,—to the seaside,—and some to large cities, the most undesirable of all places for rest during the heat of summer. This is a mistake. There is no place like the quiet home, if made home-like by happy spirits and good papers and books. To those who cannot leave work alone, while at home, there may seem to be an excuse for going away. But why should this be so? If we can get time enough to go away from home, why not be able to spend the same amount of time at home in rest? It will be much less expensive to do so, and at the same time be more restful.

OUR LIFE.

THE most glorious privilege that any of us can have is to be allowed to live, and yet it is often said that it is a fearful thing to live, and in a sense it is, because, for us to abuse the privilege, means loss in its most terrible sense. But, then, what is it to live and when do we live most?

It is said to be a wonderful thing to live, and it surely is when we consider the results. The summation of our own happiness and that of others as well, depends on how we live. This life, for actual living, is necessarily short, but short as it is, we may so live it that the results will never cease. Indeed, we cannot cease living whether we would will it or not. This time only germinates the seed. The stalk and the fruit will grow and develop only after the seed has rotted away. The fruit, however, will be, in kind, after the germinating.

To live, then, is to start and direct the stream. If we do this well, the result cannot be otherwise than glorious.

As to when we live is one of the unsolvable questions, at least it will be so until after the judgment, when the fruit of our living will be all gathered, and we get our credit,—whether good or bad.

It has been aptly said that some men only commence living at the time of their death. Comparatively speaking, this may be true, as time, by no means, ends our living. Of Moses it is said: "He being dead, yet speaketh." And is it not true? Moses speaks more to-day than he did while living, because his life, as he lived it, speaks to more people each day than it did when walking and living before Israel, in going before them out of Egypt.

The Christ lived only a few years in his physical body, though, during his Galilean and Judean ministry, he discoursed to the thousands that daily followed after and lingered to the eventide, that they might catch the gracious words as they fell from his lips; those years formed only a small part of his blessed ministry. For the last eighteen hundred years this life has been living and enlarging in the world, and will continue to do so until the fulness of the time comes for the last sheaf to be gathered into the Lord's garner.

We once heard a minister say that, had the Apostle Paul been judged at the time of his physical death, his loss would have been unspeakably great. His thought was, that, in receiving his reward at that time, he would have lost all the fruit that his life has borne since then, and is there not a grand truth in the thought?

Paul is still preaching and will continue to do so until the great scheme of redemption has completed its work. While this is a blessed thought to the good, what must it be to the wicked?

Tom Paine, though his body has long since mouldered to dust, still lives in the fearful life he lived and the dark record he left behind. The seed germinated by him has budded forth into a large harvest, and many of the souls that have passed away in darkness and the gall of bitterness are sheaves of his growing! O, what shall the harvest be?

These thoughts were wonderfully impressed upon our mind a few days ago, while glancing over the new book, published by the Brethren's Publishing Co., entitled, "The Life and Sermons of Eld. James Quinter."

It was a source of comfort to us to know that this good man still lived in the hearts and lives of those who were fortunate enough to be in immediate and personal contact with him, while living in the flesh. But a peculiar feeling of joy came to us when we opened and paged the book that will perpetuate his life and ministry to thousands and, perhaps, millions unborn. Yes, his was a life that should be perpetuated, and his sermons, as they fell from lips touched with a coal from God's altar, can well continue to go forth on their heavenly ministry, giving life and light to souls darkened by sin, yet seeking the light that came into the world to dispel darkness.

Yes, in this book, the life of this good man will continue to live, and our prayer is that it may find a place in every home in the Brotherhood. It will prove to be to such homes what the ark was to the house of Obed Edom,—a very blessing indeed.

In the book will be found, in addition to a very interesting sketch of his life, forty of his sermons which cannot help but prove a blessing to the church and to the world, and we bespeak for the book a large sale. As yet, our church literature is confined to only a small number of works, and they are largely doctrinal. While all those are very good in their place, yet in this book there is reading and sermons, adapted and suited to all persons and homes. The saint and the sinner alike, will find in it gems that will be rich, precious and comforting. May we not truly say of Eld. Quinter: "Though he is dead, yet he speaketh?"

ESSAYS.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God; a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth."

A MOTHER'S DREAM.

My life was blest
A husband's love was given unto me,
Whose pure devotion caused my soul to swell
With joys sublime and sacred. Yet, in my Heart there was a yearning void: No childish
Presence lighted up my hearth,—no childish
Prattle filled my home with glee. Through tears I Begged that heaven might send a child, on whom
I could bestow the boundless treasures of My fond, maternal love. I prayed and Yearning, prayed again, until at last the Long-desired boon was given. A little Heart pulsated with my own,—a little Life was woven into mine! Oh, rapt'rous
Joy! And yet that joy was one of which I
Soon was robbed; for while my heart still reveled
In its new-born love, my babe was taken. Ah!
The sweetest blessing of my life was gone.

And how I wept! my bosom heaved with groans.
And e'en the lofty chambers of my soul
Were filled with bitter tears. Rebelliously
I pressed my throbbing brow, and wondered why
The Lord should sunder from my heart a joy
So pure and sweet. Where, now, in all the earth
Could happiness be found? Whose hand should lead
Me over life's hard, stony bath? Whose voice
Should soothe my sorrows? And whose kiss dispel
My tears? Where was the happy future I Had planned? No need for little garments, nor Enchanting lullabies.—How useless now and Henceforth! O, God! my heart was breaking, and My grief, so fierce and deep, was crushing me.

Wearied and worn, I lay me down to rest,
And soon my sobs were hushed beneath the calm
And peaceful seal of sleep. When suddenly
Before my mental gaze, a scene majestic
And ineffable arose. Methinks that Earth, with all her skill combined, could not Present a picture half so wonderful
And fair: A little child, arrayed in garb
Of purest white, with golden tresses, blue
Angelic eyes, and sweetest smile that child,
Or angel ever wore, transfixed my heart
And caused my soul to swell with rapture, fear
And awe. The little face was turned to heaven,
And round her head a halo like unto
A wreath of glory gleamed with dazzling brightness.
In silent reverence I bowed my head
And questioned deeply of my mind from whence
The cherub came. My thoughts grew strangely sacred.
A holy feeling thrilled my soul, and bore
Me far beyond the dark confines of earth.
An unseen Presence whispered: "It is thine.
Behold thy lovely child!" I raised my eyes,
And lo! the cherub stood with outstretched arms,
As if she fain would leap to my embrace.

Then all the mother love within my heart
Blazed forth, and with a cry of glad and deep
Thanksgiving, I exclaimed: "My babe! my babe!
My long-lost treasure found again! my own
Prized jewel, mine once more!" I reached my arms,
But ah! my heart sank in appall. Ere I
Could clasp her to my breast, she spread her wings,
And smiling tenderly, she soared away.

I rose to follow, but alas! I could Not break the chains which held my frame to earth.
I could but look up through my tears and see
Her join a host of angel forms as fair
And beautiful as she. I could but see
The multitude pass through the pearly gate
Of Paradise, and then the veil which hides
That world from ours was gently drawn, and I
Awoke to roam earth childless yet a few more days.

But Oh! my heart is glad, and I rejoice
To know that in the home above abides
An angel,—and yet my child!—to welcome me
To that divine abode, when once my work
Is finished. I sing forth praise from morning
Until night, from evening until morn
Again, that she was taken from this world
Of guile before her eyes had opened unto Sin,—before her little feet had ever
Strayed into the paths of wickedness. How Kind and merciful the Hand that led her
To a better life!

And now methinks I see her walk the streets
Of gold, then wander to the Tree of Life,
And lave her little feet within the crystal
Fountain. Methinks I see her pluck immortal
Flowers from heavenly vines, and weave a Wreath with which to crown her golden head, and Sweeter still, I seem to see her bow before
The "great, white throne," and hear her baby voice, Swell forth in praise to her Creator. Thrice
Happy child! I would not dare to wish thee back!

I cannot know the name my darling bears
In bliss, nor can I tell how many are
Her years; for in that blessed home is kept
No calendar of time. I only know
That she is freed from pain and death for Evermore. And though in all the earth no
Child may call me by that thrilling Mother name,
Oh, 'tis surpassing sweet to be the mother
Of an angel! Well might I dry my tears
And wait the happy time when I shall meet
My babe in robes of immortality!

"THEREFORE:"—THE GOLDEN PIVOT IN THE HEART OF JESUS, AND ALL HIS ELECT.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

TO D. C. MOOMAW, OF VIRGINIA,

Well Beloved Brother:—

"THEREFORE did my heart rejoice, and my tongue was glad." Acts 2: 26. So said David, the man after God's own heart, on his own account, and more for Him of whom he was a dim representative. My heart rejoiced to see your face at the late Annual Meeting, and that of your brother, B. C., and many other dear fathers in Israel, of whom my soul yearned to get a glimpse before I go hence. Most of all, am I glad that it is given us to see "with open face" what was denied to prophets and holy men of old, "the glory of God IN THE FACE OF JESUS CHRIST." 2 Cor. 3: 18; Matt. 13: 17; 2 Cor. 4: 6. "Blessed are the pure in heart for they shall SEE GOD." Matt. 5: 8. "Put no difference between us and them, PURIFYING their HEARTS by FAITH." Acts 15: 9. "I foresaw the Lord always before my face, He is on my right hand, that I should not be moved: therefore." Here is a word out of the vocabulary of Deity for the every-day study and gladness, and glory of "the least of all saints."

"Without faith it is impossible to please God," and "whatsoever is not of faith is sin," and "by faith we are kept by the power of God," and by faith we live, stand, walk, work, triumph. Heb. 12: 6; Rom. 14: 23; 1 Peter 1: 5; Gal. 3: 11; 2 Cor. 1: 24; 2 Cor. 5: 7; James 2: 18; 1 John 5: 4. Faith often takes us into strange places, and puts us into unique circumstances, and introduces us into the most marvelous experiences.

It goes, not knowing whither, only so that God beckons. Heb. 11: 8. It loses all that earth holds dear, and yet is richer than all the Rothschilds, Astors, Stewarts, and Vanderbilts. Heb. 10: 34; Philpp. 3: 8. To inherit all things, is to lose all things. The "wherefore" of Philpp. 2: 9, and the "therefore" of Acts 2: 26, coalesce, and faith rests and knows and rejoices where reason is forever dumb. Faith is as satisfied with Jesus in His person and work as God is, and hence expunges from its dictionary condemnation, doubt, fear, and sin. Rom. 8: 1; Rom. 14: 23; Matt. 14: 31; Rom. 8: 15; Rom. 6: 2; 1 John 3: 9. A perfect faith in a perfect Christ destroys both the guilt and the dominion of sin. Christ knows what it means to give Himself for us. And to give ourselves for Him with an equal entireness means salvation. The least conscious and persistent reservation puts the atonement quite beyond our reach.

Some people fancy that by faith they can get and do what they please. But the servant is not above his Lord, and of Him it is said that "He pleased not Himself," and "THE PLEASURE OF THE LORD shall prosper in his hands." Rom. 15: 3; Isa. 53: 10. There is indeed such a thing as asking what we will, and it shall be done unto us;" but the supreme point is to reach that position in relation to God where our whole being concentrates in the utter self-annihilation of the Gethsemane agony, "AS THOU WILT." When our purpose, and impulse, and aspiration, and undiluted joy are "the pleasure of the Lord," our faith has a divine warrant to be as boundless as the resources of Omnipotence.

The sublime claim of Jesus in Matt. 28: 18, is the ground of our confidence to attempt the grand ecumenical commission of verse 19, with unfaltering assurance of success. At our recent Conference, when surveying the vast congregation of saints, and witnessing their ways of sanctified love, I said to myself, What a glorious Brotherhood. And yet when we read in the holy oracles the amazing open-heartedness of God toward us, and the illimitable riches of his grace in Christ for our use, we must confess with shame, that the proof of our faith and love is pitifully meagre. When Bro. Royer read the missionary report, and announced the individual contribution as only a little more than a dime, I could not help placing it alongside of 2 Cor. 8: 9, and praying, God forgive us our criminal worldliness and self-pleasing.

Not only our individual history, but the history of the church through all the centuries, demonstrates the extreme difficulty of "apprehending that for which also we are apprehended of Christ Jesus." Philpp. 3: 12. It is the very last thing that our self-centered nature accepts, to begin life where Christ ends His—in utter self-abnegation and absolute dependence on God for the genesis, development, perfection, and eternal issues of our being. Faith deals exclusively with one fact, "God manifest in the flesh" for all the liabilities that sin incurs, and all the possibilities of human nature freed from sin.

This covers the entire ground of "the eternal purpose which God purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord." Eph. 3: 11. And this comprehends all that, in any way, or at any point touches our high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Not one of us is close enough in sympathy with Jesus to accept the height and depth, length and breadth, of John 14: 13, 14, and 15: 7, and Matt. 21: 21, 22, and Mark 11: 23, 24.

"ALWAYS!" "THEREFORE." Never losing sight of God, never losing the support and joy of His presence. This is "to walk even as He also walked." 1 John 2: 6. I saw some very beautiful saints at the Conference, and also some, it would seem, who "did not know what manner of spirit they are of," who do well to ponder intently, and with prayerful introspection, 2 John 8. We all need to "pray without ceasing" that God would write in our heart of hearts 1 Cor. 13: 4–7. Love is supreme among the graces, but faith stands first on the list, and without the first, the last can never be ours.

Faith is all-appropriating, and love is all-pervasive, all-beautifying, and all-satisfying, and all-sacrificing. Without love there is no heaven, for "God is love;" and without faith "God is a consuming fire," and heaven inaccessible. Life and manifestation are correlatives. Faith is not dead because it has no works, but it has no works because it is dead. A tree is barren because lifeless, not vice versa. Faith alone justifies, but not the faith that is alone. It is the lightning that kills, the thunder is the natural accompaniment.

When God becomes incarnate we are sure to have a visible, tangible Christ, but it is not the visible that constitutes the Christ. This is the dual principle of Christianity in its essence and all its expressions. In proportion as we know Christ as the embodied Godhead in the way of actual identification, we will be living witnesses to the blessedness of the sublime, clearly supernatural claim of Paul recorded in behalf of all real believers. Gal. 2: 20. Faith is a perpetual miracle. Nothing but Omnipotence can originate life, and nothing but Omnipotence can sustain it. The law that keeps the pendulum swinging in the clock, needs the constant volition of Deity. Nothing is self-supporting.

"There is no power but of God"—not even civil government. Rom. 13: 1. Misdirected power causes all the trouble in the universe. Jesus Christ is the At-one-ment. In Him all things move with the lubrication of the divine fore-ordination and complacency. Nothing has God ever done, or will do save through that co-eternal Logos who has become bone of our bone, and flesh of our flesh. Oh what a Savior, what a Salvation, what a destiny! only fools despise it. No escape if we neglect it. God has but one Son, and Him He offered to the death of the cross for our sins. What more is possible to the Almighty?

I have no doubt we all believe that there is a fulness of grace in Christ that is sufficient for the chief of sinners. This fact is not questioned even by the devils. But it brings no salvation while held only intellectually as a historic verity. It must be accepted in a way that blots out our past sin-life as completely as though it had never been, and sets us in the integrity of the very righteousness of God, and keeps our hearts and minds through Jesus Christ by the very peace of God which passeth all understanding. Col. 2: 13, 14; Philpp. 3: 9, and 4: 7.

This absolute central, all-comprehending, eternal salvation is the gift of God offered to us in our Divine-human Elder Brother, Emmanuel, Jesus. It is all that God can give, for greater love it is impossible to possess or manifest, than the voluntary, joyful sacrifice of life to win enemies into friends. John 15: 13. How reasonable is 1 John 4: 19 and 4: 11; and John 13: 35. Faith shrinks not to accept the Divine testimony, even to the apparently incredible length of equality forever in all the infinite glory and beatitude, which Jehovah has given His Only Begotten Son. Heb. 1: 2; Rom. 8: 17. Oh the day of manifestion! Rom. 8: 19; 1 Pet. 1: 13, and 4: 13, and 5: 1. Oh the fulfillment of John 17: 24. "WHAT MUST IT BE TO BE THERE."

BIBLE THEOLOGY vs. POPULAR THEOLOGY.

BY S. CLICK.

Number Three.

THE popular churches have not only lost sight of the apostolic mode of baptism and the Savior's example in celebrating the Lord's Supper and the holy Communion, but, as might be expected, after one misstep the way was open for further digression. They have perverted the whole system and rendered it impotent to accomplish what God designed it to accomplish. He that offends in one point is guilty of all. James 2: 10.

Christ cannot fellowship sin. Every transgression of law is sin. Christ says, in Matt. 4: 34, that we shall not swear by anything in heaven or earth. Popular religionists practice and teach that it is not wrong to swear. Christ has said we should love our enemies. Matt. 5: 44.

Popular theologians teach that it is not wrong to march to the battle-field and slay our brother, if he interferes with our rights or liberties. Christ says, "If a man sue thee at the law and take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also." Popular Christianity says not so.

Paul says: "If thine enemy hunger, feed him; if he thirst, give him drink, for in so doing thou shalt heap coals of fire on his head." Christ prayed for his enemies, yea, he died for them. Had he not died for us while we were yet enemies to him, we never could have been saved, for without shedding of blood there is no remission of sins.

When Christ instituted the cup, he said to his disciples, "This is my blood which is shed for you for the remission of sins." Popular theologians teach people to be baptized because their sins are remitted, thus reversing God's order.

If the same parts of speech do not always convey the same meaning, then language is of but little use in determining facts, but we think Peter knew just what he was talking about when he told the Pentecostian believers to repent and be baptized in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins.

Christ says, "Ye are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." John 17: 14, 16. "Love not the world, neither the things that are in the world. If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him." 1 John 2: 15. "For all that is in the world, the lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life, is not of the Father, but is of the world. And the world passeth away, and the lust thereof: but he that doeth the will of God abideth for ever."

In the face of these plain Scriptures popular preachers encourage pride with all of its concomitant evils. God hateth even a proud look, and the prophet Malachi (4: 1, 2) says: "For, behold, the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble: and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch. But unto you that fear my name shall the Son of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall."

One of the great characteristics of the religion of Jesus Christ was, that to the poor the Gospel was preached, but in these days of millionaires and extortionate ministers poor people cannot go to church and feel at home there. Especially is this the case in the large cities. Things seem to be all the while growing worse. This thing of pride and caste is destroying more souls than all other evils put together, and, I am well convinced, will be the hastening of the close of the present dispensation. According to the progress that anti-Christian powers are making, the time is not far distant when this mighty spiritual Babylon will be brought down.

"And I heard another voice from heaven, saying, Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." Rev. 18: 4.

THE PARABLE OF THE PRODIGAL SON.—Luke 15.

BY DANIEL HAYS.

As a literary production, the parable stands unrivaled for purity, simplicity and pathos, uniting all the elements of beauty in language so touching, that we see the stamp of divinity in the narrative itself. No author has ever been able to produce anything approaching it in perfection of its arrangement and expression, let alone the exalted lesson it teaches. It has been read by missionaries to the wandering Arabs, and has called forth the highest appreciation from these wild sons of the desert.

The parable stands in immediate connection with the parable of "the lost sheep," and of "the piece of silver," which our Lord used to show that "there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth."

THE YOUNGER SON.—From a happy home of plenty we are led, step by step, to view the prodigal's career till he reaches the lowest depths of poverty and wretchedness. After he had wasted all his goods in riotous living, then came the famine. The greatest distress came in his greatest need. To add yet to his distress, the citizen of that country to whom he had joined himself, "sent him into his fields to feed swine." Feeding swine, yet no man gave unto him even of the husks that the swine did eat, and he perish with hunger!

"AND WHEN HE CAME TO HIMSELF."—The younger son, thus far in his reckless course, had not exercised his reason. He thought he knew more than his father, and he intended to improve upon his father's quaint ways. This is the case with most, if not all, fast young men. Now his reason returned,—or, more properly, he begins to think and to think rightly.

His soul is stirred within him when he compares his present condition with that of his father's servants. He resolves to arise and go to his father, and not only to go, but also to confess that he had sinned,—not wishing to be taken back as a son, but to be made as a hired servant. Thus is it with the sinner. When he comes to himself, when he thinks for himself,—reasons upon his past course and his future destiny, he will not remain satisfied with himself till he return to his duty and his God. A change in mind will produce a change in life. To think of father's house begets a desire to go. A resolve to go, induces a confession of sin, and a return to God, who, as a father, pitieth his children and restores the penitent wanderer.

"BUT WHEN HE WAS YET A GREAT WAY OFF, HIS FATHER SAW HIM."—God is not indifferent about the sinner's absence from home. He sees the sinner in all his wild career. He sees that the paths of virtue are forsaken, and moral principles are abused. And when, at last, he drinks the bitter dregs of sin, and reason returns, and he rises in the dawn of a better day, and retraces his steps with sorrow in his heart, and confession on his lips, God meets him on the way, and welcomes him home with compassion and forgiveness. No greater encouragement can be given to the wanderer in the paths of sin, to return to God, than is given in this parable. He returns with a desire to be made a servant, and is received back with joy as a son: "This my son was dead and is alive again; he was lost, and is found."

The parable gives us an extreme case that will cover every case. The younger son certainly knew what he was doing, and acted upon his own responsibility when he left his father's house. His life was one of his own choice. He did not only spend, but he wasted his substance in riotous living. He had wicked associates. He was as he thought, a free man, and could do as he pleased. He went down the ladder of sin to the lowest ditch. He did this because he chose to do it. He was having his way. But he could not do as he pleased all the way through. When he reached the lowest depths of sin, he felt that he was a slave, and, happily for him, he fully realized it. This was the turning point in his life. He thinks of home and freedom. He resolves to return. He arises, and goes to his father.

Now the sinner does not return to God simply by thinking of father's house. Neither does he get there by making good resolutions. He must arise with penitence, and go with confession, ready and willing to accept the position of a servant. No one is ready to return to God who is not willing to confess his sins. "With the mouth confession is made unto salvation." All that is expressed by faith, repentance, and entrance into the kingdom of God, is implied in the prodigal's return and restoration to favor and sonship.

There is a lesson, also, to be derived from the action of the "elder son." He was "in the field;" and when he drew nigh, and learned through the servants that his brother was come, and his father had killed the fatted calf, because he had received him safe and sound, "he was angry, and would not go in." When God, through Peter, opened the way of repentance unto life to the Gentiles, they, of the circumcision at Jerusalem, "contended with him (Peter) saying, Thou wentest in to men uncircumcised, and didst eat with them." (Acts 11: 3.) When the elder son refused to go in, his father came out and entreated him. And he answering said to his father, Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment; and yet thou never gavest me a kid, that I might make merry with my friends: but as soon as this thy son was come, which hath devoured thy living with harlots, thou hast killed for him the fatted calf."

The elder son claims a priority, based on a faithfulness of service over the younger, and would not join in the rejoicing, because he conceived that his father was partial to the younger son. His father, however, said to him, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine. It was meet that we should make merry, and be glad: for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found." His father's reply is conclusive. It teaches a special cause of rejoicing when one repents. It is "thy brother" who "was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found." This is a personal appeal to the elder son, and shows that they were of the same household. "My son," "thy brother."

Practically, the church may be instructed and benefited by the lesson. If "there is joy in the presence of the angels of God over one sinner that repenteth," why should not the members of the church join in the general joy? God makes special provision for a feast of divine things when sinners return. Why not all enjoy the feast together, and rejoice together? If we turn from the returning prodigal and intimate that he has been too bad to become good again, are we not setting up for ourselves the claim of the elder brother? Then, too, our fellow-christian may fall, and become a prodigal, and waste all his living and religion in sin,—he may rise from the lowest depths, and return with sorrow in his heart, repentance in his soul, reformation in his life, and ask forgiveness. Here the elder son, by comparison, may say, "Lo, these many years do I serve thee, neither transgressed I at any time thy commandment, — that is, I have remained in the church, and a faithful servant in the church.

In such a case, our kind Heavenly Father would come to us and say, "Son, thou art ever with me, and all that I have is thine. It is meet that we should make merry, and be glad: for this thy brother was dead, and is alive again; and was lost, and is found."

THE HARVEST.

BY SARAH M. SAUNDERS.

THE term harvest brings to our minds the thought or idea that there has been also a sowing, or planting of seeds. "To harvest," literally means, to gather up the ripe sheaves of golden grain. "The harvest," is used to designate the time or season for gathering the precious seeds together. In the Holy Scriptures we have this declaration: "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease." Gen. 8: 22.

In different climates the time for harvest differs, and in this, our native land, we realize just now, that the harvest is ripe,—ready to be gathered. On every hand we see the fields of "whitening" or ripening grain: we hear the clatter of the machinery; we see the busy men hurry to and fro. All this reminds us that now is the time to work in the harvest field. Suppose a man should sit idly down, and refuse to work simply because the sun is too warm for comfort,—most certainly his grain would be lost, and he would, sooner or later, realize the fact that idleness during the harvest time brings misfortune and loss.

To be successful as husbandmen, we cannot wait till cooler weather comes, nor take the fields to some shady retreat, but we must begin early and work until late, toiling on through the heat and burden of the day, and when the harvest is past we will enjoy the fruit of our labors. When the Savior was on earth among men, he very often had occasion to refer to "the harvest," in demonstrating some grand and glorious truth to his listeners.

"The harvest truly is plenteous, but the laborers are few; pray ye therefore the Lord of the harvest, that he will send forth laborers into the harvest." Matt. 9: 37, 38. Here the Son of God had reference to the great harvest of souls,—men to be safely gathered and garnered in the great storehouse of his Heavenly Father.

He likewise endeavored to rivet in their moral and spiritual understandings the great necessity of sowing good seed so as to insure a genuine harvest. On a certain occasion he went to the seaside as was his custom, "and great multitudes were gathered together unto him," so that he went into a ship and sat while he taught them the words of eternal truth, and the whole multitude stood on the shore, eagerly listening to his words, while he spake many things unto them in parables. Among other things he spake unto them the parable of the sower that sowed the good seed, and while he slept, the enemy came and sowed tares in his field, and his servants came and said unto him, "Sir, didst not thou sow good seed in thy field? from whence, then, hath it tares? He answered them, An enemy hath done this." He well knew that he had sowed good seed, but that an enemy had been on the alert, who, while he slept, had done this great injury.

"They that sleep, sleep in the night" and while the laborer was slumbering, and darkness prevailed over all nature, the enemy had taken advantage of him, preferring darkness rather than light because his deeds were evil." After he had sent the multitude away and gone into the house, his disciples asked him to declare unto them the meaning of the tares or cheat, in the field. He answered them and said, "He that soweth the good seed is the Son of Man; (meaning himself); the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom; but the tares are the children of the wicked one; the eneny that sowed them is the devil; the harvest is the end of the world; and the reapers are the angels." Matt. 13: 37, 38, 39.

What a comprehensive explanation to their inquiry! How definite the application of his parable to their understanding! Not very long before this interview, he had informed them that the harvest was truly great, and advised them to pray the Lord for more laborers,—not reapers, but tillers of the soil, men and women to cultivate the tender plants, and watch over their Lord's ripening fields until the time of the harvest shall come.

As our Lord said, "The harvest is plenteous," while he was here, we see the great necessity, in this age, for more workers who will work for the Master in the heat of trials and bitter persecutions, as well as in the calm and gentle eventide. It is a fact, undeniable, that many of us who falter and faint when the scorching rays of summer heat beat upon us, can labor uncomplainingly if we can have some easy part, or if we can enjoy the cool and shady nooks, without encountering any oppositions or crosses and trials to mar our enjoyment, or if no great amount of self-sacrifice is required to labor in the harvest of the Lord.

THE TWO BUILDERS.

BY CHAS. M. YEAROUT.

"Therefore whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man, which built his house upon a rock: and every one that heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them not, shall be likened unto a foolish man, which built his house upon the sand."—Matt 7: 24, 26.

IN building a substantial house, there are several things necessary: (1) the architectural design; (2) a solid foundation upon which to build; (3) the proper kind of material; (4) men who understand the art of building, and who are willing to minutely follow the design and specifications of the architect.

1. The architect is one that designs the building, giving dimensions, height, number of doors, windows, and where each must be placed. He specifies what kind of material shall be used, and minutely describes and portrays upon paper, every room, door, window, stairway and porch, telling where each shall be placed.

2. He is very careful about the foundation, in describing just how it shall be laid; the kind of stones to be used, etc., as everything depends upon having a solid foundation.

The builders are now employed to erect the house. All they have to do is to put up the building according to the specifications. The wise builder is very careful to follow closely the designs. He finds no fault with the work of the architect, but builds according to his instructions until the building is completed.

The building is then inspected by competent judges, from foundation to garret, and the specifications are used as the basis of judgment. When the building is found to be true to the architectural design, it is received, and the faithful builder is rewarded for his labor.

The foolish builder sets up his judgment against that of the architect, and finds fault with his design and specifications. "I cannot see the propriety of putting a door here." "This window is useless, so I will leave it out." "I do not see any need of this partition," so he leaves that out. "I don't think it necessary to be so particular any way." So he completes the building according to his own notion or liking, regardless of the design of the architect. The judges inspect the building, and it is rejected. The builder loses everything,—his time and labor is lost, and his reputation is gone. These two builders represent the entire human family who are building for eternity.

"Whosoever" is indefinite in its application,—applying to all mankind. There is a great building being constructed. God is the architect that designed it, and he gave minute and specific directions just how it should be built, and of what kind of material. He was very careful in specifying how everything should be done. The design and specifications are perfect in every particular. Christ is the foundation upon which this building is to be erected. "For other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ." 1 Cor. 3: 11. The whole world has the privilege, and all are invited to come and build upon this foundation. "Come, for all things are now ready." Luke 14: 17. "Come unto me, all ye that labor, and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke (service) upon you, and learn of me." Matt. 11: 28, 29. "And the Spirit and the bride say, Come. And let him that heareth, say, Come. And let him that is athirst, come. And whosoever will, let him take the water of life freely." Rev. 22: 17.

Laborers are commanded to go into his vineyard (the church) and work. Matt. 20: 2 7; 21: 28. The church of Jesus Christ is a structure, "built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner-stone, in whom all the building, fitly framed together, groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord, in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the spirit." Eph. 2: 20, 21, 22. It is composed of spiritual material. "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ." 1 Pet. 2: 5.

The design and specifications of this building are given in the New Testament, and are plain and easily understood. What is the difference between these two builders? The difference is great. The wise man hears, and does the sayings of Christ; the foolish man hears, but does not the sayings of Christ. "Whosoever cometh to me, and heareth my sayings, and doeth them, I will shew you to whom he is like: he is like a man which built a house, and digged deep, and laid the foundation upon a rock. . . . But he that heareth, and doeth not, is like a man that without a foundation built a house upon the earth." Luke 6: 47, 48, 49. The first was built according to the directions given in the Word of God; the other was not. The first stood the storm and great day of trial; the other fell, and was ruined. The first is of God, the other of man.

In accepting of Christ, and becoming a workman for God, man has no alternative in the matter. He must accept of Christ as he presents himself, and do just as he tells us,—finding no fault with him or the plan he has devised, but work in harmony with that plan, following closely the commandments and teachings of God,—doing whatsoever he says unto us. Then, by and by, when the building is completed, the work done, the Lord will say, "Well done, good and faithful servant, enter into the joys of thy Lord." Not so with the foolish builder. He finds fault with the plan that God devised for his salvation and eternal happiness. He looks over the design and specifications of the Heavenly Architect. When he comes to baptism,—the door of entrance or initiation into the family of God, he says, "I do not see any need of this water baptism. There is no virtue in it; it is simply a form. Of course it is all right for those that believe in it, but I can be saved without it."

Thus the door is left out. He goes on perusing the sacred page till he finds where the children of God are commanded to wash one another's feet, with a promise,—"If ye know these things, happy are ye if ye do them." He sees no spirituality or good in this, so he leaves it out, notwithstanding its observance is required at the hands of the faithful. See John 13. He continues to read and finds in Rom. 16: 16; 1 Cor. 16: 20; 1 Pet. 5: 15, where the children of God are commanded to salute one another with an holy kiss. He seems to see no love and union in it. Thus he leaves out a window with two large lights in it: "Let your light so shine before men, that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven," Matt. 5: 16. He sheds no light. None ever saw him wash the saints' feet, or salute the brethren with an holy kiss.

When it comes to non-conformity, he says: "I see no need of this partition between the church and the world." So he tears it away, or leaves it out, making no distinction between the body of Christ and the world. He identifies himself with worldly, oath-bound, secret societies, thus doing most of his good works behind bolted doors and heavily curtained windows, where none can see but the adherents of these oath-bound leagues. There is not one semblance of Christ about such work. He yokes himself equally together in brotherhood with haters of God,—infidels,—and all manner of evil persons. He gives dollars to the support of darkness, where he gives pennies to the cause of Christ. He engages in all the worldly pleasures, clothing himself in the latest worldly garb, often pointing the finger of scorn and laughing at the attentive wise builder, who follows closely the teachings of God. He makes noisy prayers, to be heard of men, and is often heard to speak of his goodness in public places. Let us view with awe the picture of the two builders of the antediluvian world. We see old Noah going to work on the ark, just as God instructed him. God gave him the plan and specifications, just how the ark should be built, and the kind of material he should use, and Noah built it accordingly.

"By the which he condemned the world, and became heir of the righteousness which is by faith." Heb. 11: 7. Methinks I can see the antediluvians pointing at faithful Noah, and ridiculing him. No doubt Noah warned them of the approaching danger, and told them of the fearful consequences of rejecting the counsels of God, but they give no heed to it. They go on in their worldly amusements until the flood of waters comes upon them. From the house-tops they flee to the high mountains, but finally they all perish in the seething waters of God's wrath,—they had no foundation to stand upon! Their building was swept away, for it was built of human material, and according to human knowledge! While the building, designed and built according to God's directions glided safely over the turbulent waters, not a soul in the building of God was lost; not a soul in the building of man was saved. "As it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in the days of the coming of the Son of man." "The world that then was, being overflowed with water, perished: but the heavens and the earth, which are now, by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men." 2 Peter 3: 6, 7.

As I look down the vista of time, and view in the Gospel mirror the great judgment day when these buildings shall be inspected by the Judge of the quick and dead, and the builders each receive their reward according to their work, I hear the foolish builders arguing with the Lord of glory, — trying to convince him they are his. They will say, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name? and in thy name have cast out devils? and in thy name done many wonderful works? We have eaten and drunk in thy presence, and thou hast taught in our streets." Matt. 7: 22; Luke 13: 26.

The Lord answers them: "I never knew you: depart from me, ye that work iniquity. Why call ye me, Lord, Lord, and do not the things which I say? I tell you, I know you not whence ye are; depart from me, all ye workers of iniquity." Matt. 7: 23; Luke 6: 46; 13: 27. You heard my sayings, but you did them not. You knew these things, but would not do them." John 13: 17. I became the author of salvation to all them that obey me. Heb. 5: 8, 9. "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine and DOETH THEM," is wise. Every one that heareth these sayings of mine and DOETH THEM NOT, is foolish, and, like the five foolish virgins, will be shut out when the wise enter in with their Lord and Master to enjoy eternal happiness. Matt. 25: 8–12.

Kind reader, how are you building? What kind of material are you using? Are you building up noble traits of character,—fashioned after the pattern of the Divine Master, or are you following the inclinations and desires of the flesh,—setting up self against Christ and his law?

PEACE ON EARTH AND GOOD WILL TO MEN.

BY B. F. MOOMAW.

Number Two.

"THE question, then, is," says our author, "Does the Word of God prohibit such defensive wars? Or, if I am permitted to state the proposition, Does the Gospel of Christ justify his disciples to participate in carnal warfare,—either offensive or defensive?"

We have now the question at issue fairly before us, and he has appealed to the Gospel, and to the Gospel we will go. He has admitted that aggressive war is out of the question. Then, of course, there is no controversy on that point, and if we succeed in showing that defensive war is not justified, of course that will settle the whole question beyond the reach of controversy.

Now, since he has appealed to the Gospel, why does he, then, so soon abandon it and appeal to other authority? Why does he say that the right of self-defense is every-where recognized as the first law of nature? Every-where recognized! Where is it recognized? Echo answers, Where? He appeals to the Gospel. I deny that it is recognized therein. The burden of proof rests upon him, and he has failed to produce it. What is this law of nature? If we were governed by the law of nature, we would be like our Divine Master who knew no sin, and his apostles who were inspired, and had their perverse nature subdued by grace, through faith, all of whom taught us that we should not resist evil, that we should not avenge ourselves against our adversaries, — not give place unto wrath, but submit all our wrongs to him of whom it is said, "Vengeance is mine; I will repay."

Again we are taught to exercise that "charity that hopeth, that believeth, and that beareth all things." So this first law of nature, as assumed to be planted in us by God, turns out to belong to the preternatural state, imbibed in the fall of our first parents. Cain was under the influence of this preternatural law, while Abel, his victim, was under the influence of the divine law, and did not resist. This disposition we see manifest in the whole life and death of our Savior. When he was persecuted, he suffered it, though he had power, by a word, to have crushed his enemies. In order to give us an example, he suffered every insult and indignity without the least show of resistance. This was imitated by the apostles and first Christians, who were not under the influence of this pretended law of nature, but under the law of grace and love.

In keeping with this principle we hear the apostle commending the Hebrew brethren because they took joyfully the spoiling of their goods. It is needless that we add testimony upon this subject, because they are legion. It would seem to suffice when we say that there is not a single exception to this rule in the whole Gospel. When one is presented it is time enough to enumerate testimonies to meet it.

"CHRISTIAN songs have often awakened responsive tones in dull souls, and Christian testimony has convinced gainsayers of the reality of personal faith in Christ."

BLESSED ARE THEY THAT DO HIS COMMANDMENTS.

BY J. H. PECK.

Number One.

THE above is the language of the Alpha and Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last, as recorded in Rev. 22: 14, and is immediately followed by a reason: "That ye may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city,"—just what all Christian professors hope to do by and by. But how strange that, in the face of this and many similar passages of Scripture, requiring action, obedience and performance of duties on our part, the mass of Christian professors in this nineteenth century content themselves with faith alone, entirely ignoring all works as a condition of salvation.

A recent number of the Christian Herald and Signs of Our Times, contains the following anecdote:

"A young lady, whose parents were wealthy and moved in fashionable society, was lying on a bed of sickness. Feeling that the end was very nigh, she said to her father: 'Father, I am going to die; where am I going?' The father could give no reply.

"'Mother, dear, can you tell me what to do to get to heaven?' No reply.

"'I am lost!' she exclaimed. But the servant girl who knew the Savior, told her mistress of the minister who preached forgiveness through the finished work of Christ. 'Oh, that I could see him!' exclaimed the dying girl. He was sent for and came. She appealed to him, 'Can you tell me what I must do to obtain rest to my soul, and die at peace with my God?' He replied, 'I cannot.' She cried, 'Alas! and is it so? Is there no help for me?' 'Stay,' said he, 'though I cannot tell you what you can do to be saved, I can tell you what has been done for you. Jesus Christ, the Savior, has completely finished a work, by which lost and helpless sinners may be saved. The Savior left the throne of his glory, bled and died that the sinner might live. He bore our sins in his own body on the tree. As our sin-bearer and substitute, he endured the punishment we deserved, in order that God might be able to pardon sinners. You have nothing to do; Christ has done it. Believe and trust in him.' The dying girl exclaimed: 'And have I really nothing to do? Nothing to pay? Nothing to give? Nothing to recommend me to God?' The minister replied, 'Nothing. Christ has done it all. God commands you to believe that Christ died for our sins, and he says that whosoever believeth this, shall not perish, but have everlasting life.'"

While believing and trusting may have been all this lady could do when so near to death's door, the day of judgment only can reveal, whether even a belief and trust in Christ, brought on by force of circumstances, after a life of wasted opportunities has almost passed away, will avail. But this system of salvation is not even confined to cases of this kind. It is boldly preached from the pulpits of our land, to such an extent that thousands claim they are saved, because they think they believe on the Lord Jesus Christ, and if one would ask them if they had received the Holy Ghost since they believed, I fear many would have to answer, "We have not so much as heard whether there be any Holy Ghost."

And why this ignorance? Because they have been taught they have nothing to do. Christ said to the Jews, "Search the Scriptures," John 5: 39, but according to our nineteenth century nothing-to-do-doctrine, it is not even necessary to search the Scriptures, for Christ has done it all. If we believe that he died to save sinners, that settles it,—that is the sum total of what God requires of us, and we can even go on in the indulgence of the "lust of the flesh, and the lust of the eyes, and the pride of life," for if we should deny ourselves of ungodliness and worldly lusts, and live soberly, righteously and godly in this present world, as taught in Titus 2: 12, that would be doing something, and we have nothing to do, according to this theory.

But let us see how this "nothing-to-do" doctrine compares with the Word. "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar and the truth is not in him." 1 John 2: 4. Is there anything to do in keeping God's commandments? We shall endeavor to show, in due time, that, in all ages, those who kept God's commandments, did not keep them in their minds only, but kept them by doing what God commanded. We have several instances, however, in God's Word, where persons kept God's commandments only in their minds, if at all, and the results were not to their benefit. The Lord said unto Moses, saying, "Take the rod, and gather thou the assembly together; thou and Aaron thy brother, and speak ye unto the rock before their eyes; and it shall give forth his water, and thou shalt bring forth to them water out of the rock." Num. 20: 8.

This was God's command to Moses after he had once brought water from the rock by smiting it. But there is a slight difference in this command from the former, which is found in Ex. 17: 6.

In the latter God commanded Moses to take the rod and gather the assembly together, and speak unto the rock, and it shall give forth his water. But in the eleventh verse we read, "And Moses lifted up his hand, and with his rod he smote the rock twice."

Though the water came forth abundantly, to satisfy the thirsty congregation, God was displeased with Moses' disobedience, or, perhaps, we might say his keeping of God's command in his mind only, and not by doing it. For this Moses was not permitted to enter the Promised Land.

Another instance of a similar character is found in 1 Sam. 15, where God commanded Saul to go and smite Amalek, and utterly destroy all that they have, and spare them not; but slay both man woman, infant and suckling, ox and sheep, camel and ass. This was a very plain command, and easy to understand, and I have no doubt Saul kept it to the letter (in his mind); but Saul and the people spared Agag (the king) and the best of the sheep, and of the oxen, and of the fatlings, and the lambs, and all that was good, and would not utterly destroy them; but everything that was vile and refuse, that they destroyed utterly. "And Samuel came to Saul: and Saul said unto him, Blessed be thou of the Lord: I have performed the commandment of the Lord. And Samuel said, What meaneth then this bleating of the sheep in mine ears, and the lowing of the oxen which I hear? And Saul said, They have brought them from the Amalekites: for the people spared the best of the sheep and of the oxen, to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God; and the rest we have utterly destroyed. Then Samuel said unto Saul, Stay, and I will tell thee what the Lord hath said to me this night. And he said unto him, Say on. And Samuel said, When thou wast little in thine own sight, wast thou not made the head of the tribes of Israel, and the Lord anointed thee king over Israel? And the Lord sent thee on a journey, and said, Go and utterly destroy the sinners the Amalekites, and fight against them until they be consumed. Wherefore then didst thou not obey the voice of the Lord, but didst fly upon the spoil, and didst evil in the sight of the Lord? And Saul said unto Samuel, Yea, I have obeyed the voice of the Lord, and have gone the way which the Lord sent me, and have brought Agag the king of Amalek, and have utterly destroyed the Amalekites. But the people took of the spoil, sheep and oxen, the chief of the things which should have been utterly destroyed, to sacrifice unto the Lord thy God in Gilgal. And Samuel said, Hath the Lord as much delight in burnt offerings and sacrifices, as in obeying the voice of the Lord? Behold, to obey is better than sacrifice, and to hearken than the fat of rams. For rebellion is as the sin of witchcraft, and stubbornness is as iniquity and idolatry. Because thou hast rejected the word of the Lord, he hath also rejected thee from being king." 1 Sam. 15: 13–23.

SELFISHNESS does not always prompt to action in the line of self-interest. Selfishness is likely to give the first place to the present moment. Self-interest considers the future as well as the present. If a man would never do anything that he saw was to cost him more than he gained by it, a large proportion of the evil that is now doing in this world would be refrained from. It seems strange, indeed, that men are not readier to choose that course which they know to be for their permanent welfare; but, as a matter of fact, the choice of most men is a deliberate choice of pleasure or interest for the moment, rather than of advantage and profit in the end. Shakespeare asks:

> "What win I if I gain the thing I seek?
> A dream, a breath, a froth of fleeting joy,
> Who buys a minute's mirth, to wail a week?
> Or sells eternity to gain a toy?
> For one sweet grape, who will the vine destroy?
> Or what fond beggar, but to touch the crown,
> Would with that scepter straight be stricken down?"

But the average sinner, in his folly, replies: "Give me the present, and the future may take care of itself."—Sel.

"IN all Christian gatherings Jesus is in the midst. How safe we should feel, how cheerful we should be, because Jesus is in the midst. Jesus is in the midst when we devotedly gather around the family altar. What a glorious opportunity to make known all our desires! He will listen to us, for he never turned one away when upon earth, and our dear Lord is the same yesterday, to-day, and forever. Jesus is in the midst of all our gatherings, when our hearts are in communion with him. Jesus is not only in the midst of Christian assemblies, but is in the midst of our trials, if we take them as coming in his name, for there is the promise that all things shall work together for good to them that love God. I am glad that he is in the midst of the hearts of our young people. Let us beseech him to remain, a permanent guest."

"THESE are 'hard times.' I'll tell you why. The nation is spending more money for intoxicating drinks than for all the bread it eats, and all the clothes it wears, for all the books it reads, or for all the churches it has ever built. If every one of its accursed drinking saloons could be shut up, and every bottle smashed forever, we should have good times in thirty days. Begin the work by cutting off the tow line, and let the liquor-seller drift into other business."

"How much unhappiness we might save ourselves if we only learn to trust in God, and to take cheerfully and thankfully just what he sends, believing that he loves us, and cares for us, and that 'all things work together for good to those who love God.'"

"NEW relations between God and his people imply not a change in him, but in them."

"Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."—1 Cor. 16: 2.

"Every man as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give. Not grudgingly or of necessity, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Cor. 9: 7.

HOW MUCH SHALL WE GIVE?

"Every man according to his ability." "Every one as God hath prospered him." "Every man, according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give." "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not."—2 Cor. 8: 12.

THE WATCH TOWER.

BY GALEN B. ROYER.

"A MASS of iron was to be broken. An axe said, 'I will cleave it;' but each blow only dulled the axe. A saw said, 'I will cut it;' but the teeth were all worn down, and the block was uncut. The hammer said, 'I will crush it;" but on the first stroke the head flew off. 'Shall I try?' said the soft small flame. To this the iron yielded, melting under its irresistible influence." While our lives should be as gentle as the little flame, they should be as powerful and conquering for Christ.

There is a tendency on the part of both professors and non-professors of Christianity, not to regard Sunday with as much sacredness as we believe the Bible teaches us to maintain. It is true the Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath; but that does not imply that we should misuse the day. The benefits and blessings derived from a proper observance of it are innumerable and varied, and it is not our design to note them now. We regret, however, to see in localities,—in some more than in others,—a strong inclination to disregard the day, and thus degenerate the moral and religious status of the community.

We strongly urge that any labor for the promotion of his kingdom, which of need should be done on Sunday, should not be neglected. But any other business, the carrying on of which takes time and labor on Sunday does not have, because of its worldly aim, an elevating influence upon the laborers. It is difficult enough, under the most favorable circumstances, to prepare our minds for a profitable waiting before the Lord in his sanctuary. How must it be with that one who has spent from one to three or four hours attending to such business! When he enters the house of God, if he goes to church at all, his mind is not bent on worship; he is fatigued, and is soon fast asleep; and while the day will be one of partial physical rest, it is not one of spiritual refreshment. The worldly man may have little to lose by it, but the Christian has much. He grows cold to the church; his children and neighbors feel it. When he is urged to more Christian activity, he finds fault with the church. His children hear him and form a dislike for the service of Christ. Years roll rapidly by and the father begins to look in earnest about his interests over there. He is then heard to lament because his children are so godless and totally disregard the fervent prayers of his old age. The generation is one of Sabbath breakers, and who is in fault? All this because we have not observed properly the day of rest; because a business was conducted in our midst on Sunday, and WE the patrons, both saint and sinner, patronized it on that day. Enterprises are found on every hand that are leading to such results. Brethren, what is our attitude towards them? We cannot afford in any way to encourage them.

THE NEGLECTED BIBLE.

A TRUE INCIDENT.

A YEAR or two ago a young man caught the "Go West, young man" fever, and determined to go to the "Great West" and "grow up with the country." His preparations were about completed when his good Christian mother came to him, and, handing him a copy of the Word of God, said: "My son, here is a Bible. Let it be your constant companion, and in the hour of your greatest need search therein, for between its covers you will find that which will meet your want." With a shrug of his shoulders he carelessly tossed the precious book into his trunk. A few days later he left behind him his home and his godly mother to seek a fortune in the mines of Colorado.

Time passed. Failure after failure met his every effort, until he was glad to tramp many miles, begging his way into the City of Denver, where, after repeated attempts to find work, he accepted employment as a driver of a street car. He managed to keep soul and body together and to save enough to pay his way home in an emigrant car, a disappointed and disheartened man. During all this time he entirely forgot his mother's advice: "My son, in your time of need search in your Bible for the relief you will find there."

He reached home a mere wreck of his former self, clothes in rags, and scarcely recognizable by those who loved him and knew him best.

One day his mother said, "John did you ever read the Bible I gave you?" "No, indeed," he lightly replied; "I never had time." "Where is it, John?" "Oh, out West, in Leadville. I left my trunk as security until I could send my landlord the money I owed him for board, and the Bible is safe enough there with my other things." Nothing more was said, but John noticed his mother's sad look as she quietly left the room.

Shortly afterward John sent and redeemed his trunk, and it was forwarded to his city home. Weeks passed, and again he was asked if he had read his Bible, now that it was again in his possession; but he answered, "No, it is still in my trunk." Asking for the key, Mrs. A—— went to John's room, and taking the Bible from beneath a pile of clothing she brought it down, and placing it in his hands she said, gently: "My dear son, if you had only heeded my words and opened this dear book when you needed help most, you would have been spared much of sorrow and hard toil," and then left the room.

John wondered at his mother's remark, and mechanically opened the book, when the meaning of her loving admonition was made plain. There, to his astonished gaze, he found, carefully placed here and there between the leaves, ten clean, crisp, new $10 bank notes.

"My son, in the hour of your greatest need, search in this Bible for the relief which you will find there." How the words came to his mind and sank into his inmost soul! His mother's love—her provision against his want! How she feared he would neglect the Word of God in prosperity, but hoped he would search the Scriptures, should adversity come and the future look all dark! Thinking all this over and realizing how he had acted, he bowed his head in shame that his mother could so clearly read his character. He thought of those days of privation and want when, like the prodigal, he would have been glad to have accepted the very "husks which the swine did eat." Had he but read the book, if only to please his mother, he would have found the provision of her love placed where she hoped he might look for help to bear the trials of a disappointed life, which the Word of God holds ready for those who seek it.

"Search the Scriptures," for therein is stored a wealth of love to meet the greatest need of every soul. Don't be Johns who "haven't time to read the Bible." You may find there the words which will provide for you all through the journey of life, lighten every care, make your pathway bright and cheerful, guiding you through "green pastures and beside the still waters," and bring you safe at last to the Father's house.—H. T. Gray, in the Intelligencer.

IN a recent editorial the Christian Standard says: "We know the preacher and the city, and have the facts on good authority. The preacher's field for several years, of his own choice, has been in the poor quarter of the city. Not only does he gather up and preach to great crowds of the poor, but he has established comfortable sleeping quarters for the shelterless, and other much-needed charities. Not long ago he invited a rich brewer to visit his dormitory for the homeless. He showed the brewer the long rows of those who, 'in a whole city full, home had none,' and after they had gotten out into the street the preacher said, 'These are your people; the fruit of the stuff you make and sell.' The beer-maker saw the truth too plainly for denial, and then and there handed over fifty dollars for the support of the good work. Probably this brewer had never before been brought so fully face to face with the results of his work, and there are many who do not realize the ruin they are causing—including those who vote to legalize the liquor-seller's business."

PRIVATE prayer is the channel through which the Lord is graciously pleased to convey spiritual blessings to the soul. He knows all our wants, and, without our asking him, could supply them in the best manner and at the best possible time. But he will be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do for them according to the exceeding great and precious promises he hath given."

SOMETIMES the black storms of trouble blot out the bright stars from the sky of enjoyment, and then the faint heart feels the blackness of darkness overwhelming it; but just then the Savior rebukes the wind and bids the waters be still, and the faint heart starts anew on its journey to the celestial city.

"THERE is no funeral so sad to follow as the funeral of our own youth, which we have been pampering with fond desires and ambitious hopes, and all the bright berries that hang in poisonous clusters over the path of life."

"IN all our doings, spiritual and bodily, faith must rule and reign, and let the heart hold it sure and firm that God is looking on us, holds us dear, will help us, and not forsake us."

The Gospel Messenger

Is the recognized organ of the German Baptist or Brethren's church, and advocates the form of doctrine taught in the New Testament and pleads for a return to apostolic and primitive Christianity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and maintains that Faith toward God, Repentance from dead works, Regeneration of the heart and mind, baptism by Trine Immersion for remission of sins unto the reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, are the means of adoption into the household of God,—the church militant.

It also maintains that Feet-washing, as taught in John 13, both by example and command of Jesus, should be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper, instituted by Christ and as universally observed by the apostles and the early Christians, is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening or after the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ.

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That the principle of Plain Dressing and of Non-conformity to the world, as taught in the New Testament, should be observed by the followers of Christ

That the Scriptural duty of Anointing the Sick with Oil, in the Name of the Lord, James 5: 14, is binding upon all Christians

It also advocates the church's duty to support Missionary and Tract Work, thus giving to the Lord for the spread of the Gospel and for the conversion of sinners.

In short, it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discords of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe.

PRICE of the MESSENGER from now to the end of the year, fifty cents.

SOME one, at Bonbrook, Va., orders eight copies of the Report, but fails to give his name.

ON the account of putting in some new machinery the next issue may possibly reach our readers a few days late.

Do not fail to read and carefully consider the supplement in this issue. Those who have no way of making use of it might do well to send it to some one who is not receiving the MESSENGER.

ON page 458 of this issue will be found a friendly letter, headed, "From an Outsider," showing how the MESSENGER and tracts are appreciated. This ought to encourage the sending out of our literature in all directions. Some of it is sure to fall on good ground.

BRO. J. G. ROYER, who is now traveling and preaching in Indiana, expects to be near Bourbon August 2.

JUST as we go to press we learn that Eld. J. F. Oller, of Waynesborough, Pa., is dangerously ill. He is hardly expected to rally.

IT is said that two-thirds of the church members in this country are women; 43,000 of the 45,000 convicts in the State prisons of the United States are men.

NEVER fail to write love-feast and all other notices for publication on separate slips of paper, with your name and address to each. Please do not mix business with matter intended for publication.

WE are in receipt of a very neatly written letter from Bro. John Wolfe, of Liberty, Ill. We say neatly written, for he lacks only a few days of being eighty years old, and wrote this letter without the aid of glasses. So far as we know he is the only living child of Eld. George Wolfe, of the "Far Western Brethren" fame. Bro John reports his health generally good, yet he is getting somewhat feeble.

WRITING from Keuka, Fla., Bro. Ira Garman says: "The church here seems to be moving along very pleasantly, and a good Christian feeling prevails among the members. Bro. E. J. Neher stands up to the work quite well, and is doing some good talking for us." He also reports fine weather and an abundance of fruit. We certainly enjoy good news from Keuka and are glad to know that the church is in health and at peace.

IN sending in Sunday-school news, always weave the same in with church news from the same localities. Some desire a quarterly Sunday-school report, giving a list of teachers present and absent, the same of the officers, etc. We cannot spare the space for matters of that kind. We like to give short, readable reports of Sunday-school work, where said reports are in connection with other news and made interesting to the general reader.

EVERYTHING, relating to the Land of Palestine, seems to be interesting to Bible students. The eyes of the whole Christian world seem to be turning in that direction. The Sabbath Advocate says: "Hebrew is again becoming a living language in Palestine. The thousands of Jews who are going there from different countries, being unable to communicate with each other in their ordinary languages, resort to the knowledge which they have of Hebrew, in their religious services, for a means of communication." The city is rapidly rebuilding, and we may well look for some important developments.

"THE American Sunday-school Union recently reported the receipt of $500, which was willed to the society more than forty years ago. But the will was broken and the widow was not able to carry out the wish of her deceased husband. However, the daughter, upon succeeding to her share of the estate, sent five hundred dollars in memory of the original bequest, which, though declared invalid by the law, she gave as carrying out the wish of her step-father who entered into rest so long ago." That is what we call genuine honesty. If any of our members should pledge money to be paid over to the Lord's cause on their death, and any of it should be withheld by those who have the money in their power, we trust the Lord will yet raise up some one in the family who will have the honesty to pay the debt. Then the Lord will surely bless that person.

THE School and Home, for July, published by Royer and Young, in the interest of the Mt. Morris College, is before us. It is a very interesting number, and will be appreciated, especially by those interested in education.

THE Moravians are probably greater missionaries in the field, according to their numbers, than any society in existence. It is said that one of their missionaries named Letzen, with his wife, has for thirty years past been preaching and working at a station in the Thibetan Mountains, without the sight of a European face, and with the post-office fourteen days distant, separated from them by the high passes of the Himalayas and dangerous streams. This is the kind of zeal needed to make missionary work a success.

IT is hard to say what man will not yet undertake, and perhaps equally difficult to predict what he may not yet accomplish. Neither the rain, sunshine, heat or cold pleases him; he is now trying to manufacture rain. One of our exchanges says: "If the experiments now being made by the Government, in the manufacture of rain, shall prove successful, it will inaugurate a new era for the arid regions of the earth. The plan is to send up balloons inflated with powerfully explosive gases, and by means of electricity, explode them in the cloud regions. It is supposed that the air has always sufficient moisture for a rain, and that a violent disturbance will secure its precipitation. There are many things which tend to establish the possibility of producing rain when we choose, and we shall watch the experiments to be made in Western Kansas, with much interest and some hopefulness."

PREPARE FOR THE WORK.

ON the missionary page, of last issue, under the head, "The Outlook," Bro. Royer, Secretary of the Mission Board, had a good and timely suggestion in regard to missionary work, the coming fall, in the Western fields. It is to be hoped that all of the Mission Boards in these Western States will immediately act on the suggestion, in order that everything may be placed in good shape for an earnest and consecrated effort during the fall and winter months.

And while this subject is before us, we wish to further suggest, that the Mission Boards, all over the Brotherhood, take a careful look at their home fields, select their men, raise the necessary means and prepare for prompt and vigorous action in every section, where they can find an encouraging opening.

All the border State Districts, East, West, North and South should prepare for vigorous work on the outskirts of the Brotherhood, and call on the General Mission Board for help and co-operation, if necessary. Select some of the best ministers in your State Districts—men adapted to missionary work, recommend them to the General Missionary Board, suggest fields of labor, and let there be a general and a united effort to push our cause in every direction. There is no telling what we may accomplish, if we properly prepare for it, and get right down to earnest work, doing our part and trusting God for the rest. There are scores of fields and good openings where our people should enter at once. We have the religion for the masses, and let us prepare to push it. Broad and unoccupied fields are before us in every direction, and we have the authority from heaven to enter them. To the North and South of us, as well as in the West, are fields with good openings, and there may also be places in the East where good work might be accomplished. It will be well for the State District Mission Boards to suggest, to the General Missionary Board, men suited for work in these isolated fields, and we feel confident that the General Board will receive and consider such suggestions with pleasure.

It will also be proper for every congregation in the Brotherhood to prepare for special efforts in their own local congregations. Much of this local work can be done by the home ministers, and if the congregations feel so disposed, help might be obtained from other sources by calling in ministers adapted to this line of work. But we must get ready for it. Let the preachers get ready for the work, and also the congregations. In short, let there be a general move along the line, not alone for the purpose of converting sinners, but for the purpose of instructing and building up the church in the most holy faith. We, at times, need as much work done among the members as we do among the sinners. There are hundreds of churches that need more life, more faith and zeal in the Master's work, and the minister who can arouse them to a full sense of their duty and responsibility, is doing a grand work. A church that is fully alive to the work entrusted to her, will be the means of converting many souls, hence it will sometimes pay to give more attention to arousing the church than to a direct attempt at converting the sinner. When the sinner is converted he ought to have a good live church to help him become more useful in Christ Jesus. So let all parties interested commence laying plans and preparing for the work as early as possible.

QUINTER'S LIFE AND SERMONS.

We had not space to say much about the "Life and Sermons of Elder James Quinter" last week. The work was prepared by his daughter, sister Mary N. Quinter, who has devoted much time and care to its preparation, and has certainly performed her work well. It is a neatly-printed and well-bound volume of 426 pages. In addition to a biographical sketch of Bro. Quinter, the work contains forty of his sermons. The biographical part will be found both interesting and impressive. No one can read the account of Bro. Quinter's life without feeling deeply and sensibly impressed. He was indeed a devout man, fully consecrated to God, and spent a long and busy life in the service of his Master. The sermon department contains forty of his sermons. These will prove exceedingly interesting and profitable reading to all, especially to ministers and isolated members. Hundreds, who have not the pleasure of attending regular services, will spend many happy hours on Sundays, reading one or more of these sermons. This department will fill a long-felt want in our Brotherhood.

The book will be the means of inspiring many, and prompt them to a greater consecration of body and soul to the cause of Christianity, and aid them in attaining to a higher degree of personal piety and Christian devotion. We bespeak for the book an extensive sale and a wide field of usefulness. Price, $1.25, post-paid.

BIOGRAPHICAL ARTICLES.

There, is perhaps, no department in our editorial work requiring more care, in order to render satisfaction to those concerned, than the publishing of memoriams and obituaries. Were we to give space to all the memoriams sent us, much of the paper would be taken up with that class of reading. To this our readers would most seriously object, hence we are compelled to either cut such notices down, so they can appear among the obituaries, or reject them entirely. Of course this does not give satisfaction to the bereft ones, but it is the best we can do. Many, weighed down with sorrow, send poetry in memory of their dear ones, thinking that it will in some manner afford a degree of consolation. We can decline ordinary articles on their merits, and do it with good grace, but when it comes to declining some of these touching letters, bathed in tears, and filled with tender, loving expressions in memory of the dear loved ones, it puts us to the test for we, too, have passed near the valley and shadow of death, and know what it is to give up those we love so dearly. You may think your editor would soon become indifferent concerning articles of this class, but he receives some that come very close home.

In order to deal justly by all, we have published no memoriams for some time. When a member seems to be widely enough known, to render an article concerning his death interesting to our readers generally, we usually publish such articles as biographical sketches, under headings suited to the occasions and persons. This, we think, will give very general satisfaction.

Articles of this class might be made both interesting and profitable. We have hundreds of ministers very widely known, an account of whose lives would afford very profitable reading, and we desire to encourage this class of writing. When a good man is called home we rejoice to know that he died in the faith, and a carefully-written article, stating the time and place of his birth, his boyhood life, his occupation, conversion, election to the ministry, marriage, his travels, any important work he has done, peculiarities, and scores of other things that may be learned concerning him, will be generally appreciated by all of our readers. Sentimental articles, on the death of our friends, are interesting only to a small circle, but the class of articles to which we have referred, will be welcomed at this office and relished by all of our readers, especially as they deal with, and tend to encourage and lead us to, a higher and a more consecrated life in Christ Jesus.

HOW THEY BAPTIZED.

One of our readers wishes to know whether John Wesley ever practiced trine immersion. Turning to Moore's Life of Wesley, Vol. 1, page 425, may be found the following language:

"When Mr. Wesley baptized adults, professing "faith in Christ, he chose to do it by trine im- "mersion, if the person would consent to it, judg- "ing this to be the apostolic method of baptizing."

Inquiry is also made whether Martin Luther ever practiced trine immersion. In the year 1530 a minister wrote Martin Luther, making inquiry about the manner in which he should baptize a converted Jewess. The following is Luther's reply:

"As to the public act of baptism, let her be "dressed in the garments usually worn by females "in baths, and be placed in a bathing tub, up to "the neck in water; then let the baptist dip her "head three times in the water, with the usual "words, 'I baptize you in the name of the Fa- "ther,'" etc.—Luther's Works, ed. Walch, Part X, page 2637, translated by C. L. Loos for the Disciple.

The above is sufficient to show with what respect these venerable reformers regarded trine immersion. Comment is unnecessary. J. H. M.

THE LORD'S PRAYER.

Our blessed Lord, in Matt. 6: 13, taught his disciples to pray and ask the Father to lead us not into temptation. Now James says, "Let no man say when he is tempted, I am tempted of God, for God cannot be tempted with evil, neither tempteth he any man." James 1: 13. Would it be right to say, "Suffer us not to be led into temptation?"

Charles M. Groves.

Ans.—The proper way to use the Lord's prayer is the way the Lord himself gave it. He certainly knew what he was doing. He says: "Lead us not into temptation." Some have tried to improve on this by saying: "Suffer us not to be led into temptation. Others say: "Abandon us not in temptation," and still others say, "Lead us, but not into temptation." It will thus be seen that those who do depart from the written form do not agree in their departures. It is true that God tempts no man, but he may nevertheless lead men to where they may be tempted, in order to test them. Jesus, by the Spirit, was led into the wilderness to be tempted of the devil. Matt. 4: 1. The term Spirit here has reference to the Holy Spirit, or the third person of the Trinity. This Spirit did not tempt him, but it led him to where the temptation was. Christ stood the test. In like manner may we be led into temptation. We shrink from the thought of being placed in the hands of Satan for testing, and pray God that it may not so happen to us. This we can do just as consistently as Christ prayed the Father that the cup of suffering might be taken from him. And yet, if we are led into temptation, we should say, "Not my will, but thy will be done," and resolve to stand the test, and thereby prove ourselves.

Around Job the Lord had placed a hedge so that Satan could not injure either the property or person of Job. In order to permit Satan to test Job the Lord moved the hedge, thus exposing him to temptation. The test was a severe one, but Job stood it manfully. Abraham was tested when he was commanded to offer his son Isaac on the mount. Thus God leads many Christians to where they may be tempted in order to test them, usually for the purpose of demonstrating their ability to stand firm in the face of opposition. He does not usually call men to important positions without first testing them in some manner.

We, therefore, see no reason for departing from the written form in using the Lord's Prayer, for in doing so we change the sense of what the Lord intended we should pray for. When the Lord goes to the trouble of having anything worded as nicely, and as appropriately as in the Lord's Prayer, our better way is to follow copy. If we want to make prayers of our own, all right, but we do not need to change the one the Lord gave us. The complete Lord's Prayer reads thus: "Our Father which art in heaven hallowed be thy name. Thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread. And forgive us our debts, as we forgive our debtors. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil: For thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, for ever. Amen." Matt. 6: 9-13. The same prayer is referred to in Luke 11: 2-4, but the form there is not as complete as in Matthew. J. H. M.

CHAS. H. SPURGEON.

For some weeks Mr. Spurgeon, the great London preacher, has been quite ill, and it was feared that he might not recover, but late reports seem more favorable. He is certainly a remarkable man, and has been a hard worker from boyhood to the present time. The amount of work he has accomplished is simply astonishing. Speaking of his illness, the Chicago Evening Journal says:

"The world has on its invalid list, just now, a number of its most brilliant, famous and useful men, but it is doubtful if any of them receives such universal and heartfelt sympathy, or could be so poorly spared, as Charles H. Spurgeon, the famous London Baptist divine and preacher. The prayers of his devoted flock, who have held a perpetual prayer-meeting during his illness, find an echo in every Christian community on the globe, and are followed with the devout 'amen' of universal humanity. If it were possible that the death of another human being could be substituted for his, there is no doubt that thousands of Christian people, some from America, some from Australia, some from China, some from India, and some from the remotest isles of the sea, would cheerfully consent to die, to prolong his invaluable life.

"Mr. Spurgeon is not a college-bred man, but all the universities in Christendom could not confer the learning, the wisdom, the genius and the lofty graces with which he is endowed. Demosthenes, Cicero, Bossuet and Whitefield are not forgotten; but still we doubt if history can boast another such eloquent tongue as his. Such fertility, such logic, such wealth of language, such aptness of imagery and illustration, such imagination and poetry, such unfailing yet kindly wit and humor, such resistless pathos and tenderness, will probably never fall to the lot of another man.

"Spurgeon is a Baptist, but not a mug-wump Baptist. He has an unshaken and immovable faith in the inspiration and inerrancy of the Holy Bible. One of his last acts before his present deplorable illness was to join with thirty other Baptist ministers in a public manifesto, asserting their unwavering allegiance to this and other fundamental doctrines of Christianity. He is as innocent as the child unborn of the 'higher criticism,' and with all his unrivaled Biblical learning and mental acuteness, he has never yet been able to discover a single error, historical, scientific, or otherwise, in the book which he honors as the Word of God. In the college which he has founded in London, he would probably not employ as an assistant janitor any one who differed with him on this point."

The above is from a secular paper, and shows the standing of the man in the estimation of the world. And while we cannot discover in Mr. Spurgeon that soundness in the practice of the Christian ordinances that should characterize a minister of the uncontaminated Gospel, we nevertheless must admit that he has stood as one of the strongest of the strong in defense of the authenticity of the Scriptures. In our Literary Notes of last week mention was made of his last work, entitled, "The Greatest Fight in the World." This is, perhaps, one of the most important books that has come to our desk for review. It treats of the authenticity of the Bible in a masterly manner, and should be in the hands of every minister. Price, only 35 cents, and it may be ordered from this office.

"When God blesses us with some special favor, let us be less in haste to tell it to men than to speak of it to God himself."

The Iowa River church met in quarterly council July 11. We had a very pleasant meeting together. All the business that came before the church was disposed of pleasantly. A loving spirit seemed to rule the meeting. Our elder, Bro. Stephen Johnson, was not present with us, as he resides at some distance. We decided to hold our love-feast Sept. 19 and 20. We extend a hearty invitation to all who wish to be with us.

We expect Bro. Moses Dierdorff, from Yale, Guthrie Co., this State, July 15, to commence a series of meetings. I do not know how long he will continue. Let us all pray that souls may be brought to Christ!

The readers of the Messenger have not seen anything from our church lately, but while we have been silent we have not been idle. We have Sunday-school every Sunday, the year round, prayer-meeting every Thursday evening, and we have also done something for the missionary cause. We always want to be found doing something for the Master.

Our dear sister, Betsy Arnold, has been suffering from cancer, but is, we are glad to say, improving. Ellen M. Nicholson.

From an Outsider.

Would the Brethren care to hear from an outside friend? I have just received several copies of the Messsenger and a bundle of tracts, which please me so much that I can hardly forbear expressing my joy. Although I have been trying to serve our Blessed Jesus for almost twenty years, I have never met a member of your denomination that I know of, since I was a very small child, living in Astoria, Ill., twenty-one years ago. Then I had no acquaintance with them, but one of your good families found me out, through whom, by correspondence, I have found out the Brethren, whose faith and obedience greatly rejoices me.

This is a very barren field. I mean that it is almost destitute of laborers in the good cause. The weeds, rocks and thorns greatly exceed the wheat in quantity, but the few earnest believers, here as elsewhere, have hearts of pure gold. Most of the soil in this vicinity is "stony ground," but there are some crevices amid the rocks, where, if a good seed fall, it will spring up and grow, and yield a pleasant shade from the scorching rays,—a gentle, lovely influence.

Let the sower scatter his seed broadcast. Some will fall upon stony ground and among thorns. Hard hearts will not let it take root and thorns will not let it flourish. Not all of the seed sown can bring forth a hundredfold or even sixtyfold. Some will not even sprout, but let us not be discouraged, though the Western field is so rocky and bare. Scatter the seeds of Truth! Some will fall on good ground, spring up, and grow, and yield fruit.

There are eight organizations of Christian denominations at Canon City. None of them are very prosperous on account of the condition of the soil (infidelity) and the thorns, or worldly cares, which abound in this region. The man who does not devote all his influence to worldly matters, and the woman who does not spend every nickel she can obtain for costly array, is a rare exception.

Your correspondent is not a resident of the city, but an isolated soul on a lonely stock-ranch, away off from any other human habitation. Her only company is her family, her own precious letters and other mail, which comes semi-weekly, her good old Bible, and the blessed Holy Spirit, without whose society the solitude would be unendurable. Most of the people here are stock-men (owners of cattle, etc.), who, with a few exceptions, are most ungodly. True religion here is so scarce that one nearly starves for its beneficent influence. Many persons here not only work themselves, their wives, children, servants and horses, early and late, seven days out of every week, hoarding up or spending every penny selfishly for worldly things, but also slander, persecute, slight and ignore, any one who dares to do otherwise.

Some men, who are worth thousands of dollars, deprive their families of all the comforts of life to buy a few more cattle each year. The unhappy wives die or become insane early, the unfortunate children grow up in ignorance and vice, and the rich heads of such families,—what becomes of them? Poor, foolish, deluded creatures,—denying themselves, their families, neighbors and all creatures of all the joy, comfort and happiness possible in this world for a little of this world's goods which they must soon leave. With no hope of a future life, no treasure in heaven, and no friends there,—how sad is their condition!

July 12 one precious soul was accepted into church fellowship by baptism, in this arm of the church. While this sister could apply the fingers deftly in operating on telegraphic batteries, God's "finger" of love was even stronger to the operating on her heart with the "finger" of his love. How wisely and discreetly she acted in heeding the call! Oh, that many more would do likewise! May she be a bright example in the profession she has espoused!

We were very agreeably surprised in having Bro. J. G. Royer call upon us and preach two acceptable sermons, July 12.

Bro. J. C. Lahman takes his leave of us to-day, July 13, for a few weeks' sojourn in Pennsylvania among some of the churches. We are glad to note that this church has not lost any of her zeal in the Sunday-school and social meeting during our absence of five weeks. C. H. Hawbecker.

The New Enterprise, Pa., Sunday-School.

The Brethren's Sunday-school at New Enterprise, Pa., was organized about twenty-five years ago. To some of us this seems but a short time, yet, when looking over the school, we could scarcely pick out as many now that were connected with the school then, as the years that have elapsed since its first organization.

What changes have been wrought by the ruthless hand of time! Those bright-eyed boys and rosy-cheeked girls that used to gather at the "Old church" every Sunday afternoon have grown to be men and women, and are scattered over many States.

Our dear old fathers and mothers, who labored so hard to establish this Sunday-school, where are they? In the silent city on yonder hill the epitaphs mark the last resting-place of many of them.

While this school has ever been a blessing to the community, yet we believe that its influence has been extended farther. Not long since one of our ministers, who is an active Sunday-school worker in the Far West, visited our school and gave us a few words of encouragement to continue in the good work. During his remarks he spoke of the many pleasant hours that, in his boyhood days, were spent under the shadow of this school, of the good instruction that he received from his first teacher, who has long since passed to the Great Beyond.

Some time ago we had a children's meeting, conducted by Eld. J. G. Royer, of Mt. Morris, Ill. Bro. Royer talked to over one hundred little children and entertained them very pleasantly. Not only were the children edified, but many parents and friends were benefited by the good instructions given.

The school at present is under the direction of elders D. T. Detwiler and C. L. Buck. The average attendance of teachers and scholars of the quarter just closed was one hundred and twenty-six. ROSIE S. MYERS.

JUNE 28 was a day of rejoicing for our little band of Brethren in Hancock County. After our regular meeting we had the pleasure of leading three precious souls into the liquid stream and baptizing them for the remission of their sins. Bro. A. Reeves, from Clay County, was with us, and assisted us in the work. We have concluded to hold a love-feast Aug. 22 and 23, in the barn of Bro. W. Smith, one mile south of Stillson. We would like to see many of our Brethren from a distance with us at that time, as this is the first love-feast in Hancock County. All those who come by railroad will inform G. D. Aschenbrenner, at Britt, and those who come to Stillson will inform E. Long, W. Smith, or G. Aschenbrenner, Stillson, Iowa. Will our ministering brethren make a note of this? A good work can be done here if the right effort is made, and all the members live out their profession.

My Trip to Michigan.

JULY 2 I left home for Northern Michigan. As I came near Benton Harbor, I saw a heavy cloud hanging over Lake Michigan. Soon the rumbling of distant thunder was heard, and before we came to the Harbor, the rain, with wind, was forcing its way against the train. For a short time we had fears of a heavy storm and, for nearly three hundred miles, our travel was through a heavy rain, but to our surprise, when we came within about twenty miles of Petoskey, in Northern Michigan, there had been no rain-fall, to do the parched earth any good. In Northern Michigan the rain-fall has been very slight,—only enough to dampen the ground to the depth of one inch, since the first of last April. Crops are, to some extent, dried up. The crops in Southern Michigan and Northern Indiana, however, are good. Wheat has not been better for many years.

Petoskey and Harbor Springs, located around Traverse Bay, are much noted for their summer resorts. Thousands of tourists are here from the South during the hot summer months. Hay fever and throat troubles are scarcely known here.

A query presented itself to me: Why are people so anxious to leave places where fevers and other diseases prevail, in warmer climates, and, with their families, will move North, hundreds of miles, to escape those malarial troubles, depriving themselves of home enjoyments for a short time, in order to retain good health, and yet never turn their attention to a land,—to a spiritual summer resort that is far greater and more endurable than anything on earth?

The waters around Traverse Bay are clear as crystal. Springs and flowing fountains are here in abundance, and many thousands of people visit these beautiful waters every year. Sinner, have you any trouble with sin? Do you wish to enjoy a "health resort?" You need not come north to find that health-giving stream during the hot summer months, or go south during the winter to enjoy the "Sunny South" with all its loveliness. In the Sacred Volume you can read of the "Beulah Land." You may read of the flowing fountains and the River of Life. Come, sinner, drink, and quench your thirst!

July 4 the Brethren of the Little Traverse church held their Communion services. As the Brethren of that vicinity are in limited circumstances, they have their feast at a time when they can take advantage of excursion rates. For this reason they celebrated their Communion on the evening of the above day. Being weak in the ministry, they made a call on the State District for help. In accordance therewith the writer agreed to be with the Brethren at their feast, and preach awhile for them. The feast was held on Bro. J. R. Stutsman's premises. A canvas tent, sixteen by twenty-four feet in size, gave ample room for members and spectators. Eleven brethren and eight sisters, making nineteen in all, composed the number of communicants. I never enjoyed a more pleasant love-feast. Some of their members came thirty miles, and brought their children. The Little Traverse church is much isolated. It has Lake Michigan for its boundary on the West and North. On the East and South it has no boundary. The main body of the Brotherhood is far away. What a place for missionary work!

This church has only two ministers, - Bro. J. R. Stutsman, the elder, and Bro. Isaac Hufford, in the second degree. There is entirely too much work for those two brethren here. There seems to be an open door here for the Word of God! Preaching must be done here in the summer months. The winters are long and cold. The snow often falls from two to four feet deep. The country being thinly settled, and there being no houses of worship, makes it difficult to hold meetings. The Brethren claim some good results could be had by holding services in towns, even if we had to go into court-houses.

The better way would be to have a tent, and put that up for a time, and hold services. Much good could be accomplished, and we would feel more free to speak the truth of God's Word. More in our next. J. H. MILLER.

From Scalp Level, Pa.

WE held our love-feast June 14. We were favored with a most beautiful day, and, as a result, we had a large crowd of people. Members from all the surrounding congregations met with us to celebrate the feast. The ministers from other congregations were, C. S. Holsinger, from Illinois; Aaron Hoffman, from Indiana; John S. Holsinger, E. J. Blough, A. Fyock and A. W. Meyers, from adjoining congregations. They held forth the Word with power. Bro. C. S. Holsinger officiated. It was a feast that will not soon be forgotten. One dear young sister was reclaimed.

On the day before the feast Eld. Joseph Berkey baptized an aged man and his wife. Our council, preparatory to the feast, took place June 11. We had a pretty fair attendance, but not very much business. All seem to be in union. Permission was granted to hold a series of meetings in each one of our six houses sometime during the fall. All business that came before the meeting was disposed of with the best of feeling.

Mrs. Vaniman, who was visiting friends and relatives in this place over our love-feast, came to Eld. Musselman June 17, and requested to be baptized. Her request was granted. No doubt the angels in heaven, and the saints on earth, rejoiced when she returned home.

Eld. C. S. Holsinger, who, with his wife, made an extended trip through the East, preached for us June 13, 14 and 26. As this was at one time their home church, he feels much interest in our welfare. His last sermon was from the words: "Be not deceived." Many good points were brought out, and, as it was his last sermon, the occasion was a very solemn one.

June 15 a private love-feast was held at the residence of sister Bena Hoffman, for the benefit of our aged sister Hoffman, who has not been able to attend public feasts for about four years. June 16 a similar feast was held at the home of Bro. A. A. Weaver, who has been confined to his room for over two years, and the greater part of the time to his bed.

Some weeks before the feast, there was a private feast held at the home of John Hoffman, for the benefit of himself and his companion who is also old and infirm. Sister Hoffman is past eighty-seven years of age, and her sense of hearing is very much impaired. The only way one can converse with her, is by the aid of an ear-trumpet. Her sight is good, and the greater part of her time is spent in reading her Bible. It generally lies open on the stand. It is a massive volume (the largest I have seen) of Martin Luther's translation, and published in Nuremburg, Germany, in 1765, and well preserved. It is remarkable how well she is informed in the Scriptures, and how readily she can refer to a certain passage. She told me she read it (at least the New Testament) through many times, and has now commenced in the beginning again with the intention of going through more thoroughly than ever, reading all the notes, comments, and explanations in which it abounds. She lived the greater part of her life in widowhood, and longs for the end.

We met in the Scalp church April 26, for the purpose of organizing our Sunday-school for the summer. Brethren J. E. Blough and A. S. Hoffman are the Superintendents. There are over 250 names on the class books, but the average attendance is not much over half that number. We combined the brethren's and sisters' Bible classes this summer, and find it to be an improvement over the old plan. Eld. Musselman has charge of the class.

Health is good. Crops and fruit of nearly every kind will be abundant. J. E. BLOUGH.

From Grand Junction, Iowa.

OUR love-feast of June 27 and 28 will long be remembered as the first one ever held in this little branch of the church. It was truly a feast to the hungry soul. We did not have a commodious church-house to hold our feast in, as is the case in large churches, but it was held in a large upper room in Bro. Shaddler's barn, and we believe it has done much good to the outside world, as well as the members. We had the privilege of seeing six dear souls buried with Christ in baptism, during the week afterwards.

The heart-cheering songs, the encouraging words, and the earnest appeals to the unconverted at our feast, made all feel that it was good to be there. Better order we never saw at any place, and we believe there are many more seriously counting the cost, who will soon enter the fold. We earnestly desire an interest in the prayers of all God's children, in behalf of this little flock at Grand Junction. Ministering brethren present were brethren M. Sissler, Jas. Goughenour, Diehl and Hipes, of Butler County. The latter stayed with us and continued the meetings one week, with the above results. MARTHA J. IKENBERRY.

On the Way.

JULY 6 I was called to hold a meeting in a school-house in the thick forests of Emmet County, Mich. People in this new country will walk many miles to church. Some drive ox-teams to church. Here, in Northern Michigan, is a great opening for mission work. If some of our Brethren in the older States, who drive nice horses and easy-cushioned buggies to church, could be here and see how some of these people do, I wonder if they would not be willing to offer a greater sacrifice, upon their part, for the Lord?

I have been solicited to preach in four different towns since here. If I were only so situated, I would stay here the rest of the summer, and preach for these people. In mid-winter the snow gets too deep, and weather is too cold to hold successful meetings.

July 7 I went north to Levering, to see my brother, Daniel D. Miller, whom I had not seen for ten years. Our meeting was a pleasant one. Five of us children are living in four different States, going as far west as Oregon.

Forest fires at present are raging in Northern Michigan. No rain has fallen during the summer, and there is much timber growing that will easily burn in dry weather, such as pine, hemlock, cedar, and a small shrub, growing in most of the woods, called "ground hemlock." All these are full of pitch, and, when once exposed to fire, will give the settlers much trouble. Thousands of acres of valuable timber-land are being destroyed.

How strange the seasons are in different parts of the world! Recent reports in GOSPEL MESSENGER show that in Kansas the crops are suffering from too much rain. Canadians tell us that the drouth district extends over into Western Canada, and they experience much suffering there, for the want of rain.

July 9 I held a meeting in Levering,—a small town on the Grand Rapids & Indiana R. R. This town has no church-house, and meetings are held in a hall. The Methodist people talk of building a house of worship soon. Some of these people tell me that I was the first brother they ever heard preach. Some wondered how a Dunkard minister looked, and how he would preach. I told them we, as other ministers, preach from the Bible, and hold that book very sacred,—so sacred that we believe it necessary to obey a whole Gospel, preach and practice all of God's revealed Word through Jesus and the apostles. To this no one objected, and all felt pleased with our doctrine.

July 11 and 12 I preached in the U. B. church in Clarion, south of Petoskey. The attendance was good, and many strongly invited me back again. Bro. Hufford preaches here regularly.

After the Sunday-school was over (which was held after the forenoon meeting), an old lady from Chicago was called upon to address the school. She spoke in an interesting manner. The lady is a Quaker, eighty-two years of age. Her zeal for the Master's cause is strong, and her work during life, from thirteen years of age, was mostly devoted to the young. This aged lady is plainly dressed. Her attire is similar to that of our sisters, and she is not ashamed to wear the prayer covering.

July 13 found me seated in the Grand Rapids Union Depot, waiting for the train. Many trains are moving, with their living mass of human beings, north, getting away from the hot and smothering districts of the South. If only people were as much interested to purchase a ticket for a summer resort over a road where people need not return,—where excessive heat or cold never come,—where a genial and mild climate is ever found,—where sickness, sorrow, pain or death never come!

I had under contemplation a visit to Ionia County, to visit the Thornapple church, but my wife's ill health, and other hinderances, came in the way. The Lord overrules all for our good! The members in the Lower Peninsula of Michigan are very anxious to have more preaching. Some have promised to unite with the church at some future time. I do not know of any place in the States where preaching is more needed than in Northern Michigan. I see the State District is not able to heed all the calls made. One good, active minister should be located there with those now in the field, and help to push the good work along. I will return home to-day.

J. H. MILLER.

Grand Rapids, Mich., July 13.

Good News.

WE again come to you bringing good news. Last Sunday two more young people were buried with Christ in baptism and arose, we trust, to walk in newness of life. May they, by the help of the Lord, become worthy exponents of his cause, and strive daily to cultivate and adorn their lives with such Christian graces as will lead them to a higher, holier and better life.

Since the 20th of May, ten precious souls have come out on the Lord's side and were received into the church by baptism, and one reclaimed. O, may they be bright and shining lights, and may they ever remember that the crown is not in the beginning, but at the close of life, and when they meet with difficulties and afflictions as they journey through this life, may they not forget that we have a friend in Jesus!

He who chooses all our changes could spare us every grief and affliction and take us to the better world without suffering; but for the good of our souls he has laid the hand of affliction upon some of us. Our sorrows reach beyond the grave and prepare us for a more abundant entrance into the everlasting kingdom. For our light affliction, which is but for a moment, worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory. Do not forget to read the Bible, for in it you will find many glorious promises of which you will probably never know if you neglect to read the Bible. "Search the Scriptures, for in them ye think ye have eternal life, and they are they which testify of me." MAGGIE E. FLORY.

In the Field.

WIFE and I left our home in Greene, Iowa, May 7, en route for wherever we can do good. I do not think it necessary for me to give all of our travels, but will say that we visited many dear brethren, sisters and friends, and attended four love-feasts, which we enjoyed very much. We want to speak of the last one more particularly, because it was held near Grundy Junction, Greene Co., Iowa, the first meeting of the kind ever held in that part of Iowa. The brethren and sisters prepared for the occasion a large upper room in a barn, which was all that could be desired. It made us think of the time when the Blessed Master met with his disciples in that upper room. The meeting was truly a glorious one.

At the close we saw there was such an interest that we thought it best to stay with them a few days. Although it was a very busy time with the farmers, still we staid and tried to preach the Word as best we could, preaching in all eight sermons after the close of the feast. There were six additions by baptism, and many more are counting the cost.

We wish to say to our dear brethren in the ministry that there is a little band of members at the above-named place, with Bro. S. E. Eikenberry as their minister, and they greatly desire that the Brethren come and help build up the cause.

We are now in Des Moines, and have commenced a series of meetings here,—the first series of meetings ever held in this great city by our Brethren. We have quite an interest so far, and there are requests for the meetings to continue. May we have the prayers of all our dear Brotherhood! Dear brethren, when we look about us we see on every side human souls starving for the Bread of Life. May God help us to work!

WM. C. HIPES.

The Old Folks' Home.

THE old people at the Old Folks' Home, Mexico, Ind., enjoy themselves together like children. One who is around occasionally gets some real cute points. A correspondent of a Peru (Ind.) paper recently visited the Home, and relates the following which may be read by some young people to advantage:

"After supplying the table for the large family, there were four bushels of strawberries picked for market one morning at the Home. The small patch set apart for that luscious fruit is made to yield an enormous crop. Not only the strawberries show the mark of a master hand, but everything on the grounds is kept growing by the best of tillage, which gives healthy exercise for the aged inmates whose health will permit them to do this light work. By the way, one of the aged men, whose name we cannot now recall, who is a German, hit the key-note of good health the other day when he said to the Superintendent: 'Now, Frank,' meaning Bro. Frank Fisher, the Manager, 'you shust must go and get a load of wood for me to saw, or I gets sick.' This aged man takes great delight in preparing and getting in the fuel, and rightly realizes that the exercise in doing so is a great promoter of health, a lesson that some of our sickly-looking young men who lie in bed until their mothers get breakfast ready would do well to heed."

Self-Examination.

[THE following article was mislaid; hence this delay. It, however, contains some good thought, and we make room for it now.—ED.

Since meeting with the misfortune, which fastens me to this couch,—during my wakeful moments and hours of comparative comfort the above subject suggested itself to my mind, and the more forcibly, as the time approached for the love-feast at Marsh Creek. Although I cannot hope to be present on that occasion, the necessity of a thorough and prayerful consideration of the subject becomes apparent, hence I will endeavor to make a few remarks which all of us, who are invited to eat and drink, may consider.

If we are of those who profess to have died to sin, to have renounced the hidden things of darkness, have we realized, in eating and drinking, an increase of spiritual strength? If we have, this increase will reflect itself upon others, whose souls are equally precious,—and many will be forced to acknowledge their sins. These are truly the children of God, who realize their acceptance with him.

Again. If, upon a careful examination of our hearts and lives, we see what wondrous results may be accomplished in us and in others, do we grasp the sacred emblems in order that they may give us new vigor and increased devotion to the cause of Christ, that, with redoubled energy, we may "go on unto perfection?" Or are we content, forgetful of the object to be attained through an application of the saving ordinances of God's house?

Another consideration should arouse a concern in us.

Why is it that another, and still another privilege is given us to participate in these sacred yet joyful exercises? It is because more of life's trials are to be met, more of self to overcome, more victories over sin to be won, and more of our influence to be exerted over the children of men.

But we cannot perceive how it is possible for us, in our finite natures, even to merit such great blessings as are set forth in the Divine Record; nor should we. Our sufficiency is in Jesus, and he only can make us worthy to approach his table. Then let us, at every recurring Communion season, examine ourselves, and so let us eat of that bread, and drink of that cup, for Jesus says, Unless "ye eat of my flesh and drink of my blood, ye have no life (spiritual circulation) in you."

B. F. KITTINGER.

Death of David Minnich Fogelsanger.

IN the Ridge Church, Cumberland Co., Pa., June 18, 1891, Bro. David Minnich Fogelsanger passed away at the age of fifty-five years and sixteen days.

He was the fourth of our official members removed from time to eternity in about two months. Two of our deacons were buried the same day. Last year, on his way to the Annual Meeting, when in St. Louis, Bro. David, with others, ran to the train. He being weak in body, could not withstand over-exertion, and soon complained of failing health.

He, with his wife, went to the Meeting, but not feeling well, did not enjoy himself. With his wife and son he started for home. Being for several days and nights without rest and sleep, he was very much broken down in health upon his arrival at home. His physician said all he needed was rest and quiet. In a few weeks he was able to attend to his business again. He seemed to preach with more than usual zeal and earnestness, and during the fall and winter baptized six or seven, being apparently quite well.

Jan. 23 he sat up with Bro. H. S. Neff, who was suffering great pain. This was too much for his strength, and completely unstrung his nerves, and from that time his health gave way, and he grew worse until the morning of June 18, when he breathed his last.

May 11, 1864, he, with his wife and sister-in-law, was baptized. June 5, 1867, the church elected him to the ministry. Since that time he has been faithful to his calling. Oct. 16, 1872, he was advanced in the ministry.

Bro. Fogelsanger always had the good of the church at heart, never shunned to do his duty, and was always willing to serve the church whenever called upon. Among his last words to those around were, "Keep close to Jesus; keep close to his Word."

Funeral services were held at the house by Eld. J. F. Stamy and Henry Etter, and at the church by Eld. J. F. Oller and S. Stouffer from these words: "He was a good man, full of the Holy Ghost and faith." Interment at the Fogelsanger cemetery.

J. R. FOGELSANGER.

Europe Bound.

As everything is now arranged, and all seeming hindrances removed, it is but right that your many readers should know that the Mission Board desires me to accompany our dear brother, D. L. Miller, and wife, on their mission of love through Scandinavia. We would ask a few favors of as many as would earnestly enter into the work and grant them:

1. Let us have your prayers,—in behalf of my family that remains in Herington, Kansas, and also for myself who shall go away.

2. Please write once in a while, some of you, to my wife and children, to encourage them. This they need, and all,—both young and old,—can give it.

3. God has promised somewhere that his Spirit shall rest in North-land. Years ago we had but an inaccurate history about our foreign missions. Now an accurate account, both verbal and printed, will be scattered, comprising a larger territory than ever before. Let all, interested in mission work, pray for a special blessing, from now on as long as it is allotted us, unitedly to co-operate there. Asking in faith, we have the promise of receiving.

With these requests I say, "Farewell, dear brethren and sisters, till we meet again, either here or in a better land." CHR. HOPE.

Herington, Kans., July 7, 1891.

From the West Branch Church, Ill.

JULY 4 the brethren and sisters of the West Branch church met in quarterly council. Not much business came before the meeting, but all was disposed of in love and union, to the satisfaction of all.

This church seems to be moving along in the even tenor of her way. Love and union seem to pervade every heart. Two were received into the church by letter, and three letters were granted to some who have moved away.

On Sunday, June 28, two were received by confession and baptism. The brethren have a prosperous Sunday-school, superintended by Bro. B. F. Stouffer, assisted by brethren Calvin Binkley and John Dierdorff, and a full corps of officers and teachers. May the good cause continue to prosper every-where to the upbuilding of Zion, is my prayer! CLEORA E. WALLACE.

Notes from Our Correspondents.

"As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

TWO BAPTIZED.—The Berkeley church, W. Va., received ten members by letter in the spring of 1890. May 24 of this year we received a sister by baptism. June 21 her husband became willing to be baptized. We have hopes that others will come to follow Christ in baptism.—John Brindle, Martinsburg, W. Va., July 6.

QUARTERLY COUNCIL. — The brethren of the Rockton congregation met in quarterly council April 11, and decided to hold their love-feast Aug. 21, at 3 P. M. We also met in quarterly council July 11, and further agreed to hold a series of meetings in connection with our love-feast. Bro. J. C. Johnson was selected to be with us at these meetings to do the preaching and officiate at the feast.—V. V. Clouser, Rockton, Pa., July 15.

ONE RESTORED.—Our love-feast at the Sunfield church, Mich., will occur Oct. 17, commencing at 10 A. M. The usual invitation has been extended. All those coming by rail will please stop at Sunfield, two and one-half miles north of the church. Our old and much respected sister, wife of Bro. Christian Frantz, is sick and was anointed this afternoon by elders B. F. Fryfogle and Isaiah Rairigh, in presence of a number of brethren, sisters and others. At Bismark, on the same day, one precious soul was received back into the church again. Bro. Adam Shaffer of this place is quite ill, but seems to be resigned to the will of God. May God bless us all!—S. C. Smith, Sunfield, Mich., July 5.

SERIES OF MEETINGS AND LOVE-FEAST.—The Cameron church, Mo., purposes holding a series of meetings in the Free Methodist church, of Cameron, to commence Aug. 14 and continue over two Sundays. A love-feast will be held on the evening of Aug. 22. There will be no eating at the church, excepting the Lord's Supper. Bro. J. S. Mohler, of Kansas, is to do the preaching. —J. B. Sell, Cameron, Mo.

PLEASANT COUNCIL. — The members of the Wallace congregation held their council-meeting July 4. All business brought before the meeting was disposed of in a Christian way, and according to the Gospel. On account of our elder not being present, we deferred some business till such a time when he could be with us. Five were added to our little church by letter. This gives our little band nineteen members in all.—Allen Cripe, Wallace, Nebr.

CHURCH TO BE ORGANIZED.—The brethren and sisters met in council at the residence of the undersigned and, by unanimous voice, have concluded to form an organization here, Aug. 15. They have the promise of the assistance of Bro. James R. Gish, of Arkansas, at that time. At the same time we will hold Communion services, and we extend a hearty welcome to all who may be with us. They will be met at Esterly, on the Southern Pacific railroad, by notifying me. We now number twenty-one members, with bright prospects for the future. Pray for the little band in Louisiana!—S. A. Sutter, Esterly, La., July 4.

HARMONIOUS COUNCIL.—Our quarterly council July 4, was well attended, and we were truly glad that so many of our members were present. Among the business was that of appointing our fall love-feast, which is to be Oct. 17, with a week's meeting prior to the feast. Any of our ministering brethren that contemplate a western trip, will please note this, and try to be with us, to help in the good work. Prospects are good for a crop here. We have had an unusal amount of rain for this country. This is unfavorable for hay-making, but all that the Lord does is well done, and we should not murmur.—G. W. Fesler, Longmont, Colo., July 7.

PLEASANT MEETINGS.—God's children at this place spent a very pleasant Fourth of July at their house of worship. They had a stronger desire to worship God than to mingle with the world. All came to the house of prayer and praise. We had preaching in the forenoon, then, after partaking of refreshments for the body, we had a very pleasant council-meeting. All seemed to be desirous of advancing the work of the Lord. The church agreed to have a Communion the coming fall. We decided to hold a social meeting once a week. Our Sunday-school continued all winter and is growing in interest. Upon the whole, the church is very hopeful, and much encouraged in the Lord's work at this place.—Sidney Hodgden, Moscow, Idaho, July 6.

FOUR ADDITIONS.—Bro. O. J. Beaver, of Fredericksburgh, Chickasaw Co., Iowa, came to us and commenced a series of meetings June 28, and continued until July 5. As an immediate result four precious souls were baptized. Some are seriously considering, and, we think, will soon follow. We had good attendance and the best of attention during our meetings. We hope that, by the united prayers of all, much good may be done here. When death, the great reconciler, has come, it is never our tenderness that we repent of, but our severity. This we should always bear in mind and, by keeping bitter words from our lips, drive them from our hearts. Love we can never regret, but hate may fill our lives with bitterness! —L. E. Broadwater, Greenleafton, Minn.

GROWING IN INTEREST.—Notwithstanding the disadvantages, our little Sunday-school is growing in interest, and we feel that it is surely a soul-reviving institution. We ask the Brethren to remember us before the Lord, that we may grow in zeal and grace and become approved workmen. —M. Colebank, Farnham, Nebr.

MOVING ON STEADILY.—The good work at Osawkie, Kans., is moving on steadily and surely. Bro. David Kimmel, of McLouth is with us at present and preached for us yesterday morning and evening. Our monthly council, on Saturday, proved victorious in work of a very threatening character. We take courage and thank the Lord.—C. C. Root.

DISTRESSING ACCIDENT. — June 8 Eld. Daniel Glick, of the Greenwood church, Texas County, Mo., met with a very serious misfortune. He was taking a load of posts to the railroad, and just as he was driving down, off the railroad,—some of the posts slipped forward with him, causing the team to run away. He fell between the horses, and was badly hurt about the neck and breast. He was taken home by a friend and medical aid was rendered as soon as possible. Upon a careful examination it was found that he had received serious, internal injuries about the throat and right lung. He is receiving all the care that kind hands can administer. He called for the elders of the church and was anointed in the name of the Lord, July 6. The scene was one of deep solemnity. Bro. Glick is resting fairly well, but his recovery is considered very doubtful.—J. J. Troxel, Cabool, Mo.

SAFE AT HOME.—Wife and I arrived safe at home on the last day of June, after being gone just seven months and a half, visiting among Brethren in Nebraska, Iowa, Illinois, Indiana and Pennsylvania, and also attending the late Annual Meeting at Hagerstown, Md. On all our long journey we enjoyed the best of health, and no accident befell us at any time. For all these blessings we feel very thankful to our Heavenly Father. We also thank the kind brethren and sisters everywhere for their kindness and love, shown us in helping us along, so that we could labor among them with courage. We shall long remember all of them, and pray God's blessing to rest on all of them. Everything looks encouraging here. Crops look fine. We have plenty of rain all the time, so all are cheered up! Yesterday we had meeting at our school-house with a good attendance.—John and Susan Snowberger, Holyoke, Colo., July 6.

FALLEN ASLEEP

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

KINGERY.—In the Lower Deer Creek church, Carroll Co., Ind., July 10, 1891, Sylvester Kingery, aged 21 years, 5 months and 7 days.

The above was killed by a railroad locomotive near Camden. Funeral services conducted by Rev. J. G. Tedford, of the Baptist church. S. H. BECHTELHEIMER.

HOFF.—In the Lower Deer Creek church, Carroll County, Ind., July 8, 1891, Bro. Abraham Hoff, aged 36 years, 9 months and 8 days. Funeral services conducted by brethren W. S. Toney and A. J. Flora.
S. H. BECHTELHEIMER.

ADAMS.—In Waynesborough, Pa., April 1, 1891, Jacob Adams, aged about 74 years.

Deceased united with the church in early life. He was a kind father, and led an exemplary life. He was sorely afflicted and confined to his room for several months previous to his death. On the day of his departure, while walking out in the yard, he suddenly fell. On being led into the house, Nancy, his loving wife, saw that he was sinking and helped him to the settee, and in a moment he expired. Bro. Adam was a good man, a kind, affectionate father, a loving husband, and a good neighbor. He was always found in his seat in the church when he was well. After walking many years together in life, sister Nancy is left to finish the journey alone. Three daughters and one son are left, with a dear mother, to mourn the departure of a kind husband and a loving father. May the consolation of his truth and grace abundantly sustain and comfort them! Funeral services were held in the Brethren church in Waynesborough, Pa. The services were conducted by the writer and Eld. Jacob Linder. J. F. OLLER.

LONG.—In the English Prairie church, LaGrange Co., Ind., June 14, 1891, of dropsy, Sarah, wife of Eld. Peter Long, aged 56 years, 7 months and 12 days.

Deceased was born in Holmes County, Ohio, Nov. 2, 1834. She was married to Peter Long June 22, 1854. One daughter blessed their union. Sister Long belonged to the Brethren church for forty years. She was an exemplary Christian, a dutiful wife and a kind mother. A few weeks previous to her death she enjoyed her last communion meeting with the people of God, and was then anointed by Eld. J. C. Murray, much to the strengthening of her faith. Funeral services improved by Eld. Shotts from 2 Tim. 4: 6, 7, 8 to a large concourse of people.
Y. D. YODER.

RONY.—In the Grundy church, Grundy Co., Iowa, June 7, 1891, sister Phebe Rony, daughter of Bro. Michael and sister Anna Myers, aged 25 years, 5 months and 7 days.

Deceased leaves a sorrowing husband, two small children, the oldest about two years, and the other a babe three months of age.

She was sick for nine weeks. Sister Phebe was married to Silas Rony, November, 1888. They moved to Kossuth County, Iowa, March, 1891, from which place her remains were taken to Liscomb, Iowa, for interment.
SIMON ARNOLD.

SHEAFFER.—At the home of her son-in-law, Bro. Wesley Star, at Waddam's Grove, Ill., May 30, 1891, sister Leah Sheaffer, nee Shirk, widow of the late Bro. Martin Sheaffer, aged 71 years, 6 months and 23 days.

Deceased was born at Ephrata, Lancaster Co., Pa., Nov. 7, 1819. She was united in marriage to Bro. Martin Sheaffer in 1839, who preceded her to the spirit world four years ago. She was a consistent member of the church over forty years. She leaves, to mourn her departure, three sons and their wives, four daughters, and three sons-in-law,—all faithful members of the church. One son and two sons-in-law are efficient deacons. Funeral services were conducted by brethren D. B. Eby and Israel Stees, from Philpp. 1: 21 to a large concourse of people.
ALLEN BOYER.

VANDOLAH.—In the Amwell church, N. J., May 5, 1891, Bro. VanDolah, aged 84 years, 11 months and 5 days.

May 8, 1891 we were called upon to pay the last tribute of respect to our old and much esteemed brother, Cyrus VanDolah. He had been a member of the Amwell church for forty-nine years.

During a large portion of that time he was an officer in the church, and was distinguished for his Christian principles, always endeavoring, so far as he knew, to be on the side of right and justice.

Up to within a few weeks of his death, he was among our most regular church attendants. He took a lively interest in all that pertained to the progress and welfare of the church. While we all mourn the loss, both personally and to the church, we are thankful for his long and useful life, the example he gave us, and a character, we believe, above reproach. May God raise up others to take the place of those whom he calls to their happy reward! AMOS H. HAINES.

BRONAUGH.—At his residence in Oskaloosa, Jefferson Co., Kans., of heart trouble, July 5, 1891, Mr. Bronaugh, aged 57 years. Funeral services conducted by the writer from Job 14: 10 and Eccl. 12: 7.
DAVID KIMMEL.

WARNER.—In the bounds of the Walnut Level church, near Reiffsburg, Wells Co., Ind., June 27, Emily Warner, aged 36 years, 8 months and 1 day.

Deceased was the wife of friend David Warner. Seven children blessed their union. One preceded her to the spirit world. She leaves a husband and six children to mourn their loss. May the bereft husband and motherless children put their trust in God, who is ever ready to hear those who call upon him.

The funeral services were conducted in the Methodist church by Bro. Samuel Neher to a large circle of sympathizing friends and neighbors from Eccl. 9: 10.
MALINDA S. STUDEBAKER.

BOURBON.—Near Hodgensville, LaRue County, Ky., May 21, 1891, sister Susan Bourbon, aged 40 years, 9 months and 19 days. She was born in Stokes County, North Carolina.

BOURBON.—At the same place June 31, 1891, Bro. Samuel, son of sister Susan Bourbon, aged 28 years, 11 months and 20 days.

Both died of consumption. Sister Susan, for years, has been a widow, the only daughter of our aged sister Hill, in whose hospitable home we hold our meetings. When Bro. M. G. Hill wrote to our editors that he was an applicant for membership, sister Susan met the move with much criticism, he having been a member of the Baptists for many years, but on our visit she gave attention to the Word preached, became at once interested, and the same day followed her brother and aged mother into the baptismal stream. Her faith was strong, her convictions clear, and she never faltered. She was anointed in the public congregation on our visit to their feast last fall. Her request was, that the prayer-covering be put on her, when prepared for burial.

Bro. Samuel was baptized on our second visit. His short pilgrim life was one of faithfulness. His devotion to the cause was a subject of remark in the neighborhood.

He was anointed on our visit just before his death. Both of the above died calm, peaceful, joyous and happy, for which we praise the Lord! I. J. ROSENBERGER.

PALMER.—At Longmont, Colo., June 25, 1891, Nancy Jane Palmer, aged 61 years, 8 months and 25 days.

She suffered much in her last afflictions, but bore it patiently. Funeral services by the writer to a large attendance of friends.
G. W. FESLER.

SNIDER.—In Lafayette, Ind., June 24, 1891, after a lingering illness of many months, sister Mary Snider, aged 24 years, 6 months and 9 days.

The above sister was buried in Christ just one week before being laid in her final resting place. Funeral services by Eld. Driver.

JONES.—In the bounds of the Wakendah church, Mo., July 3, 1891, of malaria typhoid and inflammation of throat, John Irvin, son of Bro. Edwin F., and sister Sallie M. Jones, aged 8 years and 1 month.

Johnnie's parents moved from Rockingham County, Va., to Carroll County, Mo., in the spring of 1883. On account of two others being sick, the funeral will be held in the future. I. N. MILLER.

NICHOLSON.—At Glendora, Cal., June 7, 1891, sister Jane Nicholson.

She came to California sometime since, for asthmatic trouble, and was staying with her daughter, Mrs. Warrell, of Glendora, Cal. She was the daughter of M. and Susanna Allen, and born in North Carolina, Sept. 6, 1821. She was a member of the Brethren's church for thirty-seven years, and worked zealously in the cause of her Master. It seemed as though she was anxiously awaiting the call, "Come."
S. W. FUNK.

BEEBE.—In the bounds of the Fairview church, Sherman County, Kansas, May 1, 1891, Mrs. Myrtie Beebe, wife of friend John D. Beebe, aged 19 years and 6 months.

Her maiden name was Night. She was a member of the Christian church at the time of her death. Her illness was of short duration. She was not even permitted to speak a parting word to those she loved. Truly in the midst of life we are in death. She leaves a husband and one little daughter,—a father, mother and three brothers to mourn their loss, which, we fondly hope, is her eternal gain. Funeral services by Rev. Pittman.
EMMA B. WELCH.

SHERFY.—In the Limestone church, Tenn., June 28, 1891, Susannah Sherfy, aged 71 years and 9 months.

She was born in Rockingham County, Va., Sept. 28, 1819. Her maiden name was Miller. She came to Washington County, Tenn., when but fourteen years of age. She was married to Joseph Sherfy, Feb 11, 1845. She was a member of the Brethren church for about forty-seven years, and served as deaconess for a number of years. Her Christian walk and conduct were irreproachable, and her seat was rarely vacant in the councils or the devotional meetings of the church. But she will meet with us no more, having gone, we trust, to join the "general assembly and church of the First-born." Her husband preceded her to the spirit land nineteen years. She leaves three children to mourn their loss,—a son and two daughters,—all devoted members of the church.

Her remains were laid to rest in the cemetery at the Limestone church on the morning of June 30. Funeral services were held in the church from Rev. 14: 13, 14. Brethren John Bashor, of Pleasant Valley, Tenn., and M. M. Bashor, of Oregon, were present and took part in the services. J. B. PENCE.

Bible Lessons
FOR YOUNG CHILDREN.

Schools who are not using the International System of Lessons,—such as are found in our Quarterly,—often lack a good help in the instruction of the smaller classes. To supply such a need we have prepared the "Bible Lessons." We have put them within the reach of all,—only five cents per copy, or fifty cents a dozen. Address this office.

An Expert Opinion.

THE "Medical and Surgical Journal" for March 1891, says editorially:

"This pretty little city of Idaho Springs, Colorado, is situated in a beautiful park about 37 miles from Denver, and is about 7,500 feet above sea level. It is thrifty, prosperous, and has become noted for its hot and cold mineral springs, which contain medicinal properties of extraordinary value. Idaho Springs as a health resort cannot be excelled this side of the world-renowned Carlsbad Springs of Germany, whose waters and the waters found at Idaho Springs bear almost an identical chemical analysis.

"In the early stages of consumption these waters, combined with the invigorating air of this beautiful climate, are almost a specific. We take pleasure in recommending these waters to all suffering from coughs and catarrhal affections. It is the best place to go to for the cure of phthisis. Those of our colleagues who have been sending their patients to this grand health resort all join in praising the satisfactory results received from the invigorating waters and climate. We would therefore urge physicians to advise their patients, threatened with consumption, not to procrastinate, but to try, before it is too late, the salutary effects of the waters of Idaho Springs. The Union Pacific are making special efforts to carry the public to and from this famous resort, with all the modern comfort and ease which the tourist seeking health and pleasure can desire." 22–34.

Grand Excursion to Yellowstone National Park and Other Western Resorts.

THE Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," proposes to run, in July, 1891, a grand excursion from Omaha to Yellowstone National Park, Great Shoshone Falls, Idaho, Ogden, Salt Lake City, Garfield Beach, Denver, Clear Creek Canon, the famous Loop, and other points of interest. The Union Pacific will furnish six horse Concord Coaches, which will carry the party from Beaver Canon, Idaho, to and through Yellowstone National Park. These Coaches will also be taken to Shoshone Station, and used for the ride to Great Shoshone Falls.

From Beaver Canon to Yellowstone National Park, the trip will occupy three days going, three days returning, and eight days will be spent in the park. Excellent tents and good equipment for camping out will be furnished by the Union Pacific, en route from Beaver Canon to the Park, and while in the Park the tourists will be quartered at the various hotels.

The very low rate of $250.00 per passenger has been made from Omaha. This rate includes Railroad, Pullman, and Stage Fare, Meals and Hotel bills from the time of leaving Omaha until the return of the excursion, in all 30 days. No half fare rates.

Only thirty-five passengers can be accommodated, and as accommodations are limited EARLY APPLICATION for same should be made.

In ordering tickets, send money for same by express, to Harry P. Deuel, City Ticket Agent, U. P. System, 1302 Farnam St., Omaha, Nebraska.

No children will be allowed on this trip. For further information relative to this excursion and itinerary, apply to Excellent Educational Facilities.

Judging from the number of letters pouring in daily, scores of the best young people from all parts of the country mean to take advantage of these facilities in September, and from present indications, hundreds more will be heard from in the near future.

Some who expect to attend State Normals are making arrangements to take our Teacher's Course and secure a State certificate. Others decide to take our Commercial or Short-hand course, and not a few will take the Special course in Penmanship. We know of no way in which so much can be secured for the same outlay of time and money, as by taking one or more of the above courses. Too many parents forget that they are responsible not only for what they teach their children, but also for what they allow others to teach them. Were they fully aware of the above fact, many of them would by no means send their children to those largely advertised, cheap schools, where many of our most talented young people are led into the way of infidelity. In such cases who is really to blame?

Write and tell us why you are not coming to Mt. Morris.

Garfield Beach on Great Salt Lake, Utah.

THE famous health resort, Garfield Beach, on Great Salt Lake, 18 miles from Salt Lake City, is reached viâ the Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," and is now open for the season.

This is the only real sand beach on Great Salt Lake, and is one of the finest bathing and pleasure resorts in the West. Owing to the stimulating effect of the brine on the skin, or the saline air upon the lungs the appetite is stimulated, and after a bath, the bathers are ready for a hearty meal, and feel greatly invigorated.

Fine bath-houses, accommodating 400 people, have been erected at Garfield Beach, in connection with which there is a first-class restaurant and a fine, large pavillion built out over the lake. All of these are run by the Union Pacific, which guarantees a first-class resort in every respect.

For complete description of Garfield Beach and Great Salt Lake, send to E. L. Lomax, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent, Omaha, for copies of "Sights and Scenes in Utah," or "A Glimpse of Great Salt Lake." 22–34.

BUY for yourself and family a copy of the "Life and Sermons of Eld. James Quinter." You can place nothing better in your home and on your table. It will prove a living inspiration for good to every one that reads its pages. Only $1.25, post-paid.

"THAT man is in darkness who never brings himself forth into the living presence of the Most High; who never brings his thoughts, his aims, his principles, his works to the test of some high and unfailing standard, even the standard of the divine righteousness and truth."

Do we ever take to heart truly that our children are largely a reproduction of our own lives? Whether we do so or not, it is none the less true. But we wonder at it, as though some strange thing had happened, and yet it is the most reasonable thing in the world. What else can a child be than that which it receives from its surroundings. On these it feeds and grows, so that every thought expressed and every act done is a reproduction of that which it has received from its surroundings. Yes, like begets like, and every seed after its kind. Though this law is inexorable, the planting and molding is ours. We have the privilege of molding our own lives for good and in this way we can mold the lives of others. We are molding and being molded every day, and it is well if this molding is of God.

BRO. W. J. SWIGART is now in Ohio, doing some preaching and working for the school. We hope that he may be successful in both.

WE have been made sorry to learn of the illness of Eld. J. F. Oller, of Waynesborough, Pa. On last hearing from him, his condition was critical and fears were entertained that it might prove serious. We hope and pray that the Lord will restore him again to the church and to his family.

THE Aughwick brethren held their harvest meeting on last Saturday. Bro. J. B. Brumbaugh conducted the services. The harvest this year has been one of more than ordinary fullness, and we should not only be very thankful for it, but should use it in a way that will be a glory to the Bountiful Giver.

ROBBINS' circus stranded in our town last week and this week was sold by the sheriff. Connected with it were almost one hundred men and women, many of them young men who ran away from the restrictions of home. The whole represented the lower and rougher class. That a gang of this kind should be supported in their idleness and wickedness by Christian communities, is an unfavorable comment on the morals and religion of our County, and that it should be disbanded by the sheriff, is a hopeful indication. Why spend our hard-earned money for that which can only lead to demoralization, poverty and sin? No, such institutions are not needed, and the sooner the country gets rid of them, the better.

WE are glad to learn that a number of our church Districts have under contemplation the erection of an "Old Folks' Home." This is a move in the right direction, and should receive the hearty encouragement and support of our membership every-where. The committee, appointed by the Middle District of Pennsylvania, for the purpose of making the necessary preparations for a home of this kind, expect to hold a meeting some time in September. Any of the churches having suitable locations to offer, or suggestions make, should send them to the Chairman of the Committee, Andrew Spanogle, Lewistown, Pa. The essentials to a good location are convenience to railroad station, stores and post-office, clear, fertile land, at a low price, and good water. Good railroad facilities are more important than a central location.

REGENERATION AND CONVERSION.

SOME years ago a young man came before an Examining Board for the purpose of getting a license to preach. Among other questions, he was asked the difference between regeneration and conversion. He promptly replied: "I have not been in the habit of making any." With surprise the Moderator exclaimed: "The young brother could not have understood the question." He repeated it but received the same answer.

The Board decided that this young man would not be a fit person to feed a flock and rejected him.

We were made to wonder if all of our ministers were to be examined by a board of this kind, how many would be accepted. The question is a vital one and should be carefully investigated. To do this, it will be necessary to get a clear definition of the words, as used in the Bible. This is the true basis upon which Biblical interpretations must be made, as we want to get the use of words when made.

The simple word, used eighteen times in the New Testament, rendered only once "converted" (Matt. 18: 3) is elsewhere translated "turned." Its compound, found in Luke 22: 32, used forty times, is, in nine cases, rendered "convert" and elsewhere "turn." In four out of ten cases the passage in Isaiah 6: 10 is quoted, and in four out of the remaining six instances, the word "conversion" refers to a change that occurs in those who have long been disciples of Christ.

To the disciples, in the presence of a child, it was said: "Except ye be converted (strepho, to turn) and become as little children, ye shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Matt. 6: 3. And to Peter Christ said: "When thou art converted (Epistrepho, to turn) strengthen thy brethren." These and many other Scriptures that might be given seem to confine conversion to such as have made a start in the divine life but have either fallen or backslidden, and to be saved need turning about. We will stop right here and look at the other word, regeneration (paliggia) to create anew or a re-creation. Nicodemus was not told that he must be converted, but he must be born again which is equivalent to being re-created or regenerated. The convicted ones, on the day of Pentecost, were not commanded to be converted but to "repent and be baptized" in which we have the elements and sign of regeneration, or, as John puts it, "being born anew or from above."

Now, if conversion means to "turn" in the new life, and if a man cannot turn until after he has started, and if a start cannot be made until he is regenerated or born again, then we are prepared to make the following summation: Regeneration is the giving of new life to the spirit dead in sin; and conversion is the act, instantaneously put forth by that new-born spirit, in turning to God; an act repeated after every successive wandering. The last clause should be emphasized to get the Biblical view of conversion.

In our presenting this view, perhaps it would be well for us to follow parliamentary rulings and say: "Be it understood that this decision annuls all decisions heretofore made. We put it on its passage. Who objects?

Our object is not to open a discussion but to start some careful thought along this line, and thus enable us, as ministers and Bible students, to give an intelligent expression on these and other important Biblical subjects. "Study to show thyself approved" is still in force and there was no time that it was needed more than now.

ESSAYS.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God; a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth."

THE REAPER'S REWARD.

BY SADIE BRALLIER NOFFSINGER.

FIRM he stood amongst the reapers in the Master's vineyard, toiling
With a strength repressing faintness, as the noonday hour drew near;
Binding sheaves of priceless value, gleaned 'neath scorching suns, for heaven;
When God's own, dear voice in mercy, sounded on his wond'ring ear:

"Come, thou good and faithful servant! Leave the vineyard hot and dreary.
Lo, the rest which thou hast labored long and earnestly to win,
Now awaiteth thee. Why wonder? Gladly cast aside thy sickle, Lift thine eye far, far beyond thee; view thy home and enter in!"

Then the veil was rent asunder, and the pearly gate was opened.
Harp of gold, and voice of seraph were attuned to joyful song.
Rays more dazzling far than the sunshine, streamed from out the "many mansions,"
While the angels swung a ladder to the earth and echoed, "Come!"

Sweetly, joyously, he answered: "Lord, I come to thee most gladly!
I believed in thy rich mercy. Lo, the recompense is great!
I was lost and thou restored me. I had sinned and thou didst pardon.
Alleluiah!" and his spirit floated through the pearly gate.

Oh, we weep! but tears of sorrow flow not from our hearts' full fountains.
We rejoice that thou art sheltered in a home so fair and blest!
Fain we, too, would wing our spirits, cumbered with earth's heavy burdens,
To that dwelling, where our Father giveth his beloved rest.

PEACE ON EARTH AND GOOD WILL TO MEN.

BY B. F. MOOMAW.

Number Three.

MR. GROVE has made an ingenious effort to maintain the right of self-defense, reasoning from the nature of things, but he has failed to give us a "thus saith the Lord." (See Buck's Dictionary under the head of "Self-Defense.") Bishop Scott, in his commentary upon Matt. 5: 38, 39, tells us, "A single exception is wanting to this general rule." "While," he says, "under the judicial regulation revenge and defense were allowed, Christ declared that the moral law required the reverse of this vindictive spirit and conduct. His disciples are not allowed to resist evil either by violent opposition or litigious law-suits. In the present state of human nature there is no need of exceptions; self-love will suffice and more than suffice."

From these investigations we are forced to the conclusion that the whole theory of self-defense, either individually or nationally, rests upon human reasoning, without the aid of any support from the Gospel.

This being the case, let us, for a moment, examine the dangerous consequences of such a mode of reasoning and see if we are not in danger of falling into a species of infidelity, or, at least, deteriorating the validity of the Word of God.

In connection with this subject our author says, "This natural law of self-defense is implanted in our nature by God himself, and if the Bible teaches contrary to this, we have two laws contrary to each other, emanating from the same Perfect and Holy God, who is unchangeable. This is simply an absurdity, and would destroy the perfect character of God. This, then, affords us a strong presumptive proof that the Bible does not forbid defensive war."

What are we to understand by this? Is it that our principles are not to be controlled by the Bible, but that the Bible shall be tried by this law of nature, implanted in us? Let us try this theory and see where we will arrive. We will have to conclude that the Word of God must be made to support certain human opinions, or forfeit all claims to our faith, and, may I not say that this very theory is the legitimate cause of our present distress? By such a course we are not only setting up our notions of the teachings of the Word of God as a higher law, but we are setting up an assumed law in our nature, depraved as that nature is, as still a higher law. When sinful men assume such prerogatives, may we not tremble for our liberties? Hear Barnes in his application of this theory to his favorite subject: "There are great principles in our nature as God has made us, which can never be set aside by any authority of a professed revelation. If a book, claiming to be a revelation from God, by any fair interpretation defended slavery, or was not in accordance with these great principles of our nature, it could not be received by the mass of mankind as a Divine Revelation." "This assumption," says De Bow, "that men are capable of judging beforehand what is to be expected in a Divine Revelation is the cockatrice's egg from which in all ages heresies have been hatched. This is the spider's web, which men have spun out of their own brains, and, clinging to which they have attempted to swing over the yawning abyss of infidelity."

When a man sets up the great principles of his nature, by which is always meant his own opinions, as the supreme tribunal by which the law of God must be tried, -when a man says that the Bible must teach certain doctrines or I will not receive it, he has already cut loose from the sheet anchor of faith. True belief says, "Speak, Lord, thy servant heareth," but unbelief says, "Speak, Lord, but speak in accordance with the natural laws of self-defense, or it will not be received as Divine Revelation. Indeed it seems clear to me that when we set up this law of human nature as a rule for our faith and practice, we have no rule at all, and everything would run into anarchy and confusion. Every man's opinions would be his rule of action, and the imagination being a fruitful soil, will produce anything the inclination may desire.

The next argument presented by the gentleman is, that the Old Testament is a revelation from the same God as the New, and Christ says, "I am not come to destroy the law or the prophets, but to fulfill" (or cause to be fulfilled or obeyed). Why foist upon us these unauthorized interpolations? Does the gentleman not know that "Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth"? It was not the design of Christ to destroy the law or the prophets; he came not to destroy but to fulfill. The law was a shadow of good things to come and Christ was to fulfill the intent of it, and to hold forth the truths and blessings, typified by it, in a plain and intelligent manner.

The moral law he came to fulfill, by perfectly obeying it, as the surety of his people, in his life, sufferings and doctrine, and in all this we have no encouragement for violence in precept or example. The fulfillment of legal types, and the prophecies of the Old Testament, concerning the Messiah and his kingdom must be intended, as well as the establishment of the moral law, in full honor and authority. As above stated, the history of the life and doctrine of Christ and his apostles, is the plainest and most intelligible commentary that can be given upon the true design of this moral law, and that the law, as understood and practiced under the former legal dispensation, differs from that enjoined by Christ, as regards requirements. I cannot see how any intelligent man can deny, that under the law it was allowed to take an oath, but the law of Christ says, "I say unto you, Swear not at all." Under the law of Moses it was admissible to "take an eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth." "But I say unto you," says Christ, "that you resist not evil."

Here we see that there is no exception allowed whatever. The lesson designed is that we should not violently resist evil under any circumstances, but, in imitation of our Savior's example, submit all things to him that judges righteously.

Further, in proof of this proposition, that the law is changed, we refer to the declaration of the apostle to the Hebrews, seventh chapter. Here he informs us that perfection was not attainable under the Levitical priesthood, for under it the people received the law which could not make the comers thereunto perfect. If that had been the height of perfection, there would not have been any need that another priest should have arisen after the order of Melchisedec. "For the priesthood being changed there is made of necessity a change of the law." The former covenant was made after the law of a carnal commandment, but the present after the power of an endless life, for the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did, by which we draw nigh unto God.

Although that dispensation was a revelation from God, he chose, in his wisdom, to reserve the more perfect state of his church for this time, under which it is our privilege to live, by which we may draw nigh, and approximate nearer to the character of God, be like him "and see him as he is," as seen in the life and character of his Son, -the Savior of the world, of whom it is said, "Of his government and peace there shall be no end."

All this I do not understand to be at all inconsistent with the attributes of the unchangeable God. He, who sees the end from the beginning, has he not had in his divine mind all these dispensations, and, for his own wise purposes, determined the peculiar regulations in each of them, respectively? Then, if he should vary the ritual, shall he be charged with inconsistency?

We will farther proceed to show that, whatever our notions of right or wrong may be, it all amounts to nothing if it is not supported by the Word of God, and that what he commands is right, and what he forbids is wrong. To see how much these commands may vary under different circumstances, let us go "to the law and to the testimony." When God commanded Joshua to besiege Jericho, he commanded that all that pertained to the citizens thereof should be destroyed or consecrated to the Lord, and because Achan disregarded this command, it went ill with him, but afterwards, when the children of Israel were commanded to go against Ai, he told them to do unto Ai and her king, as they had done to Jericho; only the spoil thereof they should take for a prey unto themselves. Then it was right to take the spoil because the Lord had allowed it.

As to the great law of love to which our author refers, this is the principle for which we are contending, for this is the message that you have heard from the beginning, that we should love one another, not as Cain, who was of that wicked one and slew his brother, but, as we may reasonably infer, as Abel who submitted without any attempt at defense.

We do not deny that in the Old Testament wars were commanded by God, and because he so commanded, it was right, and it would have been wrong if they had not obeyed. This is the principle for which we are contending, and when God commands, we will fight, but as we have fairly proven that all his precepts and examples under this dispensation forbids it, we cannot conscientiously do it.

I here repeat that presuming to do what God has not made it our duty or privilege to do, is the very thing that has brought all our miseries upon us, but if our friend will show us a "thus saith the Lord," that it would be right to participate in this conflict, it will suffice, for it certainly requires more courage to stand in the position that we occupy, with the invectives and persecutions that we have to endure, than it would require to stand in the front of the battle, with the encomiums of the masses, representing popular sentiment.

THE WORLD RELIGIOUSLY FROM A PANORAMIC STAND-POINT.

BY P. S. MYERS.

A SHORT time ago I saw a chart, in the form of a tree, with the portrait of John Wesley at the root,—the branches representing the numerous divisions of the Wesleyan church. The writer boasted of the numerous branches, as reflecting great credit on the founder, John Wesley.

Now the diagram proves one of two things,—either John Wesley's foundation was defective, or, if not, then those who departed laid aside a good foundation, and are now founded on error. If it be a fact that the numerous branches that grow out of any organization reflect credit, and are a subject of boasting, then the world is in a very creditable condition at the present time. Then the church, established by Jesus Christ, has grown indeed like Nebuchadnezzar's tree, until it has filled the whole earth.

The chart further says that "the leaves (doctrines of the church) were for the healing of the nations." If so, then this tree that the world represents with its multiplied branches, its foliage of human doctrines, garnished with the fruits of the flesh and filled with the sap of unbelief, certainly forms a spectacle that might astonish angels. But a holy watchman will come down from heaven and cut down the tree. He will cut off the branches and he will shake off the fruit as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, and scatter its leaves (doctrines) as chaff before the storm. "Every tree that my Heavenly Father hath not planted, shall be rooted up." John says, "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins and that ye receive not of her plagues. For her sins have reached unto heaven, for she saith in her heart, I sit a queen and am no widow and shall see no sorrow. Rejoice thou barren that barest not, for the desolate hath many more children than she which hath a husband."

Luther and Wesley may boast of their numerous daughters, yet each have married a husband of their own choosing, and yet are a unit with the spirit of the mother that the sword is the end of all strife. The church of Jesus Christ is represented as a vine, with all its branches bearing the same fruit.

A tree with Jesus at the root, with its branches reaching up to heaven and spread to the four quarters of the earth, while not two branches are bearing the same fruit and yet all claim to be produced by the same sap, is indeed a spiritual anomaly. To-day, if you do not eat fruit from every branch, and praise its excellence, you are regarded as bigoted and selfish. The spirit of the times is, "You eat of my fruit and I will eat of yours." Thousands unite with religious bodies, knowing neither the foundation nor builder.

In consequence of these facts we felt the necessity of getting up a diagram, showing the relative condition of religious bodies, that, instead of boasting of the many offshoots, we should be led to see the mistake and go to the fountain-head.

There is much in church history that is of great importance to souls seeking the truth, that is locked in silence. One very common idea is, that all denominations are the result of the Reformation, that all are but daughters of Rome, and but a branch of one common family.

There were those who never yielded to the beast, but were the persecuted ones. The Reformation was a great event in the world's history, in procuring the religious liberties of the people, but it did not restore primitive Christianity. There is a line that never imbrued its hands with the blood of the saints, but furnished the persecuted. Take the Reformation and all the host that sprang out from it, and they are no nearer the apostolical church to-day, than the church of Rome, nor have they lost one jot or tittle of her spirit,—the sword is the end of strife.

There always has been a line through which the divine character was promulgated, until it was made manifest in visible and tangible form in the person of Jesus Christ, and so there has been and will be a line, through which the life and character of Jesus Christ is exemplified until he comes again. Our diagram clearly exhibits that line, and that it never had to protest to get back, and also that but one church was founded by Jesus Christ, but, through dissatisfaction and a disposition to improve on things pertaining to the way of salvation, it started out in search of the elixir of life, until lost in the jungle of human creeds, disciplines and unbeliefs.

The arrangement of the several classes, represented by the different colors, are the natural result of historical compilation, so, the more it is studied, the more prominent the truth, that like begets like. We believe if the view of the religious world could be placed before the thousands who are being misguided, they would be led to consider the source of the organization, as well as the doctrine they advocate before entering. Behold the axe is laid at the root of the trees! "Every tree that bringeth not forth good fruit shall be hewn down."

IF THE HEART IS RIGHT, ALL IS RIGHT.

BY A. HUTCHISON.

Number One.

THAT the above is true, none will dare deny, but we must have a true standard by which to test the heart. It is claimed by some that the heart itself will testify. This must be very risky, as will be plainly apparent to every one when we call the Scriptures into requisition.

Jeremiah says, "The heart is deceitful above all things, and desperately wicked: who can know it?" Jer. 17: 9. This looks very much as though the heart would not do to depend upon in matters of so much moment. Solomon does not make the case any better for the man who trusts to his heart. He says, "He that trusteth in his own heart is a fool." Prov. 28: 26. This makes the case look very dark for such as are depending upon their heart, or their emotional feelings, to tell them if they are right.

In the same verse, last cited, we have the following: "But whoso walketh wisely, he shall be delivered." The next thing to be determined, is to ascertain who is walking wisely. We will call upon Jesus to tell us. He says, "Whosoever heareth these sayings of mine, and doeth them, I will liken him unto a wise man which built his house upon a rock." Matt. 7: 24. You will observe that in this case we have something solid to build upon and the highest authority for it.

But, again, we hear persons affirming in very strong terms, that the conscience is entirely safe, as a guide in matters of religion. As to this, a question of serious doubts arises. Let us listen to Jesus on this question also. He testifies as follows: "They shall put you out of the synagogues: yea, the time cometh, that whosoever killeth you will think that he doeth God service." John 16: 2.

Here you will notice that it is possible that persons may think they are doing God service, and at the same time killing the true servants of God. Now we must admit that when any one thinks that he is doing God's will, his conscience approves, and, therefore, says it is right. Do you suppose that such persons' hearts are all right? The verdict will come in from every quarter that such persons are far, far from being right. But, we inquire, why not right? If the conscience is a safe guide, they certainly have that, when they think they are doing God service. But since it must be clear to every reflecting mind that the heart, the emotional feelings and the conscience are all unreliable witnesses in the case, let us look for something that is not deceptive. We will turn to the Word of Inspiration. Jesus says, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine." John 7: 17. Again, the apostle John says, "And hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments." 1 John 2: 3. Here you discover no uncertain sound.

THREE DAYS AND THREE NIGHTS.

BY N. D. UNDERHILL.

AS I have read only one article in your paper on this subject, not having received the former numbers of the MESSENGER, I do not know how much has been written about it, yet I beg leave to submit my own views, which are held by a good many, it being, I think, a very important subject, which all ought to understand in order to defend the Truth against the arguments of infidelity.

I have often been grieved by hearing ministers of the Gospel, Sunday-school teachers and influential writers advocate the idea that Christ lay in the grave only from Friday evening till Sunday morning,—at most thirty-nine hours, which makes the following passages of Scripture untrue: "After three days I will rise again," "And in three days I will raise it up," "Him God raised up the third day," "To day is the third day since these things were done," "For as Jonas was three days and three nights in the whale's belly, so shall the Son of man be three days and three nights in the heart of the earth," and several other similar passages of Scripture. If all these passages are untrue what is the use of us contending for the truth? Let us examine the facts. Even the Jews do not claim that his body was raised before the third day, but that it was stolen upon the third day, early in the morning or during the night (according to the manner of counting time then, the day began in the evening), while the guards slept. If there was any room to pick a flaw in the Christian's statement of this fact, surely they would take advantage of it. The chief priests and Pharisees doubtless understood that the first day of the week would be the third day after his burial, or they would have deferred setting a watch about the tomb until after the Sabbath, for the watch was not set the first night of his burial but on the next day, that followed the day of preparation, the chief priests and Pharisees went to Pilate to see about having a watch set, lest his body be stolen and his disciples claim that he had risen according to his word.

We are told that he died about the ninth hour, which would be about three o'clock in the afternoon, and was buried the same evening, which was the day of preparation and that the day following was a Sabbath day, - that this particular Sabbath day was an high day, St. John 19: 31, that the women rested on the Sabbath day according to commandment, and that Christ rose early in the morning upon the first day of the week.

Some claim that Christ lay in the grave seventy-two hours, but how could that be when he was buried in the evening and arose in the morning? Let us suppose that he died about 3 o'clock on Thursday afternoon and was hastily buried the same evening in a new tomb, which was near at hand, because of the Jews' preparation day. For what were the Jews so busily preparing and why should the bodies not remain upon the cross that Sabbath day as well as upon any other Sabbath? We answer the last question first: "Because it was an high day. It was doubtless the Paschal Sabbath which fell that year on Friday." Read Lev. 23: 5-7. According to this law, the next day after the Paschal supper was a Sabbath day, no matter what day of the week it came on. Lev. 23: 15; Ex. 12: 14, 46.

Christ, then, was buried and lay in the grave a few hours on Thursday afternoon. Then the Paschal Sabbath drew on,—the evening and the morning were the first day. The Paschal Sabbath was followed by the regular weekly Sabbath, the seventh day or Saturday, the evening and the morning of which were the second day. The first day of the week now followed, which begins,—according to their method of counting time,—in the evening and the evening and the morning were the third day. Thus Christ arose from the grave upon the third day, according to prophecy. This theory is sustained by Alexander Campbell, who, in the sixth edition of his new translation of the New Testament, says, "Now it was the preparation of the paschal supper." Dr. A Clarke says that, according to the strict rendering of the Hebrew, three days and three nights mean, "three evenings and three mornings."

Now if any one can throw more light upon this subject, please let us have it, for we need all the knowledge and wisdom we can get to defend the Truth against the attacks of the enemy.

TRINE IMMERSION.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

A letter to Bro. Charles D. Fortner, of West Virginia. Republished by request from the Christian Family Companion and Gospel Visitor 1875.

THE Philistines beset you, and perplex you with "fables and endless genealogies, which minister questions, rather than godly edifying which is in faith." This prompts you to present certain points the elucidation of which you deem essential to the establishment of the claims of the church. You require no vindication for the confirmation of your own faith, but a logical presentation "of those things which are most surely believed among us," for the conviction and recovery of those who are led captive by "the traditions of men." It is not logic that these cavilers need, but liberation from an "evil heart of unbelief." It does not more certainly require three persons, each engaging in a separate action, to bring this letter before the reader, than it requires three persons and three actions to constitute baptism. But to your queries in their order.

1. The omission of trine immersion, for any period, and its resumption by the Brethren, cannot possibly invalidate the ordinance, as its validity rests in the authority of Christ, and not in historical continuity, so far as it can be objectively traced. Only one side of history is addressed to the senses, and its most vital constituent may be continuous where there is neither written nor traditional record. The baptism of Christ and your baptism are brought into organic connection by the Holy Ghost, even if not a single soul had been immersed in the interval. The history of the church and the individual is in Christ before it is in form, so that He is the link that connects the convert of to-day with the Apostolic Band. Do not confound an organic with a material connection. If you insert a dead graft into a living tree, the connection is not organic because of the absence of reciprocity in the conjunction.

2. Baptism, as administered by the Brethren, is entitled to the appellation Christian, no matter how many external historical "links" are wanting, because its name, significance and benefit are derived from Christ, who is "the same yesterday, and to-day, and forever." The yesterday of Eternity, and the Forever of the same, is in the Baptism of to-day, if it represents in form and spirit the trinity of persons and functions which make it Christian. I do not say that any links are missing, only that the validity of the sacred rite is not dependent on an unbroken material connection. If your assailants can triumphantly point to a millennial chasm in the outward history of the church, they do not touch a single stone, from Foundation to Dome, in that superstructure which the Triune God is building for the glory of His name, and the wonder of the universe.

3. If we are vitally united to Christ, we need not apprehend an "*over*throw," simply because we can not trace the brotherhood, as a distinct body, in every historical link to the Great Staple fastened in the floor of Jordan. If the word of commandment has lost none of its energy, being as imperative to-day as eighteen centuries ago, the word of promise is equally immutable, and retains all its pristine elements of support and victory. No bombardment of heresy, though it combine all the infernal agencies of earth, and employ all the engines of Hell, can sack the Citadel of Eternity, which is TRUTH. God will remain God, and baptism will be baptism,—Three in one, though "the heathen rage, and the people imagine a vain thing," and Beelzebub open all the sluices of the Pit to overwhelm "the woman with the Man-Child." "He that sitteth in the Heavens shall laugh: the Lord shall have them in derision."

4. In speaking of Christ's burial, Paul had no occasion to refer to its mode, but to the fact itself. Nobody was concerned whether the dead Christ was on his feet or on his head in the sepulchre. All that his enemies wanted was the assurance that he was buried; and what his friends yearned for was the certainty of his resurrection. He found his way up into the light, whether on his back or his face, as inevitably as a grain of wheat sprouts up, no matter how it lies. That he was buried on his back I have no doubt; but where the fact is the ruling feature of a figure, it is nonsense, not to use a stronger term, to press all the circumstances of the fact as equally significant with the fact itself. Because Christ washed his disciples' feet, coupled with the injunction, "that ye should do as I have done unto you," must therefore the bishop wash and wipe the feet of the whole congregation? Through that little word as many souls drop into perdition. It requires no more than a superficial investigation to find that the principle which underlies the argument in support of backward baptism, converts the Bible into the most contradictory, puerile book ever written. The practice has no more claim to the authority and sanctity of a Divine Institution, than has the Christmas pie or Thanksgiving turkey. All the figures of single action which are so pompously flaunted in favor of the tri-abolition doctrine, are made to render fraudulent service by conferring the significance of the central idea to the incidental and unimportant.

5. As a matter of fact there must be agreement between our burial and resurrection in baptism, and the burial and resurrection of Christ. But to argue that because Christ lay on his back in the grave, we must be put backward into the water, demonstrates with equal force that, because he was three days in the grave, we must be three days in the water, unless it can be shown that the position of his body is the ruling idea of the apostle's figure, which no honest, intelligent person will attempt. When once the legitimate bounds of interpreting figurative language are passed, consistency requires us to push the correspondence into all its details. Let us at least be honest, and allow our principles the scope to which they are entitled.

6. The geometry of theology is not the same as the geometry of angles and numbers. It is not true in relation to symbols and figures, that things which are equal in relation to the same object, are equal to each other. The passage through the Red Sea, salvation by the Ark, and the natural birth, while they represent the same thing, are not homogeneous, and can be employed for spiritual uses only at a single point as regards the matter of baptism, leaving the type of regeneration in the concluding dispensation to be rounded out by the accomplished fact of redemption. "In these last days," Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, is a most fitting formula for the sacrament of initiation; and a triple action, correspondent of these names and their relation to the method of grace, a fit mode of induction into the visible church. Whatever propriety might have attached to a single immersion in the Adamic dispensation, when neither Son nor Spirit had appeared personally in the mundane sphere of redemption, it is palpably out of place in the economy of grace. Swine's flesh was not more obnoxious to the old dispensation, than is single immersion to the new. When God gives a plenary representation of himself in symbol, in harmony with the stage of his redemptive work, let us not mock him with a caricature. "I am a jealous God."

7. Filling out the ellipsis of the commission is no! "making grammar our authority instead of Scripture," as your adversaries assert. Without grammar there is no Gospel, no communication in word form between God and man, or between man and his fellows. Grammar has reference to the construction of language, and not to its ornateness. Grammar and rhetoric are not identical. The grammar of God is perfect as to its sense, and needs no ellipsis save as an economy of words. When we say, "Give me a drink," no one can miss the sense, or pretend that the elliptical form gives obscurity to the request. "Give (thou to) me a drink," adds nothing to the sense although it is perfect grammar. The doctrinal grammar of the commission is without a flaw, and necessitates a trinity of actions as clearly as it announces a Trinity of Persons. We can no more have Christian baptism by one action, than redemption by One Person. One God in Trinity; one baptism in trine action. This is the idiom of heaven; this is the grammar of the great world-commission, a living analysis of which is salvation.

8. We need no "other authority" than the commission to prove trine immersion. It includes "every creature" under heaven, and extends to every inch of this vast globe. It comprises the all of God and the all of man. A single presentation of the formula is sufficient. Deity is authority enough for baptism, and the tri-personality of Deity is no less urgent a reason for a correspondent repetition of the act. Every reference throughout the New Testament to plurality in the Godhead, assigning a specific agency to each in the work of redemption, is an illustration and confirmation of the commission. Single immersion is a symbolical lumping of the Godhead, annulling the personalities in the formula. It is but once formally stated that baptism is to be administered "in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," and yet no one complains that the authority of this single injunction is inadequate. That those twelve Ephesians were immersed by single action, because "the name of the Lord Jesus" only is mentioned in the narrative, is as unreasonable a conclusion as that they were baptized in violation of the original formula. That the one name only is mentioned, is clearly accounted for by the error in relation to baptism and the trinity in which Paul found them. A restriction of the ordinance to a single action would be a glaring, self-stultification of the apostle. The necessity of re-baptism lay in their ignorance of the existence of the Holy Ghost; and to administer the ordinance without express reference to this neglected Divine Person, in a distinct action, so as to be baptized in His Name, as truly as they were before baptized in the Name of God, is the climax of absurdity. Baptism is an action; and to be baptized in the Name of a Person without an action, is simply impossible. This is a point which no candid, unbiased single immersionist can thoroughly consider without perceiving the rottenness of his doctrine. If being immersed "in the Name of the Lord Jesus" constitutes a complete single action, it surely requires no more than the logic of faith and common sense to prove that baptism in either of the other names necessitates the same action. No baptism is valid or Christian that has not the endorsement of these three names; and no action in the baptism is accordant with the commission which is not consummated in the name to which it is attached. Baptism in the name of the Father must be an action in that name, or it is an acted falsehood. Not that it must be precisely synchronous, but the action must stand for that Personality, and what it represents in the scheme of salvation. So of the Son and the Holy Ghost. Anything less is a perversion of the Divine arrangement, and a symbolical mutilation of Deity.

9. You urge me to do my best, and make my argument strong, so as to shut the mouths of the gainsayers. I can add nothing to the omnipotence of Truth. "Baptizing them in the NAME of the FATHER, and of the SON, and of the HOLY GHOST," is a TRIANGULAR PYRAMID buttressed with the authority and majesty of the Everlasting God, against which "the gates of Hell shall not prevail." He that is not willing to accept the words of the Lord Jesus as a sufficient ground for as many actions in baptism as there are Persons in the Godhead, will "not be persuaded though one rose from the dead." Salvation comes to us in triple form, and in like manner it must be returned to its Source perfect Righteousness, perfect Love, and perfect Holiness; and what more fit representation could be given than a three-fold immersion into the element that symbolizes the "pure river of Water of Life, clear as crystal, proceeding out of the Throne of God and of the Lamb!"

EVIDENCES OF BEING A CHILD OF GOD.

BY J. J. BEEBE.

CAN a man know when he is a child of God? We often hear persons say, "I believe I am the nearest right, and you believe you are, but," they will add, "we both have a right to our opinions." Now I ask, "Do we have a right to our opinions, as the term is generally expressed? If we all have our opinions, independent of the Word of God, what a mass of confusion there would be! But suppose our opinions are all based on the Word of God, will they not be just alike? Can a man prove by his opinion, outside of the Word of God, whether he is a child of God or not? I answer, "He cannot." Yet there is an abundance of evidence in the Word of God to prove to us when we are his and when we are not.

We will notice a few of the evidences of a child of God. Mark says, "He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned." Mark 16: 16. Does a man not know when he believes and is baptized? Mark, by inspiration, says, A man that believes and is baptized, shall be saved. Again we hear the Savior say, "Blessed are the peacemakers for they shall be called the children of God." Matt. 5: 9.

Now, if being at peace with our Heavenly Father, living in peace with each other, endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, constitutes us children of God, do we not know when we are in that happy condition? But men will say, "One man preaches one thing and another man another, and all claim to take the Bible for their guide. We cannot tell who is right."

To all such I want to say, "Whenever men preach the Word of God, they all preach just alike. The Word of God is the same yesterday, to-day and forever, and I thank God that we do not have to take any man's word, for our Heavenly Father has given us his Word in such plain, unmistakable terms, that we may know when we are his and when we are not.

Again we hear the Savior say, "For whosoever shall do the will of my Father which is in heaven, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother." Matt. 13: 50. Now, if doing the will of our Father, which is in heaven, makes us brothers and sisters, then, do we not know when we are his? The Savior makes it plain who are his, and he makes it just as plain as to who are not his. We hear him say, "He that is of God heareth God's words; ye therefore hear them not because ye are not of God." John 8: 47. Again we hear him say, "By this shall all men know that ye are my disciples, if ye have love one to another." John 13: 35. In John 14: 23, 24 we read, "Jesus answered and said unto him, If a man love me he will keep my words and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him and make our abode with him. He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings." Now, in the face of all these Scriptures, men will say they cannot tell what is right. Yet they will tell you they believe God's Word. Now, what is wrong? We hear James say, "The devils also believe and tremble." James 2: 19.

Again we hear James say, "Be ye doers of the Word and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." James 1: 22. There is danger of us deceiving ourselves. We may believe with a partial assent of the mind, but if our faith or belief does not prompt us to action, it is a dead belief, or a dead faith. James says, "Faith without works is dead." James 2: 20.

We are told, "Hereby we do know that we know him, if we keep his commandments. 1 John 2: 3, and, again, "If ye know that he is righteous, ye know that every one that doeth righteousness is born of him." 1 John 2: 29. In 1 John 3: 10 we read, "In this the children of God are manifest, and the children of the devil. Whosoever doeth not righteousness, is not of God, neither he that loveth not his brother." "Marvel not, my brethren, if the world hate you. We know that we have passed from death unto life, because we love the brethren. He that loveth not his brother, abideth in death."

John, the Revelator, says, "Blessed are they that do his commandments, that they may have right to the tree of life, and may enter in through the gates into the city." Rev. 22: 14. The Savior says, "My sheep hear my voice and I know them, and they follow me." John 10: 27. The Savior has not only shown us in his Word how we may know when we are his, but he also says he knows his sheep, and they follow him. Paul says, "For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle were dissolved, we have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." 2 Cor. 5: 1.

Every true child of God can say the same. When we follow the Savior in all his appointed ways, and then say we do not know whether we are right or not, we simply doubt the veracity or truthfulness of God's Word. Paul to the Romans says, "The Spirit itself beareth witness with our spirit that we are the children of God, and if children, then heirs, heirs of God and joint heirs with Christ, if so be that we suffer with him, that we may be also glorified together." Rom. 8: 16, 17. Every truly adopted child of God may, by continuing faithful, have the promise of being a joint-heir with Christ. Paul, to the Ephesians, says, "Wherefore take unto you the whole armor of God that ye may be able to withstand in the evil day, and having done all, to stand." Eph. 6: 13. We are to believe all, and not only do a part, but do all. When we are willing to lay down self and take the Word of God for the man of our counsel, and live it out in practical life we can, when our Heavenly Father sees best to call us from time, go home with a full assurance of gaining heaven, with all that heaven means.

FEET-WASHING AND ITS ADVOCATES.

BY LANDON WEST.

Is it not remarkable that all the phases of the service of feet-washing are introduced and taught by the greatest men of the Bible?

Abraham is the first to name it and to prepare for it, that his worthy guests might enjoy it upon their celebrated visit to his tent. Gen. 18: 4. Moses prescribed it for the priesthood, as a religious rite, and also led the way in the observance of it. Ex. 30: 18, 21; 40: 31, 32. Jesus Christ gave us the example in washing the feet of others, and gave the precept for its continuance amongst his followers down to the end of time. John 13: 4, 17.

Paul, the great apostle to the Gentiles enjoined the service of feet-washing upon the sisterhood, and as one, too, who did not witness the lesson given the twelve at Jerusalem, but who had received his call after the ascension, and after Pentecost, but in the revelation made by him, as a minister to the Gentiles, comes also the service of feet-washing. See 1 Tim. 5: 10. And should not the light, that has thus come down to us, from these four great leaders of the church, give weight and importance to any thought named by them, and especially upon service to others? We have no thought or service, approved and shown us by all these master-workmen, like this one of feet-washing.

And should any one now feel ashamed to advocate the service of feet-washing, when the greatest men of the Bible, and men, noted for both faith and works, have named it, taught it and observed it, in all its phases and for all classes of God's people, — for angels, for priests, and for saints, both Jews and Gentiles?

THE TEACHER'S WORK.

BY S. B. MILLER.

In 1 Cor. 13 we are taught of the greatest thing on earth,—that of charity or love. Though other things may change, rise and fall, this remains unchangeable, because it is of God.

As the result of this, the greatest thing on earth, we have given to us the greatest work on earth. There is nothing that equals in essence, in substance, and in symmetry, the grandeur of that toil, which, through prayers and pains, endeavors to train a child that it may enjoy all the royalties of a heavenly birth, and come into possession of an inheritance incorruptible and undefiled.

What can be greater than to build up a man in the image of God,—fit the mortal for immortality; transform the image of the earthly into the image of the heavenly? 'Tis the noblest and most important work that can fall to the lot of any Christian. Think of it! Moulding the lives of humanity for God! Ministers and missionaries may work with diligence upon material hardened into the consistency of stone, and the result be but unsatisfying half-success. But the teacher, working on the plastic clay of childhood, has but himself to blame if he fails to leave a worthy impression.

His mission is to teach the Word of Truth, and it is a mission deserving solid, earnest work. He knows it is impossible to teach a foreign language until he himself has learned it. It is equally impossible to teach the great truths of Christianity, until he feels, experiences and understands their importance.

He should be as familiar with his text-book, the Bible as an Alpine guide is with the mountain passes. His familiarity inspires confidence. Eagerly we follow those who know the road to truth. But, how we tremble when the guide becomes bewildered, when he shows his lack of knowledge, and when his inexperience becomes evident.

His work is upon souls bound for eternity. It brings before him the most solemn realities of life, and the more impressive realities of death, the grave, judgment, and an irreversible destiny. The importance of his position brings him nearer to the foot of the cross, where Christ alone can bring comfort and strengthen.

No one can remain luke-warm in the cause of Christ and conscientiously superintend the religious life of children. He has no energy to waste upon parties, cards, and theatres. He can permit no game, conversation, or book to weaken his faith, and divert him from the supreme aim of a consecrated, devoted life. He should exercise every spiritual muscle and fibre, that he may obtain power with God. All religious exercises are to him but food for his hungering soul. The associations of spiritually-minded people are to him a source of constant pleasure. The advice of the fathers and mothers in Israel buoy him onward and upward. He feels his dependence upon an independent God, and realizes the importance of the work which God would have him to accomplish.

He knows that, to be a successful teacher of Christianity, he must be a Christian. He must be right as well as teach right, live the Gospel as well as explain it; exemplify as well as exhort. Religion is never so effective as when seen through a living Christian. The vicarious sufferings of Christ must be felt as being real, before they can be expressed with power. As Paul arose, and addressed Festus and Agrippa, rehearsing to them, with irrepressible zeal, that wonderful story, so vivid in his memory, so powerful in his hopes, he caused their very hearts to quake and thrill. This earnestness of feeling gives but a natural expression to a realization of the sufferings of Christ in our behalf.

The time spent by the teacher before his class is devoted to God and eternity. He must feed souls as well as intellect,—enlighten hearts as well as brains. To do this he must be full of the truth as it is in Christ Jesus. There is little intellectual culture in a hasty glance at the weekly lessons. There is but little spiritual growth in asking a list of questions and listening to a dozen Bible verses read in answer to them.

Whatever we do for God must be as thoroughly done as what we do for man. We need not let a day pass without winning some reward from the Master, and, as we labor on day by day and year by year, our lives will become more Christ-like.

Our love to God becomes more real as our love to humanity becomes more earnest and fruitful of Christian effort. Nothing adds greater charm to life than the friendships formed with others, and chief among these are the tender affections of the child, clustering around the teacher's work.

Dear fellow-workers, our efforts will not be in vain in the Lord. As we go forth, bearing the precious seed, often we may weep because the seed seems to fall upon the hard rocks, the thorns seem to be stronger than the frail plants; but under the barren soil o'er which we weep, rare seeds may be springing into life. "Let him know, that he which converteth a sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death."

Think of the work! Think of the reward! It is worth life's entire energy to possess it!

SHALL WOMEN PREACH?

BY MARGARET HARSHBERGER.

In 1 Cor. 14 we get the most definite Scriptural answer on this question. Paul is here giving instructions to the church at Corinth, with reference to prophesying and speaking with tongues, etc. He desired them, when speaking in public, to speak in a comprehensive manner. His design was that they should seek to edify, not only the church, but also all that may be present, hence he recommends prophesying in the following language: "If the whole church be come together into one place, and all speak with tongues, the unlearned or unbeliever will say, Ye are mad; but if all prophesy, then he that is unlearned or believeth not, is convinced of all, is judged of all."

Paul is also here giving a reproof, and we think it similar to the one given to this church, with reference to eating the Lord's Supper, which caused disorder and confusion among them. Instead of eating the Lord's Supper, each one, in a selfish manner, took before others his own supper.

There was a similar disorder in this case. "How is it then, brethren? when ye come together, every one of you hath a psalm, hath a doctrine, hath a tongue, hath a revelation, hath an interpretation. Let all things be done to edifying." 1 Cor. 14: 26.

Just think of the confusion and disorder, after coming together in the church, for one to have a psalm, and, in an animated tone, individually to take before others the benefit of his psalm! Another would take benefit of his doctrine; another, the benefit of his tongues, and so on,—all in confusion. This was not to edification, and no real benefit; hence Paul instructs them how to do when they come together in the church. If they speak with tongues, there must be one to interpret, but if there be no interpreter, let him keep silence in the church. "Let the prophets speak two or three, and let the other judge. If anything be revealed to another that sitteth by, let the first hold his peace. For ye may all prophesy one by one, that all may learn, and all may be comforted."

Perhaps it would be well to notice the meaning of the word "prophesy." It signifies to foretell future events, and also to teach or instruct privately, as well as publicly. There are references made in the New Testament in regard to women prophesying, yet there is no command nor permission given them publicly to preach or prophesy in the congregation, to the edification of all present, as Paul had instructed the church at Corinth to do, for he has most emphatically decided that matter by saying, "Let your women keep silence in the churches, for it is not permitted unto them to speak, but they are commanded to be under obedience as also saith the law." See also Gen. 3: 16.

Woman's work is more generally confined to private work, which also includes teaching and instructing as well. Wisdom has so provided, that they need not be exposed to the public gaze of the world. It was intended that the male sex should bear the burden, hence the reference, made to women prophesying, must have been with reference to private work and not public. See 1 Tim. 2: 12; 1 Cor. 11: 3; Eph. 5: 22; Col. 3: 18; Tit. 2: 5.

Paul, having been filled with all wisdom and knowledge, understood human nature, and lest some one should accuse him of being presumptuous, inasmuch as he had taken upon himself the care of a woman, he calls special attention to the things he had written on the occasion, by saying, "If any man think himself to be a prophet or spiritual, let him acknowledge that the things that I write are from the Lord,"—or the commandments of the Lord. They are not only the productions of Paul, as a man, but they are things entrusted to him by God. The things he has mentioned, viz., that they shall not speak with tongues without an interpreter, but are to prophesy to edification and comfort to all that may be present,—they are not to do in a selfish manner, by each one taking the benefit of his psalm, another of his doctrine, etc. To prevent disorder, the women are commanded to keep silence in the churches, just as the one is to keep silence in the church who speaks with tongues without an interpreter, for, says Paul, "It is a shame for women to speak in the church." They are commanded to be "under obedience as also saith the law."

"A little, with the blessing of God upon it, is better than a great deal with the encumbrance of his curse. His blessing can multiply a mite into a talent, but his curse will shrink a talent into a mite. By him the arms of the wicked are broken, and by him the righteous are upholden; so that the great question is whether he be with or against us; and the great misfortune is that this question is seldom asked. The favor of God is to them that obtain it a better and enduring substance, which, like the widow's barrel of oil, wasted not in the evil days of famine, nor will fail."

"No child of God has more to do than he ought to do. It may seem to such a man that he has more to do than it is possible for him to do; but God wants no child of his to do more than he can do, hence what is really beyond a child of God's capability of doing is beyond his responsibility for doing. And since a child of God's responsibility to do is limited by his capacity to do, it is obvious that what a child of God cannot, —as divinely aided,—compass, he ought to be willing to leave unaccomplished. In other words, if a child of God seems to have laid upon him more than he can possibly attend to, he may be sure that God will not ask of him more than he can accomplish."

Missionary and Tract Work Department.

"Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."—1 Cor. 16. 2.

"Every man as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give. Not grudgingly or of necessity, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Cor. 9: 7.

HOW MUCH SHALL WE GIVE?

"Every man according to his ability." "Every one as God hath prospered him." "Every man, according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give." "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." 2 Cor. 8: 12.

THE WATCH TOWER.

BY GALEN B. ROYER.

FOR two years two persons, dissatisfied with the emptiness of their own church homes, met and studied their Bibles with the prayer, "Holy Spirit, lead us to the truth," and the desire to find a church that believes and obeys the letter and spirit of the New Testament. Lately, in a way unaccountable, a GOSPEL MESSENGER was found in the house of the one. The principles it advocates led him to seek at its source, and ask if there is a congregation of Brethren living near.

Thus the spirit of the Word and of the GOSPEL MESSENGER is leading two more souls into light and truth. How much good one MESSENGER or tract may do in calling men from the highways! Here is an opening to establish a church, and the District Mission Board is looking after it.

The Mission Fund should not be looked upon as a bank of deposit where each congregation or State District has the right to draw out what it has deposited, whether that church or District is able or not to meet its home demands. The fund has a higher purpose. It is a bank of faith, where we all place, at least some of what belongs to the Lord. Those congregations and Districts which are among the wealthiest, deposit much and withdraw little, while the weaker and poorer ones deposit little and draw out much. In this way the burden is equalized, and we all become partakers in the great work of the church, and sharers in the blessings.

Also, this bank of faith is the best place in which Christians can deposit their money. For in doing so, they have the sweet consolation of doing good in this world, and the promise of rich returns at an unmerited rate of interest in the world to come.

"And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him which died for them, and rose again." 2 Cor. 5: 15. Selfishness, to say the least, is not a commendable thing in any one's make-up. The apostle strongly admonished against it in 1 Cor. 10: 24 when he says, "Let no man seek his own, but every man another's wealth." If there be any one who should labor earnestly to rid himself of this detestable element in his nature, it is the Christian. It cannot abide in conjunction with that love so beautifully described in 1 Cor. 13, because in the fifth verse Paul says that love "seeketh not her own." It is very difficult, if it be possible at all, for any one to strive to gain this world's honor, greatness, power, or wealth, without being, in some degree, selfish. Not so with him who gives himself solely to the Master's work. While there may be those not having right hearts and yet they are missionaries, the whole tendency of the work is to rid one's self of selfishness. The missionary cannot live unto himself and make a successful worker in the field. He must give up home, friends, relatives, and bright worldly prospects. And yet this is in harmony with the first quotation "henceforth not to live unto himself, but unto him (Christ) which died for him." Certainly this is a pleasing characteristic in any one's character. Such, indeed, make a great sacrifice and have the promise of a glorious reward.

Mt. Morris, Ill.

TWENTY THOUSAND DOLLARS FOR THE BODIES, HOW MUCH FOR THE SOULS?

BY S. Z. SHARP.

ON account of extraordinary reverses for several years in succession, some parts of the Far West were in want of the necessaries of life, and means to provide for the future. The sympathies of our brethren were touched and in a quiet way, and comparatively short time, the German Baptist Brethren church became the means of furnishing to sufferers the above-named sum in money, clothing and provision. This is much better than was done by any other denomination, society, or civil authority. No one felt the amount contributed to make him any poorer, yet the result is far beyond what was contemplated. This act of charity placed our denomination in such strong contrast with others that it has aroused an inquiry among many to know more about this church that seems imbued with true Christian charity. It is but natural that people should look to a church that practices charity as well as preaches it, and now there is, in the West, an immense harvest ready to be gathered.

People are ready and anxious to hear the people that have been their friends in time of need. We have spent twenty thousand in sowing, is it wisdom to let the immense harvest remain ungarnered and go to waste? Are the souls worth less than the bodies? Can we not raise at least one-fourth as much to send the bread for the souls as we sent for their bodies? Just think what five thousand dollars would accomplish in paying the way of earnest, faithful evangelists who would proclaim the Gospel to these people! I move that we raise another sum and place it into the hands of the General Mission Board, and they send missionaries into this field so ripe for the harvest. Who will second the motion?

EDUCATION.

BY LULU KETZLEY.

WHAT is a good education? Is it to get lessons well, and to excel in every study? This is a part, but not all. Some make great progress for a time and then become indolent. Others are distinguished while they go to school, but when they leave it, cease to improve.

Is education a knowledge of books? Yes, and something more. It is possible to possess learning and to be ignorant of necessary things.

Is it to cultivate the intellect? This is not enough. It must also strengthen the morals, and regulate the affections. It must teach us the right use of all the powers the Creator has given.

A good education is that which prepares us for our future sphere of action, and makes us contented with our lot. It has not to do with the mind alone, but the heart, the disposition, the spiritual part of man may become educated.

A choice of immodest, incivil companions, a restless and complaining temper, irreverence and selfishness prove to be a bad education.

A good education is a fortune in itself,—not that it will always secure wealth, but it brings something more precious than gold that perishes. For this may suddenly be lost, fire may consume it, or water overwhelm it, the tempest may destroy it or the thief take it away.

But that knowledge which enriches the mind, draws the affections heavenward, purifies the heart, and moderates its desires, is superior to the elements, and fears neither rust nor robber.

A good education is but another name for happiness, and forgetting self,—living for others,—is the surest way to reach it. He is not educated who does not strive to make those happy with whom he mingles; who makes no sacrifice that another's joy may be increased. His mind may be well stored with knowledge, and he may be distinguished for his learning, but he has failed to cultivate the heart,—to improve the soul.

The objects to be kept in view by those seeking a good education, are,—to make others happy, to love good things, and to live for heaven. Crippled and unfinished is the education that stops short of a higher world than this.

Is the education of the young man and woman finished when done with science, language and art? No, the greatest lessons are to be learned when we have left school, and stand facing the world, where experience, affliction, the voices of those we love, and, perhaps, our sins and mistakes are our teachers.

Our education begins and ends with life. He, alone, who has created and governs the universe, and who has given us life, can say, "It is enough."

Only when life's ledger has been fully written up and closed, will our education be finished. How supremely happy shall we be, if we can bear our records, all spotless and correct, to the Master! Then, for the first time, can we see into the lessons that we learned by heart, but never could fully understand, and, perhaps, we will thank God that all our prayers were not answered.

Happy, too, we may be, that our souls have been educated for heaven, and our lips for the language of angels.

"A REAL Christian seldom sees a defect in his neighbor. A pure lake reflects the beautiful sky, the clouds, and the whole overhanging trees; but when it is ruffled, it reflects nothing that is pure. A bad man seldom sees a good trait in his neighbor. An imperfect glass reflects nothing correctly, but shows its own deficiency. A perfect mirror reflects nothing but bright and pure images."

"THE Spirit is called the Comforter; but before he assumes that name, he is called the 'Spirit of truth.' All true Christian comfort must be based upon truth. There is no comfort in a lie. There may be an opiate, or there may be a stupefaction in it; but the Truth alone is the Comforter. As long as he comforts he will tell you the truth; and he will tell you the truth in order to comfort you."

Mount Morris, Ill., - - - - Aug. 4, 1891.

WE learn that Bro. D. F. Eby, of Mt. Vernon, Ill., will shortly remove to Indiana.

BRO. D. S. T. BUTERBAUGH, of North Manchester, Ind., reports two additions to the church at that place July 25.

THE Brethren in Chicago seem much encouraged. They have their feast July 30. Bro. J. G. Royer has arranged to be with them.

BRO. A. W. VANIMAN and wife, of McPherson, Kans., are spending a few weeks among the churches in the vicinity of Warrensburgh, Mo.

WE are in receipt of $2.75 from Osceola, Iowa, but the sender failed to sign his name. We, of course, cannot send the goods ordered until we receive the name.

WE are indeed pleased to learn that Eld. J. F. Oller, of Waynesborough, Pa., is slowly improving, and hopes are entertained of his recovery. This will be encouraging news to his many friends.

WE succeeded in getting our new boiler into position without the loss of as much time as we had anticipated. So far it works quite well, and will likely furnish all the power needed to run our machinery.

BRO. H. W. STRICKLER, of Loraine, Ill., has been so unfortunate as to fall and break some of ribs. He fell from the wagon while assisting some in the hay-field. We trust that he will soon recover so as to enter upon his work again.

THE following from sister Susie Melson, Reese, Kans., came too late for the last issue, and we now give it room here. "We desire a change in our love-feast announcement, which now reads, 'At Bro. Keith's church.' Make it read, 'Aug. 13, at 5 P. M., Spring Creek church, at the Chapel, seven miles west of Wassam's school-house.'" Bro. John Wise is expected to hold a series of meetings just before the feast."

BRO. J. G. ROYER, who is spending some time among the churches in Indiana, was at home here a few days last week, but returns to his work in Indiana, where he may remain several weeks. He reports some interesting meetings and large fields of usefulness opening up to those who desire to work for the Master.

BRO. P. R. KELTNER, of Nora, Ill., has located in Sterling, and may now be addressed or found at 605 Broadway St. His work in the ministry is greatly needed there, and we trust to see the church prosper both in numbers and interest. There is a good opening in the city, as well as in the adjoining rural districts.

WE have just learned that Eld. Samuel Mohler died at his home in Covington, Ohio, July 26th. He leaves behind him a noble record for true Christian piety and usefulness to the church. It is a matter of joy to the living saints to learn that Bro. Mohler goes prepared to meet his Master, and it fills our hearts with sorrow to part with him. His work was finished, and a noble work it was. We expect an extended notice of his life for publication shortly.

BRO. P. S. MYERS, of Cerro Gordo, Ill., has favored us with one of his "Historical, Doctrinal and Denominational Charts." It will be found both beautiful and instructive, and, by a careful study of the same, one becomes impressed with the importance of church history as a study. Christ was the founder of but one religion, and from that have grown systems running into hundreds. The chart aims to show the relation these systems sustain to each in the way of origin. See Bro. Meyers' advertisement on the last page of this issue.

BRO. LEVI H. EBY, of Lincoln, Nebr., has been spending a few days with old friends in Mount Morris, and gave us a good talk at our prayer-meeting while here. He has been in Northern Illinois since the middle of June, most of the time in the Waddam's Grove congregation. He filled one of the appointments in Chicago, reporting a pleasant meeting and the best of interest. He expects to return to his home in a few weeks. We are glad to learn that Bro. Levi thinks seriously of devoting his efforts to the missionary cause, and, if possible, give that line of work his entire attention for years to come. We trust that he will receive the necessary encouragement, and make early preparations for the work. We ought to have at least a score of active men in the field, and see no reason why there should not be.

IN this issue will be found an article on True Immersion, by Bro. C. H. Balsbaugh, published in the Gospel Visitor many years ago, and also issued at that time in tract form. It was then widely read, and made a very favorable impression. It deserves a more extensive circulation than it has heretofore received. A brother, who does not care to let his left hand know what his right hand doeth, has us to print 2,000 copies of it for him in tract form, at his expense. It makes a very neat little tract of eight pages, and the brother will give them a wide circulation, for he does a great deal of that kind of work in a quiet way. It is as bread cast upon the waters, and will do good along the line for years to come. We commend the brother's wisdom in selecting such a good tract, and we also commend his unassuming zeal in spreading the Truth. The example is certainly worthy of imitation. The article contains some splendid points in a clear, forcible manner. It is about as a good thing as the brother could have selected for distribution in his section of the country.

THE Old Folks' Home committee met in the MESSENGER office Friday, July 24, for the purpose of receiving proposals for locating the Home. A number of propositions were handed in and will be duly considered after the committee examines the different locations offered. They will probably examine all the locations this week, and shortly make their report. In next issue we hope to be able to say where the institution is to be located. It certainly is a commendable project, and deserves the sympathy and support of all the members in the Northern District of Illinois.

SPECIAL NOTICE.

WE printed twenty thousand copies of the Minutes of our Annual Conference held at Hagerstown, Md., and the supply has been exhausted. Last year the same number of copies were printed, and a large number were left over, and we concluded that it would be useless to print more this year, but, for some cause, the demand has been much greater this year than last, and as a result, we are not now able to fill orders, and unless we publish a new edition, which will incur a large additional expense, a few who have ordered Minutes will not get them. Those who have received more copies than they can use, will please return them to the MESSENGER Office at Mt. Morris, so that we may use them where they are needed. Unless it is imperatively demanded, we do not feel justified in incurring the expense of printing a new edition, as it will very materially reduce the balance that the General Conference will receive from the publication of the Minutes.

EDITORIAL WANDERINGS.

JULY 6 we bade farewell to the loved ones at home, and started on our long journey which, if God prosper, will take us across the broad Atlantic and into three of the earth's great geographical divisions, Europe, Asia and Africa. We had looked forward to the time of parting, and had tried to school ourselves to meet the ordeal bravely, but it was hard to leave the dear old home. It was hard to take the last look at the place where we have enjoyed so much of home life, and harder still to say farewell to those we love so well, realizing as we did that we were going out upon a journey that might end in that last of all journeys to the silent land. It cost us more than we care to tell, to leave our home and those with whom we have labored these many years in the work of the school, the MESSENGER and the church. Our labor and our associations have been very pleasant to us, and the strongest ties of Christian love and fellowship have bound us to those with whom we have been associated in the work, and to leave them all was more of a sacrifice than we thought it would be.

Eight years less sixteen days have sped away since we at the same place said good-bye to our brethren and sisters, and started on our trip to Europe and the Lands of the Bible; years that have been most abundantly blessed of God to us, years of labor, and we trust of growth and development in the spiritual life. And now as then, our brethren and sisters came to the depot to bid us a parting God speed; now as then, many were the tears shed, and many were the prayers pledged for a prosperous voyage and for our safe return to our home again; now as then, we wondered whether we should ever meet with these dear Christian friends again in this world, whether, if God permits us to return to our home again, no face will be missing from the number who said farewell to us on this July morning, and if some face shall be missing, whose will it be? The question must remain unanswered, for it is hidden by the veil of the future. But this we do know, that faithfulness to our calling in Christ will bring us home at last, where partings are unknown.

The last farewell is said, the train that is to bear us away from home and loved ones is at hand. We step aboard and just as the train begins to move, our dear old brother Zellers, belated, comes into the car to say good-bye. Dear, faithful, loving old brother! We shall always remember Uncle Dan's kind face as we saw it that morning through a mist of falling tears. At last we are away, speeding on our journey, and we have ample time for meditation and reflection. The ordeal of parting is over, and then comes to us the thought that it is pleasant to know that we have the love and respect of those with whom we live and labor, and our prayer is that we may, by God's help, prove worthy of it all. We resolve anew to give our lives more fully to the Lord and the work of the church, and thus even amidst tears, we go away trusting in God, and rejoicing that we are counted worthy to labor for him.

At Chicago we spend a short time with our brethren in the flesh and spirit, and then go on to Nappanee, Ind., where we stop with Bro. Murray, and meet the brethren and sisters in public worship. The church here is enjoying a season of prosperity, and we are glad to see so much spiritual life manifested among the members. Our brother, Dr. Geo. L. Shoemaker, is located here, and we are glad to note that he is meeting with deserved success. Bro. George is a close and careful student, and is in love with his profession, and he is sure to succeed. He added a few valuable remedies to wife's medicine case, which may come good to us on our journey in the East.

One night at Milford, and another at Syracuse, Ind., a visit to the homes of Bro. Hiram Forney, friend Aaron Miller, brethren William R. Deeter and Reed, and a pleasant meeting with Bro. Lemuel Hillery and family, and Bro. Daniel Shively and wife, and we leave our Indiana brethren, carrying with us their good wishes and prayers in our behalf. At Defiance, Ohio, a stop of an hour and a half enables us to call on brother and sister Noffsinger. Our readers need no introduction to sister Sadie Brallier Noffsinger. Our short stop with them was exceedingly pleasant to us.

On Saturday morning we reached Ashland, Ohio, where Bro. David Workman and his daughter met us and took us to their hospitable home. Saturday evening, Sunday morning and Sunday evening we attended public services in the Ashland church. The attendance at the meetings was large, and the attention and order were most excellent. Where the people respect the house of God, we know that their training has not been neglected. The cultured man never allows himself to behave unseemly in the house of worship. It is only "fellows of the baser sort," who indulge in such ungentlemanly conduct.

Bro. I. D. Parker has his home in the Ashland church, and we enjoyed a very pleasant visit with brother and sister Parker. They live within a mile and a half of the meeting-house. Bro. Parker is turning his attention to evangelistic work, and the Lord is abundantly blessing his labors. Bro. D. N. Workman, the elder in charge of the church, lives only a short distance from the house of worship, and has a pleasant and comfortable home. Bro. Workman has been one of our most successful evangelists, but for several years he has not labored much in the field, but we hope the time is not far distant when Bro. David will again enter upon evangelistic labor. The church now, more than ever, has need of all her laborers. The Lord is opening a great field before her, and from all sides the call is heard, "Come and help us." Our stay at Ashland was all too short for us, but we had other engagements to meet and we go away, bearing with us on our journey many pleasant recollections of our short visit with the brethren and sisters at Ashland. May God bless and prosper them abundantly!

Hagerstown, Md., our next stopping place, has become historic to our people as the place where one of our most successful Annual Meetings was held. From every stand-point the meeting was a great success. The impression made on the citizens of Hagerstown was most excellent. We met a number of business and newspaper men, and all spoke in the highest terms of the Conference and of our people. To many the meeting was a surprise. The large attendance, the most excellent order, the prompt and efficient manner in which the business of the meeting was conducted, the excellent arrangements made by the Committee having charge of the Meeting, the quiet, unassuming character of our members, the ability with which many of the City pulpits were filled by our ministers, the strong character of the preaching in the Tabernacle, the collection taken up for the Orphans' Home, and many other features of the Meeting are spoken of in terms of strong commendation, and a general desire is expressed that the Meeting may be held here again. The Committee of Arrangements managed the business of the Meeting most successfully, and as a result, a handsome surplus will be paid over to the Missionary and Tract Work of the church.

The advantage of holding our Conferences in large towns and cities must be apparent to the most casual observer. In the matter of railroad arrangements, the advantages cannot be overestimated. In round numbers it is officially stated that the different railway lines, entering the City, sold altogether fifty thousand tickets to parties who visited Hagerstown during the Meeting. This immense throng of people was handled by the railways without inconvenience. Then, too, the Meeting becomes a great educator. We come more closely in contact with the large masses of population and our church becomes better known. The newspapers give us, as a rule, favorable notice. The disposition to misrepresent our people is giving way to a spirit of fairness. The reports in the City papers, as well as those which appeared in the Baltimore and Philadelphia papers of our last Meeting, were characterized by a spirit of fairness that is very commendable. A number of the dailies published either fully or in part, the historical sketch of the church which appears in the Almanac for 1891, and which is being put in tract form for more general distribution. Taken altogether, we believe that our Conference, held at Hagerstown, was one of the most successful ever held by the Brethren, and that the results will be far-reaching for the good of the church.

At Hagerstown, at the Broadfording and Welsh Run, we met the members in public service, and enjoyed a pleasant visit among them. We are beginning to feel quite at home here again, having visited our old home three times during the last year, and while we love our western home, there are many things in the beautiful Cumberland Valley that make a residence here very desirable, and it would not be a difficult matter for us to go back to our first love and return again to the old home of our youth.

During our stay in the Cumberland Valley we visited at the home of our dear brother, Jacob F. Oller, of Waynesborough, Pa. We found Bro. Oller severely afflicted by disease, and suffering from severe pain. It was feared at one time that his time for departure had come, but at this writing we are glad to learn that he is slowly improving, and hopes are now entertained that he will be spared to his family and the church. His labors are much needed, and we know that all will join us in the prayer that, if it be the Father's will, our dear brother may be fully restored to health and usefulness.

At Edgemont, Md., we stopped with Bro. J. M. Stover, the peach king of the Blue Ridge. Bro. Stover's orchards are in fine condition, and cover an immense tract of land. He has, at this time, about fifty thousand peach trees; only a part of them, however, are old enough to bear fruit. His peach crop this year is estimated at twenty thousand bushels. The early varieties were ripe when we visited him, and we enjoyed the luscious fruit. Here we found two of our Mount Morris boys, brethren Wilbur and Mitchell Stover, busily engaged in picking and packing fruit for shipment.

Our next stopping place was at the home of Bro. D. R. Sayler, Double Pipe Creek, Md., the former home of Eld. D. P. Sayler who, in his day, was one of the leaders in our church. We visited Bro. D. P. Sayler's old home, and we were impressed with the beauty of the location. Here he lived and labored for about thirty years. Eld. D. R. Sayler, a nephew of D. P. Sayler, is the elder in charge of the Monocacy church. Our stay here was short. We visited the home of Bro. John Weybright, one of the deacons of the church. Sister Weybright placed us under special obligation by presenting us an old German Bible, printed by our brother, Christopher Saur. We also spent a short time at Bro. Samuel Weybright's home. We met the members in the church in Double Pipe Creek, and enjoyed two interesting meetings. We enjoyed our visit very much at Double Pipe Creek.

Westminster, Md., in the Meadow Branch church, at the home of Bro. D. D. Bonsacks, was our next resting place. The Brethren have a large meeting-house in Westminster and here, during our stay, two meetings were held. The large house was crowded with the interested audience. After a short but pleasant stay with the Brethren here, we left for Philadelphia and New York, and here we close this letter. By the time the issue of the MESSENGER, containing this letter, reaches our readers, if all is well with us, we shall be on our voyage across the Atlantic, a thousand miles or more from New York. We shall be far out on the mighty ocean, but even there the Lord will care for us, and we go trusting in him. We know, too, that the prayers of our dear brethren and sisters will go up in our behalf. We go away from our home, our country and our church, praying God's blessing upon all, and indulging in the fond hope that we may be permitted to return again.

THE NEW JEWISH EXODUS.

FROM time to time we have given our readers items of interest concerning the Jews in Russia, but we are indebted to the Christian Herald for the following very complete account of the inhuman treatment these people are receiving at the hands of the Russians. It is hard to believe that such cruelties should be tolerated in any civilized land in this enlightened and liberty-loving age:

"The Paris Rothschilds have cancelled their contract with the Russian Government for the proposed New Loan, as a protest against the Jewish persecution, which, consequently, is stated to have somewhat slackened. The Telegraph's St. Petersburg correspondent says he has 'excellent authority for stating that the Government has under consideration a most important project for the solution of the Jewish question, which, if adopted, may please or shock, but will certainly astonish the civilized world.'

"The Jews are arriving in thousands, from various parts of Russia, in the districts set apart for them, many dying on the route through the harsh treatment they receive, being forwarded in company with criminals for weeks and months together. The misery in the Jewish Pale of Settlement is indescribable.

'CLEARED OUT' IN LOCKED CARRIAGES.

"The harsh treatment of their poorer brethren has produced something very like a panic among the higher classes of Jewish merchants in Moscow, who live in daily expectation of an extension of the rigors of the Government to themselves. Large numbers of Jews lately residing in Moscow on sufferance only, and without a legal right, have now been, to use the Russian phrase, 'cleared out,' and despatched in batches, under military escort, in railway carriages with locked doors to the Jewish Pale.

FURNITURE AND CREDITORS ABANDONED.

"The lower classes of Jews, who had no legal right of residence in Moscow, were cleared out so promptly that, in many cases, they have been compelled to abandon their furniture and bulkier belongings, while Moscow dealers within the Jewish quarters are now ruefully writing off their books bad debts, amounting in the aggregate to considerably over a million roubles, on account of these summarily-ejected defaulters, whose money has always hitherto been safe. Bankruptcy as the result threatens many dealers.

WEALTHY MERCHANTS LEAVING RUSSIA.

"The synagogue in St. Petersburg has been sold for seven hundred thousand roubles, and the Moscow synagogue, a new building, which was but recently completed, after many vexatious hindrances from the authorities, and has never been opened, is now offered for sale, and will probably be acquired by the Tartars as their mosque. Several of the wealthiest Jews, members of the First Guild of Merchants, and enjoying the right of residence there are leaving Russia altogether, and the majority have determined to quit Moscow.

HOW THE EXPULSIONS WERE CARRIED OUT.

"That the authorities should have issued their edict on the eve of the Russian Easter, the great festival of their church, when vast crowds of the Orthodox, filled with religious enthusiasm, capable of degenerating into militant fanaticism on the slightest provocation, are assembled round every church; and, moreover, just at the time of the Jewish Passover—this (an Englishman now in Moscow writes) is the most spitefully cruel and dangerous piece of anti-Semitic legislation ever devised even in Russia. Many Jews were taken to prison to be sent like criminals by etape to the birthplace of their parents on whose passports they are inscribed. In some cases young children were taken away from their parents because they were not yet officially written down in the parental passport. In Madina Koshtche, the suburb inhabited mostly by Jews, there was quite a panic, and heartrending scenes were witnessed. Large numbers fled into the woods outside the city, and wandered about in despair. Those who had three days to dispose of their chattels realized hardly enough to keep them in bread. Chairs were sold for twopence, bedsteads and bedding for sixpence. Many well-to-do artisans were ruined in the course of a day, and had to ask for transport by etape. Some of the poor people in prison were supplied by benevolent Jews and Christians with bread and railway tickets. The men were escorted to the railway station two and two in fetters like criminals. The women and children were not chained.

EXPULSION OF EX-SOLDIERS.

"In Kaluga there were about 300 Jewish families living in perfect harmony with their Christian neighbors. Some of them—artisans and merchants—have been there for twenty and thirty years, and most of them have served in the Russian army. Although the new law is ostensibly for application only to the Moscow district, yet certain families in Kaluga were compelled to leave in three days.

"A usually well-informed newspaper (the Kievlanin) announces with satisfaction that since the commencement of the present rigorous treatment of the Jews 50,000 of them have joined the Greek and Lutheran churches. A gratuity of fifteen roubles is given to every Jew joining the Orthodox church."—Christian Herald.

"IN the United States is a religious body of people known as Free Methodists, who are clearly committed against secret societies. They sustain about 500 preachers, who are said to be "free from habits of snuff-dipping, tobacco using and membership in secret orders. The influence which such a body of men can carry into the churches placed in their charge must be grandly strong for personal purity among their members. It was a wise provision which that church placed in its Discipline that 'any society requiring an oath [or an] affirmation, or promise of secrecy . . . is held to be a secret society; and any member joining or continuing in such, violates his covenant obligation, and shall in due form be excluded from the church.' And it was also wise to require each member to promise that he or she will abstain from all connection with secret societies. Hence the church is free from the sin of lodgery."

THERE is nothing wrong about being rich, but as Paul says, "They that will be rich fall into temptation and a snare, and into many foolish and hurtful lusts." 1 Tim 6:9. The tendency of riches is to expose us to many temptations such as visiting places unbecoming a Christian, decorating and adorning, running into extravagance in our dwellings, furniture, clothing, and possessions generally. If rich, we have the money to indulge in these things and we are not only tempted but are often, by our own lust, led into the temptation and ruined. Those who are rich should exercise themselves in things pertaining to godliness, and thus, as much as possible, avoid falling into temptations. For those who are rich there is set before them an open door through which they can carry their riches to the destitute of the land as well as being the means of sending the Gospel to the nations of the earth. Send your spare money out into these needy fields; it will not only do good to suffering and sinful humanity, but will greatly lessen your liability to temptation. They that will be rich may accomplish a world of good with their riches if they only feel disposed to do so.

From Wallace, Kansas.

WE left home on Saturday, July 19, for Bro. Johnson's, where our ministers held two meetings. At the meeting Sunday morning a woman, who is not expected to live, sent word that she requested the prayers of the church. This woman never knew anything about our church till last spring. She said then that it was the right church.

The Brethren at this place have not ministerial force enough to fill all the calls. Brethren, where there are four or five ministers in one congregation, could not some of you take a trip through the West instead of being all together every Sunday? Who will come to our aid in the Master's cause? We need aid in Sunshine precinct as well as other places around here. ALLEN CRIPE.

From Ozawkie, Kansas.

AN edifying social meeting was enjoyed by those who met with us last Wednesday evening. A large congregation met at the church to hear God's children talk on the subject of "Christian Experience." Many good thoughts were brought out, causing one to feel that it was good to be present. Fathers and mothers rejoiced to have their children rise and testify before the world of the real enjoyment, experienced in the service of God. No one can attend such meetings without being benefited. Even those, hardened in sin, became interested, when our young brethren and sisters boldly testified of the real enjoyment, to be found where the love of God is shed abroad in the heart.

God be thanked for his visitation in our midst in the past! We thank him that he has given us brethren and sisters who are striving for a higher degree of Christian perfection. If every conversion (so-called) were a true one, —such a one as would lead unto a perfect Christian life, oh, what a bridling of the tongue there would be!

A Sad Accident.

JULY 8, 1891, Mr. Henry Horning, of the village of Malvern, was painting the gable end of Mr. Rennels's barn, situated within the bounds of the Rock Creek church, Whiteside Co., Ill. He had three ladders tied together, and then braced and tied with a rope, one end of which hung to the ground.

When Mr. Rennels came home from town, he unhitched his horses, and led them to the stable. While he was unbridling one horse, the other turned and walked out at the back door. Getting fast in the rope that hung down, it dislocated the ladder, causing it to break near where Henry was standing. He fell about thirty feet to the paved yard below. Striking on his shoulder and neck, the fall resulted in instant death. All this was done in less than a moment's time. Surely in the midst of life we are in death! Just six months ago his wife was taken away, very suddenly, with La Grippe, leaving five little children to the Father's care, and now the thought comes to us, Who will take care of those five little children? The oldest is eight years old, and the youngest two years of age. Henry was a young man of about thirty-three years. We regret that he put off that one thing needful. Funeral services took place July 10, in the house of Mr. Rennels, by Rev. Prichard and Bro. Jacob L. Myers. The remains were taken to the M. E. cemetery for burial.

JOHN A. MYERS.

From the Auglaize Church, Ohio.

THE members of the Auglaize church, Putnam Co., Ohio, met in council, June 13. Elders Samuel Driver and Joseph Holder were with us. Some very important matters were considered, but we have every reason to believe, that, by the assistance of the above-named brethren, and the guidance of him who doeth all things well,—everything was disposed of in a way that will promote personal piety, enhance the usefulness of the parties interested, and also that of the church. Thus it will also tend to the glorification of God's worthy name among men.

Although the dark clouds had gethered, and ominously lowered, and thickened the darkness around us, yet they have passed away, and the shadows have passed away with them. We thank God that the sunlight of his promises seems so much the purer and sweeter, and that his redeeming love is so much the brighter and more vitalizing.

Bro. Holder remained with us over Sunday and gave us three soul-reviving sermons. May they prove to have been the "good seed," sown on well-prepared soil! Brethren, come again!

From LeMars, Iowa.

WE are in need of willing workers, and will say, if there are any ministering brethren, sound in the faith, who wish to change location, there is a large field of labor opened here in this part of God's moral vineyard. Who will come to help gather in the sheaves?

When I look around and see so many starving for the Bread of Life, it makes my heart ache. Our greatest need is to have a ministering brother settle among us. We feel sure you will like our country, for to our mind it cannot be surpassed for farming. I have given this country a fair trial, and know of what I speak. I have lived here for seven years, and feel safe in recommending this location to others. Any brother wishing further information can obtain it, by addressing the writer.

We feel encouraged when we look over the field of labor. The people come to meeting regularly, and give good attention, which cannot be said of all places where meetings are held. Bro. J. W. Trostle is our elder. We live about forty miles from the main body of the church,—the place where Bro. Trostle settled a year before we came here. His outlook was not bright at first, but he has persevered, and, as a result of his labors, he has gathered a large body of members,—something over fifty. He has built a good meeting-house, and the church is prospering. Thus we see what can be done when brethren work together with the Lord. This is missionary work in the strongest sense of the word.

We should have more brethren like Bro. Trostle. Were a brother of like energy to move here, there could be likely as much done here as at the above place. He came to us a few weeks ago, and preached over Sunday. He also left an appointment for every two weeks, on the second and fourth Sunday of each month. Brethren, passing through LeMars or Ireton, are heartily invited to stop with us.

D. A. MILLER.

The Mission Field.

FOR the last four years we have spent some time in the mission field, not as a missionary sent by the church, but of free will.

During our stay with the isolated of Texas as well as those of Western Kansas, where we spent most of our time, we noted closely what was needed to do efficient work in those peculiar fields. We say peculiar because we find them such for various reasons.

Such notes in reference to the work as we have gathered by experience, as well as by observation, we shall present to the readers of the MESSENGER.

While we are very much opposed to any one thinking of himself, "I am the man, send me." I very heartily endorse J. H. M's admonition. "The harvest is great and the laborers are few." Let every minister think of himself and prepare himself for the work he may be called to do. Let the church pray earnestly that the Lord of the harvest may send laborers. Then let the church work in harmony with those prayers. Going through the church as we do through our temporal fields, you can then select those who have prepared themselves for the work. You can say, "Brother and sister, we want you; the church wants you." Then, we believe, a good work may be done.

Considering the men and their qualifications, we deduce the following:

1. Men who carry themselves with dignity, to whom the community will look up.

2. Men of taste and system.

3. Men that will work hard, though the outlook may not be encouraging.

4. Men that can control themselves well when others get out of place.

5. Men, grave and solemn, — not men that will laugh at those who say smutty things or act unbecomingly.

6. Men who will suffer and continue to bear the burdens and hardships of mission life, when they know that others in the ministry, better able than themselves, to bear a like burden, are enjoying themselves and living well in other fields, less burdensome.

7. Men who will observe neatness of dress with cleanliness. Ministers should labor as much as lieth in them to have their family observe the same, especially since some in the field, to which they are called, may do very much otherwise.

8. Men who can positively refuse to dabble into politics.

9. Men who have control of their children, by love.

10. Men that have no other ambition than to serve the church in the highest sense. They should not be schemers, traders, speculators, or lovers of praise.

11. Men who, while thinking of their isolation and their friends and loved ones, still work on and on.

12. Men, of whom, when they fall in the field, the church can say, "That was a good servant."

13. Men who, while others add farm to farm, can say, "As for me and my house, we will serve the Lord."

P. S.—While my regular address is Ladoga, Ind., Box 3, I am stopping at present near Middle Brook, Va.

From Ashland, Ohio.

OUR quarterly council was held at the Maple Grove church, Ashland Co., Ohio, July 18, Eld. George Worst presiding. All business was transacted satisfactorily. Our church is in peace and union, and the members are laboring for spiritual advancement. A harvest-meeting has been arranged for Aug. 29, to commence promptly at 10 A. M. A missionary meeting will be held during the afternoon. Short talks will be given by different brethren and sisters on missionary work, and plans and suggestions will be made for more effective home work.

A children's meeting has been arranged for Aug. 30, to commence at nine o'clock. It will consist of interesting exercises and songs. All are heartily invited to be with us on these occasions. Our love-feast has been arranged for Oct. 10, to commence at 4 P. M. DAVID SNYDER.

A Word of Encouragement.

To my Cousin of Middletown, Ind., and all whom it may concern:—

YOUR letter caused me to be much interested in your spiritual welfare. You seem to be somewhat discouraged, and say you think sometimes of giving up the battle. Then you think of the danger that will befall you if you do, and I say, too, "Do not give up, or you will meet with greater obstructions than you do now. If you do meet with trials and crosses now, they are only temporary,—only for awhile, but, on the other hand, there will be no end to the joys of a true Christian, for his happiness will last through all eternity.

Jesus is your friend. Look to him; he has promised to be with you! When all others have forsaken you, he will ever be with you! Troubles will come, for man is born unto trouble. Job 5: 6, 7, 8. The Christian has the gracious promise that the Lord will be with him "in the sixth trouble and not forsake us in the seventh." We often feel that our lot is drear and more painful than we can bear, but God will not put more on us than we are able to bear.

Satan will try in every way to lead us away from God; he tries every inducement to hinder our progress in serving our Master. He tells us our road is rough, and tries to make us believe there is no redemption for us.

One gracious promise is ours,—that Christ is occupied with all our needs. Let Satan try us in every way, he cannot have the power if Christ is on our side. Christ has the reigning power over the adversary. Let us trust our Redeemer; he is able to save us unto the uttermost.

Satan goes around as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour. He tried to tempt our Blessed Savior, but what was the outcome? Christ steadfastly resisted him and so must we. Then Satan will flee far from us.

Satan often tries to make us believe a lie. He wants to make us think that we are doing ourselves injustice, traveling the road our Savior trod. He throws so many obstacles in our way, that we sometimes are almost ready to say as you do,—"We will give up." Often we are so discouraged that we feel we are nothing in the sight of God. Right there is the place where Satan wants us, then he will be sure to win us over if possible. But God does not desire us to fall back into sin, for his grace is sufficient to bear us up through every trial and difficulty of this life. It is true, God sometimes tests our faith, but there is always a way opened for our escape. When we are weak, then we are strong. Just before the dawn of day is the darkest hour, and there is always a calm after a storm. Every cloud has a silver lining. Cheer up, take courage and bear the cross bravely as a valiant soldier. Where there is no cross, there is no crown. "God is our refuge and strength and a very present help in trouble." Cast thy burden on him and he shall sustain you.

There is much contained in his Divine Word to encourage us! Though we are cast down we shall not be utterly destroyed; though we be persecuted we shall not be forsaken. Be of good courage and wait on the Lord. He is your friend.

You speak of hard times and we hear many speak of the same thing, and they seem to be discouraged. "With food and raiment let us be content." "Consider the lilies; they toil not neither do they spin." Think of the fowls of the air who are all bountifully provided for without any effort on their part! Think of the many thousands that do not enjoy all the blessings we do. If we trust God we are safe; all shall be right! Contentment is great gain! Though we are poor in this world's goods, let us be rich in faith and love toward our Heavenly Father who has never forsaken us! He has blessed us bountifully,—far more than we have deserved.

Looking at myself, I see that I am continually receiving rich blessings of God and I feel that, during the past year, I have been more blessed than any one of whom I know. I cannot render thanks enough to my dear Savior for his great kindness shown me during the last year and all the days of my past life. Let us love him and serve him more, and try to fight our battles with fortitude and vigor, that we may gain the victory. Then the glory shall be ours forever and forever. Think of what Jesus passed through for us, and are we not willing to share the cross with him? He bore it all with patience, as a brave soldier, and now he is seated upon his throne.

Let us be faithful and we we shall obtain the reward of the faithful. Free from every sorrow we shall be happy forever upon the shores of the bright beyond. FLORIDA J. E. ETTER.

From Waddam's Grove, Ill.

ACCORDING to previous announcement many of the members of our church assembled to celebrate the Fourth of July and we tried to be together to the glory and honor of God, who has given us so much liberty through the blood of his dear Son.

Bro. Levi Eby spoke to us on the occasion. After meeting there were three that desired to enjoy the liberty of God's children. We went to the water as they did of old, and they were buried in the watery grave, to arise and follow Jesus whithersoever he leadeth.

Much joy prevaded the hearts of many that day, but our joy and the joy of the angels in heaven exceeded the joy of the world, and we are made to rejoice again, that there are still more willing to come and be liberated from sin. ISRAEL STEES.

IT seems to me, if ever there was a time when we should feel grateful to our Heavenly Father, it is now. The bountiful harvest which we are just now gathering, shows us that truly the Lord has been good to us and blessed our labors by giving us an abundance of everything. As far as I can learn, those living farther west are having plenty. Now, how are we going to repay our Heavenly Father for his goodness to us? Are we willing to give some of our abundance for the spreading of his Gospel? I rejoice to see an awakening in this direction in the Brotherhood. I hope and pray that the missionary cause will prosper more this year than at any time before.

Let us all put forth more energy for the saving of souls. We can give a little of our means for the foreign mission, and at the same time we can help the home mission by living right before our neighbors, and talking to those who are away from Christ. We all have an influence over some one, and if every member of the Brethren church could be the means of saving one soul, what a great work it would be!

I am sorry to see so many living a careless and indifferent life. They are satisfied if their names are found on the church book. They seem to think that is all that is necessary.

Dear reader, remember the Lord has given you a talent. Do not lay it away! The Master will come after while; then you cannot meet him with joy. Let us improve the talent which the Lord has given us, so that we can meet him with joy and gladness. There is nothing that gives me more happiness in this life than to know that I am doing something for the Lord. This life, at the longest, is short, and if we do not make good use of our time, while here, we will, when we come to die, look back with regret upon a misspent life.

An old uncle of mine said, when he came to die, "Oh that I had lived better, so that I could die better." I think when he looked over his life he could see where he had neglected his duty. May the good Lord help us all to work for him while we live here, that we may not look back with any regret when we come to die. LIZZIE HILARY.

The Kansas City Mission.

LAST Sunday one more was added to the faithful,—a lady of influence in the part of the City where she lives. There is another applicant, and, we think, a good prospect ahead There are now in the City and near the City sixteen members so far as I know.

I want to call the attention of those interested to the fact that we have changed the place for our of our monthly meetings, and they are now held as follows:

In North Argentine, on the South side of the river, meetings are held on the first Sunday of each month, at 11 A. M., and 4 P. M. Sunday-school is held every Sunday at 3 P. M. The place of meeting is two blocks North of the depot and five blocks North-west from the end of the "Electric Railway," in a frame school-house.

On the third Sunday we held meetings in the Chelsea Park school-house at 11 A. M., one block North-west of Chelsea Park depot on the Elevated Railroad. Members from any part of the City can connect with the Elevated Railroad at the Union depot, and take the Chelsea Park train. We would like if some of our ministering brethren, stopping in the City, could fill some of the appointments.

The two great needs for successful work at this place are, first, a located minister, who can fully devote his time to the mission, and, second, a house of worship for our use exclusively.

From the Lordsburg Church, Cal.

JULY 18, the members met for business. Elders J. S. Flory and Peter Overholtzer, of the Covina church, were present. Elders John and J. W. Metzger also were present and handed in letters of membership. Less than eighteen months ago Bro. T. J. Nair and wife, and the writer and his wife were the only members here, and now there are seventy-four. Bro. Nair had the care of the congregation up to the 18th of July, when he turned it over to elders John and J. W. Metzger, and we hope the good work may go on prospering in their hands.

With reference to the school the church adopted the following:

"Whereas a Brethren's school has been established within the bounds of the Lordsburg church, and as said school will be attended by members from the various churches of the Brotherhood, therefore be it

"Resolved,—That this church shall care for all her members, looking after their welfare and spiritual needs, administering, when necessary, the proper discipline, thereby reserving her Gospel power and not delegating it to the school.

"2. Each member, whether coming to attend the school or otherwise, if desiring the benefits and care of the church, is required to bring a certificate of membership and present it at once.

"3. Members of the church, who are participants in the school, as well as all others, will be expected to conform in their lives and character, conduct and appearance to the principles of the Gospel, as understood and practiced by the General Brotherhood."

After the business was concluded, about 2 P. M., the Mission Board of Southern California met to consider the request to have services at Redondo by the sea. The committee was favorable to a trial at that place, but for the want of necessary funds the way was not clear at this time. An effort will be made by individuals to fill the demands at that place, where hundreds congregate every Sunday to bathe in the placid Pacific. We are glad to know that a few friends, who are not members of our Fraternity, have come forward with an offer to supply the necessary singing books and Bibles to conduct Bible readings. God can bless the work, and will if the workers go in his strength. Where sin most abounds, there grace is most needed.

The East Riverside mission, under the care of . S. Flory and J. F. Neher is full of promise in he Lord. The field is large and workers few. Pray that the Lord of the harvest may send forth many earnest, faithful laborers.

A Sound Article.

We speak of a sound body or mind, sound sleep, nd sound principles. There is also a sound religion, and while talking about that, I must say hat I am well pleased with our church paper. s soundness is wholesome, its principles are ood and strengthening to the child of God. In he last issue we have an article on "Church ower." Let every member carefully read that rticle. The three powers that concern the urch,—legislative, judicial and executive,—are and principles. I fear that too many nowadays may listen to unsound doctrines, and rely too uch on the persuasive principle, and thus lose ght of the Gospel principle. I feel thankful at God can legislate for us, and that we may terpret and execute as the Gospel may direct.

The Work in Chicago.

This day our hearts are glad and we rejoice, because the angels in heaven are rejoicing over the return of a precious soul that was "lost, but is now found."

Bro. E. S. Young preached for us a most practical sermon; subject, "Seeing and Hearing," to a fair-sized audience and with good attention. Bro. Grenewalt was then received by baptism, and still there are more to follow. On Thursday evening, July 30, we hold a Communion service, at which time we expect to receive another by baptism. Rejoice with us and pray that the good work may go on until many, yea, very many sheaves are gathered for the Master!

Notes from Our Correspondents.

"As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

ONE BAPTIZED.—The members of the Garrison church, Benton Co., Iowa, have cause to rejoice. One more dear sister has been added to the fold. May she ever be guided by the Good Spirit into the ways of peace and holiness! -Lizzie Johnson, Garrison, Iowa, July 22.

ONE ADDITION.—The members of the Mississinewa church, Ind., re-organized their Sunday-school recently. It resulted in the election of Bro. Lewis Moomaw as Superintendent, and the writer Assistant Superintendent. Yesterday, after our regular meeting, there was one sister added to the church at this place.—Calvin W. Hooke.

PROSPECTIVE MEETINGS.—Our love-feast in the Waddam's Grove church, Ill., will occur Oct. 14 and 15, commencing at 1 P. M. We intend having a series of meetings, to commence about Oct. 3, and to continue until the feast. Ministering brethren are invited to be with us at our meetings. —Israel Stees.

HARMONIOUS COUNCIL.—Our quarterly council, July 3, passed off pleasantly, with the exception of granting letters to our dear brother, G. S. Rairigh and companion, as we always feel sorry to part with those we love. They contemplate leaving us in the near future, to locate in the Johnstown church. This will leave us almost without ministerial help, but we hope all will work together for good. The business of the above meeting could not all be finished, which called for a special council July 11, at which meeting all was adjusted, seemingly satisfactorily. One was also received by letter. Brethren and sisters, pray for us!—Lydia A. Spicher, Hillsdale, Pa., July 17.

LOVE-FEAST RECALLED.—The love-feast announced for Sept. 18, in the Litchfield church, Ill., has been recalled, owing to the fact that the time, as previously given, will conflict with other appointments.—J. P. Studebaker, July 20.

INTERESTING MEETING.—Bro. H. S. Claypool, of Salt Lick Bridge, W. Va., came to us July 17, and preached the Word of God with power. It caused God's children to rejoice and sinners to weep. Many said, it was the best Gospel preaching they ever heard. I believe if Bro. Claypool could hold a series of meetings at this place there would be an ingathering of souls into the kingdom of Christ. We ask the prayers of all the people of God in our behalf, to the saving of many souls. —Harriet Bankhead, Hacker's Valley, W. Va., July 20.

QUARTERLY COUNCIL.—The Mineral Creek church, Johnson Co., Mo., held her quarterly council July 16. A considerable amount of business came before the meeting, which was disposed of in the spirit of brotherly love towards all. Eld. Jacob Witmore, from the Center View church, and Eld. D. M. Mohler, from the Warrensburgh church, were present. Bro. M. S. Mohler, of this church, was ordained to the full ministry. The Mineral Creek church also appointed a love-feast for Oct. 9, to commence at 10 A. M., to which we extend a cordial invitation.—Fred Culp, Leeton, Mo., July 17.

TWO BAPTIZED.—Bro. F. F. Holsopple, of Indiana, who graduated from the Huntingdon Normal College this spring, spent some time in our community, visiting friends and relatives. During his stay he preached four sermons, three in Scalp Level and one in the Greenland house. After his last sermon, on Saturday evening, July 11, a young man and his wife were received into the church by baptism. He is a Sunday-school teacher, and we hope the step he has taken may have a good effect upon the young men composing his class. One brother was restored three weeks ago.—J. E. Blough, Scalp Level, Pa., July 19.

MADE TO REJOICE.—While at our late Annual Meeting we were made glad to meet with so many loved ones of the same precious faith. We enjoyed the Christian spirit that was manifested amongst the saints in all the deliberations of the business that came before the meeting throughout the whole Conference. The Good Lord is always pleased, and will abundantly bless the labor of his children when done with zeal and much charity. Since our return, and meeting with loved ones at home, we were again made to rejoice to see three heads of families unite with us by baptism. One came from the Progressive element, and one from the U. B. church. They now feel well satisfied, and we hope they may ever hold out faithful to the end and be saved!—Joseph John, Roann, Ind., July 4.

PRESSING FORWARD.—The members of the Franklin County church, Iowa, held their quarterly council July 11. Considerable business came before the meeting, which was disposed of satisfactorily. This church was organized Oct. 11, 1890. We have two ministers, Bro William Eikenberry in the first and Bro. Joseph M. Hanawalt in the second degree. We also have two deacons. We number thirty members in all. We chose for our elder, Bro. J. F. Eikenberry, of the Green church. We are now taking steps toward building a meeting-house, which we hope to accomplish in the near future. We have a very interesting Sunday-school in progress. May the Lord help us to press forward in the good work. We ask the prayers of the brethren and sisters everywhere in our behalf.—Mary C. Allen, Hansell, Iowa.

FOUR ADDITIONS.—The members of the Middle Creek church, Mahaska Co., Iowa, are enjoying a refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Four sisters were added to the fold by baptism,—two on July 4, and one on the day after, at two different appointments. We pray that the Lord may keep them faithful!—John Gable, July 17.

COUNCIL-MEETING.—The Brethren of the Pokagon church held their council-meeting July 11. The business of the meeting was disposed of pleasantly. One brother and sister decided to walk with the church no more. May they see the great mistake they have made and again return to the fold! We appointed our love-feast for Oct. 10, commencing at 5 P. M., at which time all are invited to be with us.—Ida Stretch, Dowagiac, Cass Co., Michigan, July 13.

HARVEST MEETING. — The members of the Seneca church of Northwestern Ohio have decided to hold a harvest-meeting in connection with their quarterly council, Aug. 22, at their meeting-house, one and one-half miles north of Bloomville, meeting to begin at 10 A. M. An invitation is extended to members of neighboring churches. Our Communion meeting is appointed for Sept. 12, 1891, at the above-named place, to commence at 10:30 A. M. — S. A. Walker, Bloomville, Ohio, July 21.

FALLEN ASLEEP

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

WEYBRIGHT. In the Monocacy church, near Double Pipe Creek, Md., July 9 1891, of tabercule is of the brain Vernon, youngest son of Samuel and Mary Weybright, aged 13 years, 5 months and 18 days.

Vernon Weybright was a bright, intelligent boy, and bade fair to become a useful man, but the Lord has seen fit to call him to the spirit land. Let us all take warning of our approaching end! Funeral services at the home of his parents. Interment at Rocky Ridge. Services were conducted by the Brethren D. R. SAYLER.

NEFF.—In the same church, April 13, 1891, Bro. H. S. Neff, aged about 38 years.

Bro. Harry was a great sufferer for quite awhile. The cause of his suffering originated from a bruise. He was running a warehouse, and while engaged in cleaning up, he stooped to pick something from the floor, and struck his hip on the iron part of a plow beam. As he struck the sciatic nerve, it caused intense pain at the time,—almost unendurable. He applied different liniments, which eased his pain for awhile, but it grew worse, and a hard lump formed. He applied to different physicians and had to resort to hyperdemics in order to stand the pain.

For about eight months he suffered intensely, saying sometimes that no one could imagine the pain he had to endure, but when he thought of his Blessed Master and what he endured, it helped him greatly to bear his pain. Later on the lump turned to cancer and finally caused his death.

Bro. Harry was a live, energetic business man. In the church he was a faithful deacon, a good singer and full of zeal for the cause of Christ, holding up the idea that a Christian should be known wherever he goes. During his sufferings he called for the elders of the church, and was anointed. Funeral services by Eld. J. F. Oller, Martin Overholser, of the River Brethren and the home ministers, from Philipp. 1: 23. J. R. FOGLESANGER.

SHULLENBERGER.—In the Ridge congregation, Cumberland County, Pa., April 15, 1891, Bro. Adam Shullenbarger, aged about 91 years.

Bro. Adam was strong in the faith, and an active deacon for many years until age disabled him from serving the church. Funeral services by Eld. J. F. Stamy.

FOGELSANGER. — In the same church, June 1, 1891, Bro. Jacob H. Fogelsanger, aged 51 years, 11 months and 23 days.

Bro. Jacob was born, lived and died in the Ridge church. He was married to Catharine Miller. Their union was blest with ten children, four of whom were baptized Jan. 24, 1886. Oct. 12, 1890, two more were received by baptism. His desire was, to live to see his children all in the church at the time of his death.

They were all in the church, save one or so. Deceased was a devoted husband and a kind father. Oct. 4, 1868, he and his companion were received into the church by baptism, and a few years later he was chosen to the office of deacon. He served the church faithfully, and was Assistant Superintendent of the Sunday-school for a few years. Early last fall he was taken with La Grippe, then pneumonia, then rheumatism, which finally terminated in Bright's disease. During his sickness he requested to be anointed, which was attended to in the name of the Lord. Funeral services by Bro. H. Etter at the house, and Eld. J. F. Stamy, Albert Hollinger, and others, at the church. Interment at the Fogelsanger cemetery in the presence of a large audience.

J. R. FOGELSANGER.

KIMMEL.—In the Plum Creek congregation, Pa., June 26, 1891, sister Barbara Kimmel, aged 75 years, 4 months and 20 days.

She leaves a husband and seven children, who watched over her as she passed from this to the life eternal. She was a devout Christian woman in the church for almost half a century. Her life was such that she will long be remembered by those that knew her, for the kindness that she showed to all those who were acquainted with her. The funeral services were conducted by the writer in the presence of a large concourse of people from Philpp. 1: 21. The remains were buried in the Elderton cemetery.

B. W. MILLER.

ZUMBRUN.—At Columbia City, Ind., June 11, 1891, Judah Zumbrun, aged 75 years and 5 months. Her maiden name was Kinsey. She was married to Henry Zumbrun Oct. 12, 1836. Twelve children were born to them. Funeral discourse by Eld. Leonard Hyre and David Miller.

BRANDENBURG.—In the Lower Twin Creek church, Preble Co., Ohio, July 8, 1891, of paralysis, Mrs. Mary Jane, wife of Josiah Brandenburg, and daughter of Samuel and Rebecca Oldfather, aged 54 years, 11 months and 2 days.

Deceased was identified with the Reformed church, in which faith she died, leaving a husband and four children, who very keenly feel their loss. Funeral occasion from the words, "He hath done all things well." Services by the writer.

DANIEL M. GARVER.

HARTZELL.—In the bounds of the Bear Creek church, Montgomery Co., Ohio, June 26, 1891, Eugene Hartzell, son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard Hartzell, aged 21 years, 4 months and 21 days.

Deceased was just entering a promising manhood. His great and constant desire was that he might recover from his sickness, but as death was inevitable, he became reconciled, and he was heard to say at last, that he was going home. Services conducted by Eld. John Bowman and the writer in the U. B. church at Liberty, Ohio, from Ps. 39: 5.

DANIEL M. GARVER.

ERVIN.—At Rockwell City, Kansas, July 11, 1891, Sarah Ervin, wife of Elmer L. Ervin, aged 35 years, 7 months and 6 days.

Deceased was born Dec. 5, 1855. Her maiden name was Sarah Nedrow. Sept. 27, 1874, she united in marriage with Elmer L. Ervin in Richardson County, Nebr. In February, 1879, both united with the German Baptist church near Falls City, Nebr. She leaves a husband and seven children to mourn their loss. The cause of her death was dropsy. The funeral occasion was improved by the writer, assisted by Bro. J. R. Garber, from Heb. 13: 14 to a large concourse of sympathizing friends and neighbors. Interment in Maple Grove cemetery.

G. M. THRONE.

JOHNSON.—In the Berrien congregation, April 23, 1891, sister Catherine Johnson, wife of Bro. Henry Johnson, aged 70 years, 9 months and 8 days.

Deceased was born July 20, 1820. Their married life was fifty-one years and six months. To this union were born eight children, four of whom preceded her to the spirit land. The old brother and four children,—three daughters and one son,—survive her. The funeral services were improved by the writer, assisted by the Advent minister, from the words, "Therefore be ye also ready." Matt. 24: 44. D. P. MILLER.

DIVELY.—Also, in the same congregation, July 18, 1891, sister Katie Dively, aged 20 years, 10 months and 18 days.

Sister Kate had been a sufferer nearly all her life with rheumatism, which developed into dropsy and heart trouble. She felt that all was not well, and that she wanted to secure a home in heaven. In the early spring she called for the brethren to come and baptize her. As she was unable to go to the water, we constructed a box that held sufficient water and baptized her into Christ. Shortly afterwards we had a small Communion with her, as she desired to do all that she could for her Blessed Savior. Soon after she called for the elders of the church to come and anoint her. Having complied with all these requirements, she felt that she had made herself ready, and was willing to go home and be at rest, as she told her mother just a few hours before she died.

The funeral services were improved by the writer from the words, "She hath done what she could," Mark 14, to an attentive and sympathizing congregation of weeping friends. Peace to her ashes! D. P. MILLER.

ZERBE.—In the Upper Stillwater church, Ohio, July 11, 1891, Samuel B. Zerbe, aged 70 years, 10 months and 23 days.

Bro. Zerbe was born Aug. 18, 1820. He was married twice,—first to Elizabeth Deeter, Feb. 8, 1843. Of the seven children who blessed this union, four survive him. The second marriage was to Catherine Bollinger,—maiden name Hoover,— April 27, 1854, who preceded him to the grave nearly one year ago.

We believe all who have learned to know Bro. Zerbe can say that, since he became a member of the church, he has tried to live a devoted and consistent Christian life. After an illness of over a year, the cold messenger of death called, and he sank peacefully to rest. The burial took place on Sunday afternoon from the Upper Stillwater church The last sad rites were witnessed by a large concourse of friends and neighbors. Funeral services by brethren I. J. Rosenberger and S. D. Royer. Interment in the new cemetery.

J. G. PORTER.

MYERS.—In the Waddam's Grove church, Stephenson Co., Ill., June 4, 1891, of diphtheria, Nellie Ray Myers, infant daughter of Albert and Clara Myers, aged 2 years, 8 months and 12 days.

MYERS. — Also in the same place and from the same family, June 29, 1891, Loydie A. Myers, aged 6 years, 4 months and 20 days.

Thus, in so short a time, have these two buds been plucked from earth, to bloom in heaven, their own country. It was indeed hard for the parents to give up these dear ones, but by this visitation of God's providence the father has been brought nearer to him and, July 4, he, with his two sisters, was led into the liquid grave, to come forth in newness of life. Our prayer is that more may follow! Funeral occasion improved by the writer and others from Jer. 31: 15–17.

D. B. EBY.

ABBOTT. — In the West Branch church, Ogle Co., Ill., June 4, 1891, Calvin Arvine, son of Bro. John and sister —— Abbott, aged 23 years, 2 months and 28 days.

This young man was handling a gun and accidentally discharged the contents of two barrels into the lower part of his bowels, after which he lived but a few hours.

This is another warning to those who have not made their peace with God before, to do so, before it is forever too late. May God comfort the bereaved family in this their sad affliction, knowing that our Heavenly Father doeth all things well. Funeral services were conducted by Eld. Joseph Amick from Heb. 9: 27, 28. CLEORA E. WALLACE.

BOLLINGER. Near Walnut, Juniata County, in the Perry congregation, Pa., Feb. 21, 1891, sister Elizabeth, wife of Bro. Benjamin Bollinger, aged 76 years, 3 months and 14 days.

Funeral sermon by Bro. Christian Myers.

EMMA BOLLINGER.

BOLLINGER.—Bro. Benjamin Bollinger, husband of the above died April 30, 1891, aged 83 years, 4 months and 26 days. Funeral sermon by Bro. Isaac Book.

Sister Bollinger was sick from July 11 to February 21. The latter half of that time she was confined to the arm-chair. Bro Bollinger was afflicted from Dec. 15 to April 30. Both had heart disease and suffered intensely.

He was married to a daughter of Bro. Jacob and sister Mary Stong in 1836. Nine children blessed their union,—four sons and five daughters, of whom two sons and three daughters are living. One son and daughter belong to the church (also one daughter who is dead).

The departed brother and sister joined the Brethren church in 1836 at Germany Valley, Huntingdon County, Pa., where they lived for eleven years. Thence they removed to Tuscarora Valley in 1859, where they lived for thirty-two years and died, after a wedded life of almost fifty-five years, being consistent church members for over forty-four years.

EMMA BOLLINGER.

HOOKER.—At Woolwine, Patrick Co., Va., July 11, 1891, Earnest A., son of John A. and Mollie Hooker, aged 2 months and 28 days.

Little Earnest was afflicted from birth and suffered greatly, but we rejoice to know that his afflictions are over, and he is now a bright angel in heaven. MOLLIE HOOKER.

CURRY.—In the Beaver Creek congregation, Rockingham, Va., July 16, 1891, William Curry, aged 85 years, 3 months and 4 days.

Interment at Ottobine. Funeral services by Eld. Jacob Thomas, followed by the writer, from Ps. 119: 59, 89.

An Expert Opinion.

THE "Medical and Surgical Journal" for March 1891, says editorially

"This pretty little city of Idaho Springs, Colorado, is situated in a beautiful park about 37 miles from Denver, and is about 7,500 feet above sea level. It is thrifty, prosperous, and has become noted for its hot and cold mineral springs, which contain medicinal properties of extraordinary value. Idaho Springs as a health resort cannot be excelled this side of the world-renowned Carlsbad Springs of Germany, whose waters and the waters found at Idaho Springs bear almost an identical chemical analysis.

"In the early stages of consumption these waters, combined with the invigorating air of this beautiful climate, are almost a specific. We take pleasure in recommending these waters to all suffering from coughs and catarrhal affections. It is the best place to go to for the cure of phthisis. Those of our colleagues who have been sending their patients to this grand health resort all join in praising the satisfactory results received from the invigorating waters and climate. We would therefore urge physicians to advise their patients threatened with consumption, not to procrastinate, but to try, before it is too late, the salutary effects of the waters of Idaho Springs. The Union Pacific are making special efforts to carry the public to and from this famous resort, with all the modern comfort and ease which the tourist seeking health and pleasure can desire." 22-34.

DEPARTMENTS:—Preparatory, Seminary, College, Business, Short-hand, Pen Art, Music and Bible. $97 pays board, furnished room and fuel for forty weeks.

We announce the out of the new College Hall. Both the Literary and Commercial catalogues contain cuts of all our college building. For particulars, you can tell us on a postal what course of study you would like to take, and we will send you a catalogue and other information free

This year we graduated the first class in the Seminary Department. The courses in this department are scholarly as well as practical. Graduates of the Classical Course receive four years of Greek and five of Latin, and other work in proportion. Students from our Literary Departments can enter any of our leading colleges and receive full credit for work done.

One of the commendable features of our school is the social equality which exists, and is constantly maintained among its students. There is no such thing as upper and lower class among our students. The young man who sweeps rooms and dusts furniture, if he does it well, stands as high as the son of the man of wealth. One of the scientific gardeners of this year potted over 800 bushels of potatoes in the last two years of his school work. She stood second in the Commencement Day on that account.

Last week we said that parents are responsible for what they teach, and for what they allow others to teach their children. Now one asks, "Are not parents responsible for what they cannot teach their children?" Yes, they are. Many parents have their faithful children to add secret, when they should be in some good school, preparing for life's work. Such parents forget that, as we eat the fruit of trees planted by our parents, so the church of the next generation will reap the results of the training we give our children. We cannot afford to neglect the education of our children.

READ CAREFULLY!

Our Wants.

Our real wants in this life are but few. But we all want money. The laborer, the mechanic, lawyer, physician, teacher, and even the minister wants money for service rendered, because with it other wants can be supplied. Money has a standard and a personal value. If I spend one dollar for twenty pounds of meat, I get from a common value. If I spend a dollar for tobacco I get no personal value for it at all. If I spend a dollar for missionary purposes, I lay up treasure in heaven. If I spend a dollar in obtaining a good Christian education, I get possibilities for doing the greatest amount of good work, in the sight of our Lord, is better than money loaned at usury.

What we want to know is how I can put them in ways we love that we may get the most good from it.

We believe the true verdict is get a good Christian education. This will give you money, wisdom how to use it best, and the possibilities for accomplishing the greatest good.

This education can be had by attending the Brethren's schools, and we call special attention to the

Huntingdon College,

about which we will have more to say next week.

Garfield Beach on Great Salt Lake, Utah.

THE famous health resort, Garfield Beach, on Great Salt Lake, 18 miles from Salt Lake City, is reached via the Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," and is now open for the season.

This is the only real sand beach on Great Salt Lake, and is one of the finest bathing and pleasure resorts in the West. Owing to the stimulating effect of the brine on the skin, or the saline air upon the lungs the appetite is stimulated, and after a bath, the bathers are ready for a hearty meal, and feel greatly invigorated.

Fine bath houses, accommodating 400 people, have been erected at Garfield Beach, in connection with which there is a first-class restaurant and a fine, large pavillion built out over the lake. All of these are run by the Union Pacific, which guarantees a first-class resort in every respect.

Concerning the feast in Chicago, Bro. Wm. R. Miller writes: "As previously stated in our last note, we held our love-feast Thursday evening, July 30, Bro. J. G. Royer officiating. We had a very delightful little service. About twenty members were present, but the best of all, three precious souls were willing to walk in newness of life, and were, after the service, received by baptism. Six have, within the year, been received into the church by baptism, and we think there are others very near."

Can any one tell why it is that so many of our young men are making so much preparation to fit themselves for the secular callings of life, while so very few are preparing for the highest of all callings in life,—that of the Christian ministry? Is the church at fault in trying to make believe that no preparation is necessary for this calling? There may be such persons in the church, but they must be such persons as have but little knowledge of the fitness required, or such as have never gotten far enough to learn the grave responsibilities that are connected with the holy calling. Men may afford to be novices and unskilled in secular callings,—but never in the sacred calling of the ministry, where the salvation of souls is at stake.

"John Adams in his old age went to Faneuil Hall to see Stuart's Washington, near which stood his own bust. Pointing to the hero's firmly closed mouth he said: 'That great man could hold his tongue, which this fool,' tapping his own bust with his cane, 'never could learn.'"

Please do not write articles for publication with a pencil. By the time such matter reaches us through the mail it becomes too dim to be read with ease. Parties who do not have ink convenient may be excused for writing church news with a pencil, but please write all regular articles with black ink. Never use red ink.

Prophets are always in abundance. Not long since we were to have a drought, and, as a result, we would have no summer crops, and the fruit, though well set, would dry up on the trees, and a general failure would follow. Soon after this the refreshing showers came in such abundance that the tune was changed, and the grain was all to rot in the shock on the fields. Good weather followed, the grain was gathered, the hay made, and the promise for an abundant summer crop was never better, and what now? Over-production and a crash! Money may get tight, and a general series of financial failures is coming. No matter how good our Heavenly Father is, the people must grumble and have terrible things happen. What a world of trouble could be saved, if we all could trust in the goodness of a Loving Father!

Two Alabama doctors have gotten into a discussion about the form of baptism, one Episcopal, and the other Christian or Disciple. The Episcopal made a wager of $1,000 to any man who can give conclusive evidence that immersion is taught as Christian baptism,—that is, as the only form of Christian baptism taught by the Bible. This wager is made with the condition that there shall be ten judges, five of whom are to be Episcopal ministers of his own choosing, and the other five to be chosen by the Disciple doctor. The division of the judges seems to be fair enough, but it does not require a very wise man to determine how the vote would be cast. Each doctor will be quite sure of keeping his $1,000, and we suppose this will be the right thing to do. The childish part of it is to offer a wager of this kind. Dollars and cents cannot make a decision for God, and it is a defamation on God's character for such offers to be made or accepted, and we hope that none of our Brethren will be caught in either. The true man of God needs no wager to spur him to a defense of the truth. He will do this because he loves it, and because on it depends his salvation.

JEPHTHAH'S VOW.

We have, at different times, been urged to give an exposition of Judges 11: 37–40, but on account of the many opinions that have already been advanced,—some most unreasonable and barbarous,—we have hesitated.

But as we are now again asked to give our views, we will now do so, hoping that what we may say will be in harmony with the mind of God and his truth.

In trying to interpret any of these seemingly abstruse utterances, we must first take into consideration the customs and laws of the times and the character of those connected therewith.

Jephthah, though rash and impulsive in disposition, was not only a good man, but he also understood the laws of God as they related to offerings and sacrifices, so that, in interpreting the meaning of the vow which he at this time made, these two facts must be the basis upon which the interpretation is made.

First, in this circumstance the translation is faulty. According to the best Hebrew scholars, it should read this way: "I will consecrate it to the Lord; or, I will offer it for a burnt offering." This rendering is in harmony, both with the law and with reason. There were certain things that Jephthah, as a believer in God, could and could not do. Had there, on his return, a dog come out to meet him, he could not have consecrated it to the Lord, neither could he have offered it as a burnt offering to the Lord, because the dog was one of the unclean animals by law. Therefore a dog or any other unclean beast could not be included in the vow. Had a neighbor, neighbor's wife or child come out to meet him, he could not, by law, have either consecrated or sacrificed them, because they would not have been within his power, and therefore neither they nor any other living person, outside of his own family, could have been included in his vow. So the vow made must be confined to either clean beasts or members of his own family. If the first, they could be offered as a burnt offering, and if the second, consecrated. And as it happened to be one of his own family,—his daughter,—she could be lawfully consecrated to the Lord, which Jephthah did, and thus fulfilled his vow. This makes the whole matter very simple, reasonable, and in harmony with the actions of a Christian man and the laws of God.

To accept the idea that he offered his own daughter as a burnt offering,—a humam sacrifice,—to the Living God, is an outrage, and prostituting God down to barbarism.

The consecration of Jephthah's daughter, in this case, meant giving her to the Lord's service in a perpetual state of virginity. This harmonizes with the request of the thirty-seventh verse. Before entering into this state, she wished to have a short time to take leave of her young associates, as was the custom in such cases.

Taking this view of the matter, we have in it a very interesting narrative of the actions and doings of God's people in former dispensations, and this gives us two very important lessons,—that we should be careful in making vows, and, when made, we should conscientiously carry them out as far as they are in harmony with right.

ONE MORE IN HEAVEN.

SELECTED BY AMELIA C. NOFZIGER.

One less at home!
The charmed circle broken—a dear face
Missed day by day from its accustomed place,
But cleansed and saved and perfected by grace.
One more in heaven!

One less at home!
One voice of welcome hushed, and evermore
One farewell word spoken; on the shore
Where parting comes not, one soul landed more—
One more in heaven!

One less at home!
Chill as the east-born mist, the thought would rise,
And wrap our footsteps round, and dim our eyes,
But the bright sunbeam darteth from the skies—
One more in heaven!

One more at home!
This is not home, where, cramped in earthly mold,
Our sight of Christ is dim—our love is cold;
But there, where face to face we shall behold,
Is home and heaven!

One less at home!
Its pains, its sorrow, and its toil to share;
One less the pilgrim's cross to bear,
One more the crown of ransomed souls to wear,
At home in heaven!

One more in heaven!
Another thought to brighten cloudy days,
Another theme for thankfulness and praise,
Another link on high, our souls to raise
To home and heaven!

One more at home!
That home where separation cannot be,
That home where none are missed eternally;
Lord Jesus, grant us all a place with thee,
A home in heaven!

PEACE ON EARTH AND GOOD WILL TO MEN.

BY B. F. MOOMAW.

Number Four.

His third argument is that the spirit of the New Testament is not different from that of the Old in this respect. It would hardly seem necessary to say more upon this subject, for what has already been said cannot fail to satisfy every intelligent mind that this position is untenable, but we will add a few testimonies.

We have admitted that, in the Old Testament, war is allowed, but in the New it is forbidden. We are commanded not to resist evil. The author of the New Testament is a priest after the order of Melchisedec, who is the King of Salem, which, being interpreted, is King of Peace. Upon one occasion the apostles James and John asked the privilege of Christ to punish their enemies, but he turned and rebuked them, saying, "Ye know not what manner of spirit ye are of, for the Son of man is not come to destroy men's lives, but to save them." When Peter would have taken the sword to have prevented the arrest of Christ, he straightway commanded him to put up his sword. The apostle Paul says, "The weapons of our warfare are not carnal, but mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds," etc.

We will next notice the quotation made by him in support of this position, and will certainly claim it upon a logical interpretation, as an evidence in our favor. Christ says, "My kingdom is not of this world, else would my servants fight, that I should not be delivered to the Jews." "That is," says he, "if he had intended to set up a kingdom like the kingdoms of the world, he would have armed his followers, thus showing that it is right to resist evil," etc. What, then, is the legitimate conclusion arising from this text? We understand the Savior to imply that he is a king, and intends to set up a kingdom. That kingdom will be composed of the children of men, but as Christ will give them of his spirit, they will be different from the subjects of the kingdoms of this world. They will be inoffensive in their habits, for I have forbidden them to fight, even when I was apprehended, for as I am not of the world, and do not fight, so they are not of the world and will not fight. "I have given them the Word, and the world hated them, because they are not of the world, even as I am not of the world." If they were of the world, the world would love them, but because they are not of the world, but I have chosen them out of the world, therefore the world hateth them. If my kingdom were of the world, then would my servants fight, but my kingdom being not of this world, therefore my servants do not fight.

Our author next informs us that the argument adduced against war is generally drawn from Christ's Sermon on the Mount, and that it apparently contains the most conclusive proof found in the Scriptures. This declaration we deny, and flatter ourselves that we have shown in this article that the whole letter and spirit of the New Testament teaches the same doctrine, and challenge proof to the contrary.

"But," he says, "if the argument is good against war, it proves too much." No doubt it proves too much for the carnal mind. "It proves not only that you must not resist evil," (says he) "but that you must submit to the loss of property, and the other inconveniences and injuries therein commanded." So be it. The Lord has spoken, and it is for us to obey. The promise is: "If we forsake all for Christ, we shall receive an hundredfold in this life, and in the world to come life eternal." We should not fear him that kills the body, and has no power further, but rather fear God who is able to destroy both soul and body in hell. We understand, as before stated, that we are not violently to resist evil. This doctrine requires strong faith and much grace, for we must admit that it comes right in contact with our nature and requires great self-denial.

"Deny thyself and take thy cross,
Is the Redeemer's great command;
Nature must count itself but dross,
If she would gain that heavenly land."

Further on he says: "Your policy then would be, if your principles be correct, not only to not resist, but when they would come and take forty acres of land, you must give them eighty."

In this the gentleman is a little mistaken. The command does not say, "Give," but, "Let them take." If they will violently take all, we can do no better. "But," he says further, "if the interpretation that makes this or any other passage in the sermon on the mount teach non-resistance, it is false and absurd." Well, if it does not teach non-resistance when it says, "Resist not evil," pray, what does it mean? We know what it says, and if it does not mean what it says, please tell us what it does mean. Please tell us the private interpretation, and by what rule you obtain the information. Remove these restrictions from around us, and you will do us a great favor. You will enable us to fall into the popular current, which would be very agreeable to our nature, apart from the spirit of Christ. We are social in our disposition, and if you could so enlighten us as to remove these convictions, you would relieve us from this unpleasant exclusive position. But I greatly fear that when we hear from you again, you will refer us to the law of human nature, which is so greatly at a discount with us.

But you gravely tell us again that Christ has said, "Think not that I have come to destroy the law and the prophets. I am not come to destroy, but to fulfill." What is this law and the prophets? Hear what Christ says to the young nobleman: "What is written in the law? How readest thou?" "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy mind, with all thy soul, and with all thy strength, and thy neighbor as thyself, and on these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets." Here, then, we have the law and the prophets all included in the great law of love. Where, then, is the law for shedding the blood of your fellow-men? We will have to be told again, In the great principles of our nature, as God has made us, and which cannot be set aside by any authority of a professed revelation. Our author quotes in this connection that saying of Christ, "Whoever shall break one of the least of these commandments and teach men so, shall be called the least in the kingdom of heaven." What application he wishes to make of this, I am at a loss to know. Certainly he does not mean to say that God has commanded his people to make it a business to kill one another. If so, why quote this passage in this connection?

Right here he fancies to himself that he has demolished the very foundation of the peace principles, when really I cannot see that he has produced a single testimony, or offered a single argument, affecting it in the least. But being sanguine of his success, he concludes that he that teaches that war is wrong, denies that Christ was right when he said, "My servants would fight if my kingdom were of this world." It is not necessary that I should repeat the explanation of this passage, as it can be referred to by the reader. But he says we also deny that the magistrate bears the sword lawfully. We do not deny any such thing, for we have always made it a point to respect the laws of our country, and to do that which is lawful and right, but when the powers that be, should make laws that conflict with the laws of God, as clearly revealed in the divine code, we think it our duty to obey God rather than man. If the powers that be would require us to do anything conflicting with the law of God, we could not do it, but we willingly pay our tribute, and do anything that we can conscientiously do. "Such a theory," says the gentleman, "would destroy all government," etc.

We are no prophets, and, therefore, cannot say what would be the result of our theory, but we are entirely willing to leave it to him who has given us this theory. He knows what the result will be, and what he has determined shall be, will be. If it results in the subversion of the kingdoms of this world and the introduction, or rather the more full development of his peaceable kingdom, we say, "Amen, thy kingdom come, thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven," and if the result should not be to the liking of our friend, let him complain of the Author and not of the disciple.

His fourth proposition is: "If war and self-defense are right, and justifiable in the sight of God and man, what is our duty in the present crisis?" This is his assertion, but his attempt to prove it has resulted in a signal failure, and therefore it would seem unnecessary to take any further notice of it, but I will notice some of his remarks farther. He asks, "Is it right to preach peace, when such preaching only weakens the hands of the Government, in maintaining the position into which, by your votes, you have helped to bring it? Is it right to throw obstacles in the way of the prosecution of this war, when your own rights and safety depend upon its success?"

To the first I answer that we do not wish to be the means by which any person shall be made to suffer, and do not know that our votes affected it in any way. I did not vote for secession, but singly voted against it in the presence of five hundred persons in our court-house.

As I have said before,—if all had been of us, there would have been no war. But to preach peace, I conceive to be right under all circumstances, because it is impossible to preach the Gospel without preaching peace. This was the theme of our Divine Master and his Apostles as well as the messengers from heaven, who proclaimed the advent of the Prince of Peace, "Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, and good will toward men."

Again, we are commanded by the apostle to "be shod with a preparation of the Gospel of peace," "for he is our peace who hath made both one, and broken down the middle wall of partition between us." He came and preached peace to them that were nigh, and to you that were far off.

This seems to have been the whole design of the Gospel, and, in its ultimate results, we learn from the Scriptures, all enmity will be slain. "The lion shall lay down with the lamb, the young lion and the fatling shall eat straw together, and the young child shall lead them all, and nothing shall hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord." Why, then, should not we preach peace?

To the second question we reply, that it is not our intention to throw any obstacle in the way, and as to our rights, etc., we are not so much concerned, as to preserve our conscience void of offense against God.

Our opponent further says that if our principles be correct, certain things follow: (1) If the Government, under which we live, calls for our services, then we ought to go for twice the length demanded. (2) If the Government drafts one of our sons, we ought to send another as a volunteer, etc. This is what I call trifling with sacred things, and every person, with any intelligence, will see at once that this is an illogical and unreasonable position, and, therefore, needs but little further notice. Any one will see at once that this view comes in contrast with the first principles, and is, therefore, a fallacy.

He further says "that to be consistent, we should go and make ourselves a target to be shot at, so as to carry out our non-resistant principles fully. Otherwise malicious persons might take occasion to call us cowards which would be a great reproach."

As far as that is concerned, we are very indifferent about what poor, degraded mortals may say of us. Their time is very short when all their power will be at an end, and for the information of the gentleman, I will tell him that, as far as my acquaintance extends, it is none but cowards who are so clamorous for us to be put in the army. I have not heard of a single case of a volunteer saying anything about it. They are somewhat like the brave young officer under General DeKalb, who said, with relation to the ministry and Christians generally, "They may do the praying and I will do the fighting." I do not know why it is that those who have not engaged in the war themselves, are so much concerned about us, unless it is to shelter them from danger. Here he again asserts that he believes that our principles are unscriptural, etc., without sustaining one proposition by the Scriptures or argument. How easy it is to believe anything when we want to believe it! Therefore he concludes that, because he believes so, and because we might be called cowards, we should at once abandon those principles that we have always held sacred, without a single reason except the great principles of our nature. If we would do this we might, with propriety, be called cowards.

He says again, "If our premises are right, we are equally bound to go, and be shot at, if we cannot shoot." What sense would there be in such a course, -what good purpose could it answer? It would only destroy those citizens, who, according to your own showing, contribute most to the material interests of the country. You would destroy that portion of your citizens who contribute a larger share, comparatively, to the support of your government than any other class. Not one of them is suffered to become a charge to the commonwealth, and not only this,—they do more than any other class of citizens in promoting agricultural industries, and advancing the general interests of the country in which they live. Besides this they are peaceable and quiet, attending to their own business. Why, then, have them destroyed, without the hope of anything being gained? Let them stay at home; let them make bread, and if you think proper to take it for the support of your army, they will not resist, nor murmur much. They will also freely contribute in comforts for your sick and wounded; only do not force them to do what they cannot conscientiously do.

Bonsacks, Va.

FROM JERUSALEM.

[THE Age to Come Herald has in the City of Jerusalem a correspondent who writes some exceedingly interesting letters. Below we copy a few of them. They will help our readers to a better understanding of the feelings and condition of affairs in that place.—ED.]

Jerusalem, April 22, 1891.

Here we are, all well, and up to our eyes in work, as the saying is.

We hear of new arrivals every week; some with special messages for Jerusalem. It seems that some who get new light upon religious subjects feel like coming to Jerusalem. Well, this is not strange, as it really is the place God has chosen for the people to flow to for instruction, and straws tell which way the wind blows.

One day a woman comes to me with the claim that a woman is to save the human race. Next will come a man with the claim that a certain man will bring deliverance to our race. A third declares that Christ will soon come to the Mount of Olives, and take his sinless people up into the air, while the largest portion of the race, especially the poor Jews will be left behind to weep and gnash their teeth.

However, I am expecting more and stranger events than these. Many will run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased.

The Jew in silence keeps his own counsel; and wakes up to a new interest in the prophecies of the God of Israel; and goes on with the work of rebuilding Jerusalem as fast as possible.

According to the present feeling of the Jews that I am acquainted with, they would not exclude Christians, Moslem, nor pagan from the blessings promised to them. All are welcome to share in the great salvation.

Tourists are still arriving from England and America; a large number of whom are clergymen, which is a significant fact. It is, indeed, time that the ministry were awake.

Jerusalem, April 29, 1891.

Another week has passed since I last wrote. How swift the days, and weeks, and months pass away! I cannot get through with the work I plan to do.

The last I have heard from America the people were dying with La Grippe. We are having it here in Jerusalem, but it does not appear to be very fatal.

I have mentioned the cranks and strange people who still continue to come. Mystics, Spiritists, Agnostics, and I know not what else, all have plans of their own for setting up the kingdom; and it is unaccountably strange that they all believe Jerusalem is the place for the news to go forth from.

The tourist season has about ended and our city is getting to be quiet again.

We hear much about the Russian Jews who are coming to Jerusalem. Some say many thousands are coming. I think no one knows how many are coming.

Last week the Jews all kept the passover, after which they go on building as usual.

The Latins continue to buy all the houses and land they can get hold of. It is difficult to get tenements now at any price.

It is quite cool. The wind is blowing a gale, with very little rain.

I wish you could see what the Jews are doing. It is astonishing beyond all account.

The English Consul has been obliged to take a small house, very unsuitable. I think we shall be glad to have even a tent for a shelter soon.

Prices of all eatables have advanced. Of course the merchants will take advantage of the situation.

If we did not know for a certainty that a wise God was at the head of matters, we might well despair. He will provide, miraculously, too. Shall we open our lips to complain when we see just what we have been expecting to take place for twenty years? It is truly encouraging to find that we have been misled in the course we have taken. Let us take courage and keep on in a straight and narrow way to the end! God will provide. All things must work together for good to those who love the Lord and for the glorious truth and the coming Kingdom.

Jerusalem, May 12, 1891.

It has been a long time since we have heard from you. I hope La Grippe has not caught you. I sometimes almost dread to hear for fear of bad news. There are many calamities taking place.

We are having strange weather now. The wind is blowing a gale this morning.

The tourists' season is closing up fast, except a few remaining to get a few more glimpses of the famous old beloved city of the Great King.

I get very tired in my daily labors. However, we have the best air in the world to breathe, and with such air my work is not so tedious as it would otherwise be.

Our garden is looking most beautiful and nice. The grape and fig crops are very promising.

Benjamin is picking beans for the market. He gets a better price for beans and almost everything else than many, he is so careful to have it all so nice and perfect. He is a spendid gardener anyway, and he can sell almost everything the people want, because they know it is good and nice.

He manages to buy all he wishes to purchase in the market, and sell whatever he has to sell, and does all his business in every way with all classes of the people, and yet he cannot speak Arabic. It is remarkable how well he gets along with his business, for which he deserves great praise.

The Jewish families have not arrived, neither has the Consul, Mr. Merrill. However, they will all be sure to come.

I understand that the hotels have gathered in a rich harvest this year; as there have been more visitors than usual. There are three hundred French people here now.

There are some cases of La Grippe still in Jerusalem, but it has not been fatal with many. I have thus far escaped it.

I am told that the Latins have bought all that part of Mount Olives where the Mosque and the Church of Ascension are situated. [The Latins are the Catholics.—Ed.] They are trying to get possession of all the sacred places they possibly can about Jerusalem. They are pushing ahead to keep even with the Jews; but they can never do it; prophecy is against them.

The Jews are now praying in the synagogues for rain. We had great rains through the winter, but for two months have had but little.

HONESTY.

BY D. E. PRICE.

Number One.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."—Matt. 7: 12; Luke 6: 31.

By special request I undertake to write on this subject, and could think of no more suitable Scripture than the above as a foundation. We mean to first treat it from a natural or financial stand-point, and, secondly, shall try to make some application of it spiritually.

We seldom find persons dishonest with themselves, but if they take advantage at all, they try to deceive their fellow-men, or, as is sometimes said, "they try to get the longest end of the bargain." Let us apply the Golden Rule: If we would not take advantage of ourselves, nor want others to take advantage of us in our business affairs, we ought not to take advantage of those with whom we transact business.

There are a great many ways by which dishonesty can creep into our business transactions, if we are not careful in our dealings with one another and the world. The prophet has truly said, "As a nail sticketh fast between the joinings of the stones; so doth sin stick close between buyer and seller." Ecclesiasticus 27: 2.

1. We may be dishonest by living beyond our income, and thus living at the expense of others. How many to-day, by endeavoring to keep up to the times in style and fashion, have become bankrupt, and probably have been the cause of others failing, who placed confidence in them, and who all the time, apparently, stand high in society and in the church?

Again there are others who feign bankruptcy in order to get rid of paying their just debts. They assign their property so their creditors cannot reach it by law, settle with them for twenty or fifty per cent, and start in business again on a larger scale than ever. Too often such men are recognized as shrewd business men, while they ought to meet the frowns of the entire community. As long as such men are held up in society and in the church, we need not expect a reform in this direction.

2. We are dishonest when we give our obligations or make promises, when we do not know if we will be able to meet them, thus disappointing our creditors time and again, thereby losing our credit. Even from a financial stand-point, I believe, a man would better borrow money a dozen times, to meet his obligations, than to disappoint once. It is said that honesty is the best policy. Hence, if a man will not be honest from principle, he would better be honest, even for policy's sake. I am afraid many of our young men, and older ones too, and sometimes brethren, make a great mistake by not living up to their promises. Thus they lose their credit, and then, when they need friends, they have none, and very seldom succeed in business. A rich man may, possibly, get along without friends, but a poor man cannot afford to be dishonest.

There was a time when the Brethren church had the reputation of being honest, and if they wanted credit, they always got it, if it was possible to be gotten, but I fear we have lost that reputation to, at least, some extent, because we hold such in fellowship who are dishonest, and frequently do not bring them to judgment, as we ought, for their wrong doing.

We remember, some years ago, of a brother approaching another brother in this way: "What shall we do with Bro.——? He borrowed $20.00 of me about one year ago and promised to pay it in thirty days, and has not paid it yet." The brother said, "Why do you come to me with it? Why don't you proceed according to Matt. 18,—not because he owes you $20.00, but because he has violated a principle of the Gospel of Christ? Have him acknowledge his wrong, and promise to do better, and then he will not likely do it any more."

But we too often do not go according to Matt. 18, as we all promised before we were received into the church, but let the brother go, with the sin resting upon him, and he next does business the same way with the people of the world, and brings reproach on the cause of Christ, and the church has to suffer in consequence of his wrong doing. I am afraid we may sometimes think we are suffering for Christ's sake, when we are only suffering for our evil deeds, or for a neglect of duty. Probably, if we had done our duty towards that brother in time, the world would have had no occasion to speak reproachfully of the church. The apostle Peter, in his first epistle 4: 15, 16, when writing on the subject of suffering, says: "But let none of you suffer as a murderer, or as a thief, or as an evil doer, or as a busybody in other men's matters. Yet if any man suffer as a Christian, let him not be ashamed; but let him glorify God on this behalf."

3. Dishonesty is sometimes shown by our being always ready to correct mistakes when they are against us, but when they are in our favor, we let them pass. A strictly honest man, who is honest from principle, will as readily correct mistakes in his favor, as when they are against him. There are, no doubt, many who are thought to be strictly honest, and may think so of themselves, until some great temptation comes in their way. Some may be tempted by a very small amount, while it may take thousands to tempt others to fall into the same error.

4. Another species of dishonesty is in appropriating that which is committed, by others, to our trust, or under our control, to our own use, especially when we are not sure whether we can replace it again at the proper time. Many have been ruined in this way, financially, morally and spiritually. They have applied that which belonged to another to their own use at first, at least, with the intention of paying back before it would be needed, but when the time came, they didn't have it. This opened the way for another and greater temptation and finally the matter ended by paying the penalty of their crime in the State Prison, and thereby bringing disgrace on themselves and their families.

CHRIST THE ROCK.

BY MATTIE A. LEAR.

"And did all drink the same spiritual drink; for they drank of that spiritual Rock that followed them: and that Rock was Christ."—1 Cor. 10: 4.

Paul, the learned Pharisee and disciple of Gamaliel, was well instructed in the Jewish Scriptures. The law and the prophets were familiar to him. Perhaps no man was ever better qualified to comprehend the great truths, taught by Jesus of Nazareth, and to see in them the fulfillment and complete complement of the Old Testament Scriptures. He understood that the law was but a shadow of things to come, while the body is of Christ.

In our text he alludes to the miraculous supply of water, furnished to the Israelites in their journey through the desert. At Rephidim, their third encampment after leaving the Red Sea, the people were distressed for want of water, there being no water there for the people to drink. As was their custom, they murmured against Moses, saying, "Give us water that we may drink." The Almighty directed Moses to take the rod in his hand, with which he had smitten the waters of the Red Sea, and go to a certain rock in the mountains of Horeb, and smite the rock, the blessed promise being given, "Behold I will stand before thee there upon the rock in Horeb; and there shall come water out of it that the people may drink."

How long the stream that issued from this rock, supplied them with water, we know not; but after the lapse of about thirty-eight years, having wandered so long in the wilderness of Paran, as a punishment for their sinful murmurings and rebellions, on the return of the spies from the land of Canaan, they again reach the station of Kadish. They are near the completion of their wearisome journey.

Again they are in want of water. In their distress they complain, and blame Moses and Aaron, as was their wont. These faithful men lay their burden before the Lord, who directed them to proceed to a certain rock, and speak to it before the eyes of the people, promising that "it shall give forth his water, so thou shalt give the congregation and their beasts drink."

It was here that Moses made his one fatal mistake,—a mistake that barred his entrance into the Promised Land. It was here that he disobeyed the voice of his Divine Master. Instead of only speaking to the rock, as directed, he manifested impatience by smiting it twice, and, instead of speaking to the rock, he spake to the people, calling them rebels, and seemed to ascribe the glory partly to himself and his brother.

But what are we to learn from all this? This rock, as the apostle explains, represents Christ. It was necessary in the divine economy that this Rock should first be smitten. He must be wounded for our transgressions, bruised for our iniquities, the chastisement of our peace was to be upon him, and with his stripes we are healed. He must suffer all the shame and agony of Gethsemane and Golgotha that a world might be redeemed from the awful thraldom of sin.

But the debt having been paid, divine justice having been satisfied, the great redemptive plan having been fully wrought out, and, "It is finished," having been uttered from the cross, the life-giving fountain that emanates from him, is free to all who will approach, and, in sincerity and truth, ask him for those blessings which he alone can give. What a parched and barren desert this life would be, but for these living waters that are ever accessible to the thirsty soul!

Oh, what a privilege that in all the conditions and circumstances of life, we may speak to this Rock! That we may speak to him as to our Elder Brother, telling him all our wants, laying all our sins at his feet, asking him to pardon and cleanse us from their awful defilement,—to deliver us from the power and love of sin. How blessed that we may ask him to purify us, and make us meet for a home among the sanctified! To him we may take all our sorrows, if we have no earthly friend to whom we may tell our griefs. Here we will always find one, tender and full of sympathy.

"What a friend we have in Jesus,
All our sins and griefs to bear;
What a privilege to carry Everything to God in prayer!"

But while we may speak to him, speak to him freely, speak to him in confidence, speak to him with the blessed assurance that our pleadings will not be in vain, for he has given us the comforting promise, that, "All things, whatsoever we shall ask in prayer, believing, we shall receive," oh, how we need to guard ourselves, lest, like Moses, amid the perplexities, temptations and countless annoyances, incident to life, we may be betrayed into impatience, and thus smite this Rock, smite him by our murmurings at the manifold misfortunes and afflictions that fall to our lot, imagining that our cup is more bitter than that of others. Unbelief will repine at this. But hush, oh hush! thou doubting heart! Wherever my Master places me, that is the sphere best suited for me, the place where I can best work out my salvation.

We may smite him by our disobedience. He himself hath said, "If a man love me, he will keep my words," and "He that loveth me not, keepeth not my sayings." John 14: 23, 24. We may smite him by our want of gratitude. We are commanded to "give thanks always, for all things, unto God and the Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ." Eph. 5: 20. Do we do this? Do we give thanks for that which is distasteful to us, or do we complain about it?

We may smite him by our unseemly conduct. Says Paul: "Whether therefore ye eat, or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God." 1 Cor. 10: 31. We may smite him by our unbecoming conversation. It is enjoined on us to refrain from "foolish talking and jesting." Eph. 5: 4. Alas! how common this is even among professors, and also that our conversation be without covetousness. Would that the household of faith were free from this fault; but how often, in our associations with each other, do the things of this world form the chief topic of conversation! And against the slanderer, Holy Writ has this fearful denunciation, "Whoso privily slandereth his neighbour, him will I cut off." Ps. 101: 5.

Moses, because he smote the rock in the wilderness, was not permitted to enter the earthly Canaan. So it is possible to those who have tasted the good Word of God, and the powers of the world to come, to fall away, to crucify to themselves the Son of God afresh, and put him to an open shame. To such the heavenly Canaan will forever be closed.

May God in mercy save each one of us from this awful doom, and may all, each in the place allotted to him by an infinitely Wise and Holy Father, "work out our salvation before him with fear and trembling; for it is God which worketh in us both to will and to do of his good pleasure." Philpp. 2: 12, 13. Oh, let us ever work in harmony with God, that this great work may be accomplished, and it can only be accomplished by a perfect submission of our wills to his will.

A TALK ON CONGREGATIONAL SINGING.

BY L. W. TEETER.

No arguments are needed to prove that singing "with the spirit and with the understanding" is an acceptable service with God; so is prayer. But there is a feature in the singing exercise, peculiar to itself, not found in prayer. One may pray acceptably when alone in his closet. He can pray fully as acceptably in the congregation, either vocally or secretly. So he may sing acceptably to God when alone, but when he is in the congregation, the singing that might be acceptable in private might not be acceptable there. Suppose every one would sing in his own way, it would be utter confusion,—grating on the ear, and displeasing to the Lord, yet, the way each one would sing, might be acceptable to the Lord in private, for discord would then be impossible. In congregational singing it is just as necessary to be perfectly joined together in the same mind, and in the same judgment, as in anything else.

Discord is an unwelcome associate anywhere. We have no use for it anywhere between baptism and the grave, and when it gets among us, we should immediately take consistent steps to rid ourselves of it. But now, in this singing service, we should employ every consistent means to prevent discord. Of course we make all due allowance for those who have not the natural faculty for singing. Such persons are generally good listeners, or if they do attempt to sing, they are very seldom heard, for fear of a mistake, and we should all have forbearance and sympathy for them, and what they lack we should try to supply. Various efforts have been made by the church to encourage congregational singing in the church. Some advancement has been made, but much more can yet be made. The first aim at success, to gain the greatest good from the least effort should be, to have harmonious efforts, that is, let all our efforts, the church over, be, as nearly as possible, conducted in the same manner, by the same helps, so that, when members go into another congregation, they may participate in the service with ease and enjoyment, and that their associations together may stir up an interest in both. It would be but a short time until the congregational singing would be as uniform all over the church as is any ordinance of the church, or as our peculiar manner of conducting church services in general.

To accomplish that end, efforts should be made at our Annual Meetings, at our District Meetings, Ministerial Meetings, and wherever an opportunity might be had, to have a special session or sessions for training in song service, giving brief instructions on the subject. The book that should be used in all those song services should be the recognized one in the church, which at this time is "The Brethren's Hymn Book," or "The Brethren's Hymnal." Instead of introducing new books, at Annual Meeting especially, which can be of no service in congregational singing, for scarcely any would have them in each congregation at home,—let every brother and sister, who can do so, bring the "Hymnal" there. Then, in the song services, all will have books,—for the lack of books has always been against the song services at Annual Meeting. Then, what is gained or acquired by a few, will be distributed almost over the entire Brotherhood, and the benefit will be general and uniform.

Let the use of any other book be discontinued in church service, if possible, in all the congregations over the Brotherhood.

The present Hymnal contains a sufficient variety of hymns and tunes for all purposes. The music is good. All that is needed is to fully render it. Often, in private singing, persons remarked: "Why, I did not know that there were such good pieces of music in the 'Hymnal.'" The only reason why they never knew, was, they did not test them.

We now come to a suggestion which we made to the Brethren's Publishing Company, as an "expedient," to encourage an interest in congregational singing in the local congregations. Seeing, in the later editions of the "Hymnal," the rudiments of music, printed in a good shape, on four pages, but sufficient to learn to read music, we thought of the idea of having those four pages of rudiments with a number of select pages from the Hymnal, printed in pamphlet form, bound in good, solid paper, similar to the Annual Meeting Report.

The Brethren reported that they could print a pamphlet, containing sixty-four pages, including the rudiments, for ten cents per copy, saying that if 500 copies could be sold, the work would be put up immediately.

The pages have been selected, and if printed, the work will contain 101 pieces of music, a good variety for every purpose, as drill, with the rudiments, and, at the low price, will be in reach of all to have a copy of their own, in which the rudiments can be learned.

The most beneficial singing we have ever had in our congregation was the "free singing class,"—everybody come and sing being the only compensation.

Lastly, the advantage of the above project is, that out of those select pages, whatever is learned in the way of drill or song service, is of practical use in the congregation, and at once proves a benefit. The work can be used in connection with the Hymnal, the numbers and pages corresponding.

This work should be forthcoming soon. Therefore we will say to the Brethren, Send in your orders to the Brethren's Publishing Co., Mt. Morris, Ogle Co., Ill., stating the number of copies you want. Every young person and child, old enough, should have a copy, and let the parents or older children teach them; then let them meet and be led by some one who can conduct the exercise.

The Brethren's Publishing Company will give wholesale rates.

Hagerstown, Ind.

REMARKS.—The selection referred to by Bro. Teeter, is now in the hands of the printer, and will be ready for mailing inside of a few days. It is made up of entire pages taken from the Hymnal, and will contain 101 hymns, and sixty-four pages. The rudiments of music are placed in front, and it is so arranged that it will be very convenient for those who desire something cheap, and yet good. It can be used in connection with both the Hymnal and the Hymn Book, as the hymns will all correspond in number. The book will be known as "Selections from the Brethren's Hymnal." Price, ten cents per copy, or $1.00 per dozen, post-paid.

Remember, that in using this pamphlet you are learning to sing the very hymns and music found in the Hymnal. We simply take of the plates used in printing the Hymnal, and print the little book, hence the pages will appear just the same as they are in the Hymnal in every respect. Send in your orders at once. They are cheap, and you can use them every-where.

"PRAISE, when it is deserved, is of more importance to the giver than to the receiver. Praise does not immediately affect the merit of him to whom it is awarded, but it does immediately affect the merit of him to whom its awarding belongs. If a man deserves praise, he is quite as much of a man without praise as with it; but no man can be so much of a man, nor seem so much of a man, while withholding just praise as while bestowing it. If, for example, a man risks his life for another in an act of unselfish heroism, it in no way affects his merit, that he is given or denied praise; but it does affect the merit of an observer of that act, that he renders praise unstintingly, or that he withholds it ungenerously. And the same principle is operative all along the line of human conduct and of its observance. Praise is the price that an on-looker puts upon a well-doer's performance; and the on-looker measures himself in the measure of the price which he awards to the performance of the well-doer. In little matters as in larger, the giving of deserved praise is a duty, the performance of which is even more important to the one who owes it than to whom it is owed."

JOSHUA.

BY LIZZIE BRUBAKER.

JOSHUA was the son of Nun, of the tribe of Ephraim, and nearly forty years old, when he was made successor of Moses as the prophet of the Lord, and leader of his people.

Joshua is first mentioned in connection with the fight against Amalek, when he was chosen by Moses to lead the people of Israel. When Moses ascended Mt. Sinai, to receive, for the first time, the two tables, Joshua accompanied him part of the way.

Not long after that we find him out with the twelve spies, to explore the land of Canaan. He was one of the two, who gave an encouraging report of their journey.

Thus we find them associated at different times, and after the forty years' wanderings were almost ended, Moses publicly invests Joshua with definite authority to rule over the people. He beseeches him to be strong and of good courage. He tells him to meditate day and night on the Written Word, so as to be successful. After communing with the Lord and listening to his instructions, Joshua calls the officers, telling them to inform the people to prepare for the crossing of Jordan. After this is accomplished, they fortify a camp at Gilgal, in the eastern border of Jericho. After a renewing of the rite of circumcision the passover is kept on the fourteenth day of the month. Here an angel appears to Joshua, reminding him that the place where he stood is holy.

Next we have the destruction of Jericho. Rahab, who hid the messengers that were sent, is spared. She, together with her household and kindred are brought to the camp of Israel. The entire city and all that was therein is burned, excepting the gold, silver, brass and iron. These were put into the Lord's treasury.

After the defeat of the Israelites at Ai we find Joshua much discouraged, and he says: "O Lord God, why hast thou brought this people over Jordan to destroy us?" But the Lord is with him and tells him where the trouble is. Achan is put to death, Ai is destroyed by fire and the king hanged. Then an altar is built unto the Lord of Israel at Mt. Ebal, where they offer burnt offerings and sacrifice peace offerings.

A copy of the law is now newly written, and read to all,—the blessings and the cursings. All the law, as given by Moses, is read before Israel.

After this some of the kings of Canaan conspire against Israel, and while, by their shrewdness, they are able to preserve their lives, they are condemned to perpetual bondage. Next we see the five kings, with their hosts, encamped before Gibeon, and, in the great battle of Bethhoron, the Amorites, are defeated. In trying to escape, there are more killed by the hail than with the sword. It is on this occasion that Joshua tells the sun to stand still upon Gibeon, and the moon in the valley of Ajalon.

This is the first and last time that the Lord obeyed the voice of man of which we have any direct evidence. The five rebellious kings seek refuge in a cave at Makkedah where they are securely kept until Joshua commands them to be hung. After that seven more kings are conquered.

The Israelites now resume their journey, having conquered half of Palestine. In the North, at the waters of Merom, Joshua defeats the Canaanites, under Jabin, king of Hazor, and pursues his successor to the gates of Zidon, and to the valley of Lebanon. In six years, six tribes, with thirty-one chiefs or kings are conquered.

After all is finished that the Lord had required of Joshua, he calls the Reubenites, Gadites and the half tribe of Manasseh and says, "You have kept Moses' commandments, and obeyed me, therefore take your possessions. Be diligent to do the commandments of Moses, love the Lord your God and serve him with all your heart and soul." With this blessing they all go to their tents. Just before his death he again tells the people of God's goodness, and reminds them of what he has done to these nations, and how he had divided unto them by lot that which is to be their inheritance.

With this he leaves them. His parting blessing is, "Be faithful!" They promise to be true. The life of Joshua is ended at the age of 110 years. In his own city, Timnath-serah, which is in Mt. Ephraim, on the north side of Gaash, he is laid away, to await the reward of the faithful. His patriotic name will be revered in the ages to come.

STIR UP THE GIFT.

BY FANNY MORROW.

IN a recent number of the GOSPEL MESSENGER, we were kindly exhorted to "stir up the gift that is within us," and also taught that that gift is love. We know that we should love God supremely, and if we are truly his, we can delight ourselves in nothing short of this. If we feel that our love for God is faint or cold let us reflect much upon his great love for us. Remember all that he has done, and is still doing for us. With this blessed memory in our hearts there will be no room to cherish earthly pleasures to the exclusion of heavenly joy and peace. We will often be constrained to cry out:

> "Come, Holy Spirit, heavenly dove,
> With all thy quickening powers;
> Come, shed abroad a Savior's love,
> And that shall kindle ours."

A frequent stirring up of this gift with sacred song and prayer will bring a warmth and brightness that will be felt by all around us. Christ teaches us to love our enemies. To do this truly, the "gift" needs stirring, perhaps more vigorously than in any other case. We need not question why we should,—or do,—have enemies. The history of God's people is ever the same,—the spirit of enmity is manifested in some degree, by some one, at some period of our lives. Else the command, "Love your enemies," had never been given.

"Pray for those who despitefully use you." Yes, pray for them. When alone with God in your closet, breathe their name in his ear, and ask a blessing upon them, and prove it true that a feeling of love and pity will revive in your heart for them. Let us all, dear sisters and brethren, stir up this gift more frequently, and not wait until about love-feast time, before we know whether we love at all or not. Stir it up each day of our lives, so shall it increase more and more.

THE END OF THE KINGDOMS OF ISRAEL AND JUDAH.

BY J. E. YOUNG.

THOSE who study the Sunday-school lessons, as marked out by the International Committee, get a connected series of lessons with a definite object in view.

The first half of this year was on the Old Testament history. Near the close of last quarter's lessons we studied the captivity of Israel and Judah. To the thoughtful there are many practical lessons to be learned from the result of these two kingdoms.

They once were one people, with one object in view, and we asked our Sunday-school class these questions:

What caused the division?

When were they the happier, stronger, and better in every way,—when they were one or when they were divided?

What was the result of the division? Both came to naught sooner or later.

Then we applied it to the present age. When was Christianity the most powerful,—in the apostolic age, when there was one body, or now, when it is divided into over one thousand sects and denominations?

What has caused these divisions?

What will be the end of all denominationalism?

An aged lady once asked, "Oh tell me which is the right church that I may go there." I answered, "If you mean denominations, none are so near right as they ought to be. If you mean church, I answer, the church of Christ,—the only church established. It is not divided, it never was, and never will be."

THE FALL OF OUR FIRST PARENTS.

BY ANDREW HESTER.

WHEN God placed Adam and Eve in the "Garden of Eden," and told them what they should eat and what they should not eat, the serpent,—which seemed to be the most subtile creature, beguiled the woman and she ate of the forbidden fruit, and, through her influence, persuaded the man to eat. Thus they brought sin and death unto all mankind; and for fear they would eat of the Tree of Life and live forever, God drove them out and placed the flaming sword at the gate, so that man could not enter again.

Christ came into the world and made a new way for us to enter,—not into the Garden of Eden, but into his vineyard, his kingdom, his church.

It seems that this great fall of our first parents was the work of Satan. Through his influence the woman was persuaded to do what God told her not to do. Have we not many of those serpents to-day, going about trying to persuade people to disobey God? I think we have plenty of them. Take a boy, for instance, who may have been raised in the most Christian-like manner. When he becomes a man and starts out to fight the battle of life alone, he finds himself in the company of some dissolute character, who, through his influence drags him into the theater, the saloon, and other evil places. Just as Eve of old was deceived, so our young people are now.

Let us all keep out of evil company, and guard against the deceiving tongue of the devil. When evil-minded people seek to entice us to wrong-doing, let us not be afraid to say, "No," lest God drive us out of his kingdom!

"SOWING and reaping are not processes that are sure to be separated by an intervening season; but in the mental and moral world it is often the case that sowing is reaping. He who sows the seed of truth in another's mind reaps the result of his sowing while he sows. He knows more than he knew before, by the very fact of helping another to know. He who sows the seed of kindly thought and speech in conversation with another reaps the harvest of it in his own looks, as well as in his own spirit, while he speaks. And as it is with good seed, so it is with bad; "whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap."

TO BE DONE.

BY GALEN B. ROYER.

WE frequently talk about home mission work, but I fear we too often have only a vague idea of what the words really mean. As regards territory, there are two meanings which may with justice be assigned to them. The first and more general one comprises the territory known as the United States of America. The second and more restricted one, our own State Districts. In this latter meaning do I wish to look at our home mission work.

From the late census of our church, as taken by Bro. D. L. Miller, I have compiled the following table:—

STATES.	Number of Counties in which the membership is found.	Number of Counties in the State
California,	2	52
Colorado,	3	42
Illinois,	39	102
Indiana,	54	92
Iowa,	40	99
Kansas,	48	106
Michigan,	11	84
Maryland,	9	24
Missouri,	29	135
New Jersey,	3	21
North Carolina,	8	96
Ohio,	51	88
Oregon,	6	29
Pennsylvania,	41	67
Nebraska,	23	85
Tennessee,	13	96
Texas,	6	244
Virginia,	22	100
Wisconsin,	4	68
West Virginia,	21	54

I have not given in the table such States as Arkansas, Florida, and Idaho, each of which has one congregation within her borders, Minnesota with three, South Dakota with four, and some others considered as mission fields entirely. Yet these States come under some one of the State Districts, and should be seriously considered in the plans for some mission work. Neither can I take into consideration that in many Counties there is only one congregation, and that with less than a hundred communicants. Neither does the table show that some of the Counties counted as having a congregation, especially in the Western States, are nearly as large as some State Districts in other States. neither will I take into comparison the number of members in each State with the population of the State because they would hardly bear comparison. But, take only that part of the country, included in our State Districts, and how do you like the picture? Does it not show room for preaching the Gospel? Have we not had calls from the adjoining Counties to come over and preach? Have the State Districts with their mission boards ever considered the vastness of the field which they have to work?

For instance, the two Districts of Illinois include all of that State and Wisconsin. (I would that I knew the dividing line between the two Districts so that I could show what belongs to each). Take Illinois alone, and we see that not half the Counties by twelve have organized congregations of the Brethren in them. Then add to this for the Northern District of Illinois the whole State of Wisconsin with sixty-eight Counties, only four of which have congregations, and what a field!

Again, notice Pennsylvania. The per cent of her Counties, in which the Brethren have organizations, is greater than in any other State. But there are still twenty-six Counties not represented; and when we take into consideration that New Jersey which has congregations in only three out of the twenty-one Counties of the State, belongs to the Eastern District of Pennsylvania, even here is seen a great work to be done.

The other extreme is found in Texas which, including a part of Indian Territory, has recently been organized into a District. Counties as large as some States, the entire State covering an area equivalent to Iowa, Illinois, Indiana, Ohio, Pennsylvania, West Virginia and about half of Maryland; and the extent of the work passes beyond our comprehension.

Let us look at the picture from another standpoint. Referring to Bro. S. P. Weaver's article, "Our Resources and Our Field," GOSPEL MESSENGER, current volume, No. 13 I find that Pennsylvania has 319 ministers, and if distributed over the State there would be from four to five to each County. Indiana having 292 would have from two to three; Ohio the same; Kansas from one to two; and so on down the list until, in some States there is but one minister to from ten to sixty Counties. Although some States are more highly favored with preachers than others, yet can we not justly say, Behold the great harvest field, and few indeed are the laborers!

But what are we going to do about this work? Shall we sit down and lament because so little has been done? Shall we complain and censure the church of the past? Shall we try to throw off the responsibility by saying, "Our fathers did not urge such general work, and did comparatively little beyond their own County? Shall we become discouraged, give up in despair, and sink back into our selfish selves, because of the greatness of the work, and let our near neighbors perish? No, no, no, methinks I hear from a thousand faithful ones over the Brotherhood. Well, what then shall we do? In that loving, yet authoritative, accent I hear a voice sounding through nearly 1,900 years, from way over yonder on the Mount of Ascension, commanding the followers of the "Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," to "Go ye and teach;" "Be not weary in well doing;" and I hear the echo of the song which the church has been singing for ages past, "We'll work till Jesus comes."

This should be the sentiment of every faithful heart. This great work should inspire us to greater diligence and more determined efforts. Does it not, my brother, my sister? I shall have something more to say concerning this work in next issue.

Mt. Morris, Ill.

IS IT RIGHT?—A WORD TO MINISTERS?

BY A. A. ADAMS.

THERE may be others, but, I know of one preacher, who, on a rainy or cloudy Sunday, when there is a small congregation present, invariably says, "Well, I intended to preach on a certain subject to-day, but, as there are not many here, I will not do it, and will, instead, have a little talk."

I think he is all wrong, for the few faithful ones, who are at church in all weathers, deserve the very best the preacher can give them. By thus doing he not only deprives them of their due, but he shows disrespect to the one who has said, "Where two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst." That speaker forgets that the Lord of all has promised to be one of the few, and he also loses influence with persons who do not belong to the church, as such have been heard to say, "There is no use going to that church on a rainy Sunday, for the minister thinks his talents are of such a high order, that he cannot waste them on a few persons, but must reserve them for a large concourse of people. He does not follow the Master, who says that but few shall find the narrow way." I think the majority of conversions receive their most serious impressions in the prayer-meeting, rather than in a crowded assembly.

I hope all ministers will be as anxious to save the "one" as the "ninety and nine."

I wish to say a hearty amen to Bro. B. C. Moomaw's article on "Private Communion." The crowd of strangers takes all the solemnity away, and our Savior did not invite the multitude to that service, but preached to them at other places. That service should be sacred to the minister and members of each church. Our people are too much given to having a crowd on every extra occasion outside of the regular service. Other denominations do not do so, why should we?

IT is said that when the story of the West India slavery was told the Moravians, and that it was impossible to reach the slave population because they were so separated from the ruling classes, two Moravian missionaries offered themselves, and said, "We will go and be slaves on the plantations and work and toil under the lash to get right beside the poor slaves and instruct them." And they left their homes and went to the West Indies as slaves, and lived in company of slaves, to get close to the hearts of slaves. And the slaves heard them because they had humbled themselves to their condition. That was grand, it was glorious; and yet Christ's example was more glorious;—for he stepped from heaven to earth to get by our side. He laid himself down beside us that we might feel the throbbings of his bosom and be drawn so close as to hear him whisper, "God is love."—Bishop Simpson.

"THE springs at the base of the Alpine mountains are fullest and freshest when the summer sun has dried the springs and parched the verdure in the valleys below. The heat that has burnt the arid plains has melted mountain glacier and snow, and increased the volume of the mountain stream. Thus, when adversity has dried the springs of earthly comfort and hope, God's great springs of salvation and love flow freshest and fullest to gladden the heart."

The Gospel Messenger

Is the recognized organ of the German Baptist or Brethren's church, and advocates the form of doctrine taught in the New Testament and pleads for a return to apostolic and primitive Christianity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and maintains that Faith toward God, Repentance from dead works, Regeneration of the heart and mind, Baptism by Trine Immersion for remission of sins unto the reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, are the means of adoption into the household of God, the church militant.

It also maintains that Feet-washing, as taught in John 13, both by example and command of Jesus, should be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper, instituted by Christ and as universally observed by the apostles and the early Christians, is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening or after the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ.

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That the principle of Plain Dress and of Non-conformity to the world, as taught in the New Testament, should be observed by the followers of Christ.

That the Scriptural duty of Anointing the Sick with Oil, in the Name of the Lord, James 5: 14, is binding upon all Christians.

It also advocates the church's duty to support Missionary and Tract Work, thus giving to the Lord for the spread of the Gospel and for the conversion of sinners.

In short, it is an advocate of all that Christ and the apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discords of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be scripturally safe.

Mount Morris, Ill., - - - - - Aug. 11, 1891.

PRICE of the MESSENGER to the end of this year is only 50 cents.

BRO. ELEAZAR BOSSERMAN has changed his address from Carson City, Michigan, to Middleton, the same State.

IN next issue will appear a biographical sketch of Eld. Samuel Mohler, whose death we mentioned last week.

IT is said that there are strong prospects of the Jews in Chicago abandoning their Saturday worship and making Sunday their sacred day.

SEND to the Brethren's Tract Work, Dayton, Ohio, for copies of Bro. D. L. Miller's new twelve-page tract, entitled "The Brethren or Dunkards," and distribute them every-where. It is one of the neatest printed little tracts we have yet seen. Price, $1.50 per hundred. It is just the thing for new fields.

Do not fail to let us have some good matter for the Almanac. It goes into thousands of families and should contain the very best of reading.

IT is said that during its long period of existence the British and Foreign Bible Society has issued 124,000,000 copies of Scripture writings, translated into 290 tongues.

BRO. JAMES R. GISH, of Arkansas, is now engaged in missionary work in Louisiana. From there he expects to go to Texas to aid the Brethren in that much needed field.

ON another page of this issue will be found some interesting letters from Jerusalem. They will somewhat prepare the mind for Bro. Miller's letters which will commence in a few weeks.

W. T. MOORE, a leading Disciple minister of England, proposes to make a tour of the Land of Palestine. The Holy Land is just now becoming a place of uncommon interest to Christian pilgrims.

BRO. J. G. ROYER is in receipt of a telegram announcing the death of Bro. I. N. Brubaker, at Girard, Ill., Aug. 5. Bro. E. S. Young took the next train for Girard, for the purpose of attending the funeral.

DR. GEO. W. BOTETER, of Waynesborough, Pa., writes us that Bro. J. F. Oller is convalescent, and hopes are entertained of his recovery. He writes this in answer to the many communications that he is receiving, inquiring after Bro. Oller's condition.

THE North-western District of Ohio will hold their Ministerial Meeting in the Sugar Creek church, Allen Co., Ohio, October 5. We hope to hear of other Districts holding similar meetings for the encouragement and improvement of the ministers.

BRO. J. G. ROYER, who attended the feast in Chicago, reports a good meeting and three received by confession and baptism. From Chicago he went to Bourbon, Indiana, and remained over Sunday, holding some interesting meetings which, he says, were largely attended.

THE good work is moving along encouragingly on the mission field in Louisiana. Bro. S. A. Sutter, writing from Esterly, July 31, says that three more have been added to the church by confession and baptism. We presume Bro. Jas. R. Gish is with the little flock by this time.

WE are now printing a new edition of the Minutes of the late Annual Meeting, the former edition having been exhausted. Those desiring the Minutes should send in their orders at once, as this will be the last edition we shall print. Orders on hand will be filled just as soon as the edition is off the press.

WE learn that Bro. Joseph Eby, who was very severely injured by a falling elevator, July 3, in the Speis' Wagon Works, Sterling, Ill., is rapidly recovering. He had one leg broken, and his face badly torn. He came to Sterling from Morrison, and had been at work only about one week when he met with the accident.

WE again call attention to the necessity of sending in corrections to our ministerial list for the Almanac. It is impossible for us to get the list correct without the aid of our leading Brethren in all parts of the Brotherhood. Then we also need good articles for reading matter, such as biographical sketches, histories of churches, and other articles of special interest. Those who desire space for advertising will please write for rates. It will be found an excellent advertising medium.

BRO. CHRISTIAN HOPE says that after reaching Denmark his address, as well as Bro. Miller's, will be Augustegade, No. 22, 1 Sal. Amager, Copenhagen, Denmark, Europe, care of C. Hansen. In a former issue we had it 26, instead of 22, as seen above.

OCCASIONALLY we receive an item of church news or an obituary notice with the writer's name omitted. For that reason they do not appear in print, much to the regret of the writers. The best of people will now and then forget to sign their names to letters they write.

ELSEWHERE in this issue it will be seen that the Mission Board of South-eastern Kansas is going to work in real earnest, and commences in good time. That is what we like to see and encourage. We trust that all the churches in South-eastern Kansas will respond to the request of the Board, and act promptly in collecting the necessary means. We further trust that all other Mission Boards in the Brotherhood are preparing for prompt and vigorous action, so there will be a united missionary move among all State Districts. Let the work be pushed with vigor!

MR. SPURGEON, the London preacher, is improving, and gives hope of restoration to health, and may possibly be permitted to resume his work as a minister and writer. He commenced his work at the age of sixteen, first as an active tract distributor and school-teacher. Soon after that he commenced delivering sermons to small gatherings in his own neighborhood at Cambridge. His congregations at first were small, but he worked the harder until his increased ability enables him to hold the largest congregations in the world. The amount of work he does is simply astonishing. His work in defense of the inspiration of the Bible is of special value at this critical period.

MUCH as we need missionaries in foreign fields, we also need good workers at home to take good care of the old churches and bring our children into the church. While we should not neglect our foreign work, we should by no means be slack in our home work. Our home churches are the wheel-horses, or our stand-bys, and we must spare neither pains nor time to keep them in the very best condition possible. We rely on them for most of our preachers, and we should also rely on them for the means to carry forward the Gospel. They are also living epistles of Jesus Christ, to whom we can refer for proof of what the Christian religion may do. So while we are looking to other fields, we must not forget the old mother churches.

WE are just in receipt of a letter from Bro. D. L. Miller, dated August 1, and written on board the ship "Aller." He says, "In a few hours we set sail, and then farewell to our dear native land. God be with you all till we shall meet again. We have bright skies, a gentle breeze and a warm sun. May not this be a harbinger of a pleasant voyage? We send our greeting to all the readers of the MESSENGER, to all at Mount Morris, and to all in the office." He found about forty letters awaiting him when he reached the vessel. They made quite an impression on his mind, and while he felt it his duty to continue on his journey, he realized more keenly than ever before, how painful it is to bid adieu to the loved ones in his native land. Bro. Hope was with them. If all goes well, they will reach the end of their ocean voyage this week. Thousands of our readers are offering up daily prayers in their behalf, trusting that God may give them a prosperous journey, and permit them to return again to their pleasant home at Mt. Morris.

ACCOMPANYING his articles, Bro. Balsbaugh always sends a private note to the editor. In one of these notes we find the following, which will afford food for a good deal of thought. "Self kept and God kept is well kept. Jude 21: 24." In another he says, "Heaven is no place for drones." But we know that a great many are counting on getting there.

BRO. ANDREW HUTCHISON is probably in the field again. He is booked for a series of meetings in Platt County, Mo., between St. Joe and Kansas City. He says: "I do not expect to reach home any more till Nov. 1. I will probably write a brief report now and then. My going to California will depend somewhat upon circumstances and conditions of things of which I am not fully informed at this writing. My Bible and the MESSENGER constitute my principal company when I am not preaching. If I get to a place where the MESSENGER is not, I don't feel at home, I feel lonely. May it live long and do much for Jesus." We hope Bro. H. will find the MESSENGER in every family he visits. Wherever he finds the MESSENGER he will be certain to find the Bible also.

IT is gratifying to learn that the rate of increase of paupers in the United States is much less than the increase of the population. While we still have many poor among us, the increase is far from being as great as the population itself. The per cent of paupers in some States is very small, especially in Illinois. According to these published tables, New York, in round numbers of 6,000,000 population (exact figures, 5,997,853), has 40,272 paupers. Pennsylvania, with a population of 5,258,014, has 8,653 paupers. Ohio, with a population of 3,672,316, has 7,400 paupers. Illinois, with a population of 4,000,000 in round numbers (exact figures, 3,826,351), has 5,395 paupers, or one pauper to about 700 of the population. Massachusetts, with a population of 2,238,943, has on its pauper roll 4,725 men, women and children.

HE who lives alone to himself can neither be happy nor render others happy. No life, in this world can be a success unless it is, in a great measure, devoted to the interests of others. Laboring solely for self renders one selfish and narrow, but laboring for others fills the throbbing heart with love for humanity, and broadens the idea of goodness. The husband and wife are happy only in proportion as they sacrifice for each other. And then as they increase their interest for the good of others, they correspondingly affect each other's capacity for enjoying still greater happiness. This principle is also true in regard to churches. The churches that are thoroughly interested in the welfare of others, always enjoy more of religion than those who seem concerned only about their own personal interest. It is the reaching out to help others that gives life, growth and happiness to churches. There are churches dying out to-day just for the want of missionary exercise. They do but little for themselves and nothing for others. They need more of that zeal that will prompt them to extend a helping hand to suffering and erring humanity.

REVELATION ENOUGH.

WE are perfectly willing that God shall legislate for us. We want him to make all the laws that pertain to our religious work and privileges, and want none that he has not made. We are willing to help interpret and execute these divine laws, but desire to take no part whatever in making any. All the laws necessary to our salvation or church work are already made and placed on record in the Sacred Volume. Men who cannot be saved by these cannot be saved at all. Any church that cannot properly keep house with these laws cannot keep house though it had more. They contain everything essential in the shape of law. Our sole duty is to properly interpret and execute them. If we do these things right, that is all that any one church, or a hundred for that matter, needs to undertake. This is the limit of power delegated to any religious body, large or small. Christ once said to Pilate, "Thou couldst have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above." John 19: 11. That is also true concerning the church. All her power is delegated from above, and she is held responsible for her manner of using or abusing it.

When a case comes before the church, it is her duty to search the Scriptures carefully to learn what they teach. What they teach is law. If they teach nothing, in word or spirit, on that question, that should be the end of it, for "where no law is there is no transgression." Rom. 4: 15. If God thought a matter not of sufficient importance to give directions concerning it, what business has man with it? Man's only authority is that received from above, and his only proof of his authority in regulating religious matters, is the written Word. If by that he cannot settle a question of Christian duty, he may rest assured that it does not need settling. There is something in the Scriptures, in either word or spirit, that will enable every consecrated man to settle all questions pertaining to his salvation or anybody else's. It is the one law for everybody in every age and condition. What we need is more close study of the Scriptures. Paul told Timothy to study, and we must too, if we learn to do our duty.

It is sometimes said that we must pray the Lord to reveal his mind to us. That is not the way to pray for help. The Lord has already revealed his mind to us. We find the mind of God fully expressed in the Bible. If he has any mind outside of that, concerning our religious duty, no one knows it, nor is it necessary to know it; if it had, it would have been placed in the Bible. The simple fact that it is not in the Book, ought to settle it. There is but one place in this wide world where we can find the mind of God on all essential points of religion, and that is in the Book. People who will not heed that, will not be benefited though another should rise from the dead. It is sufficient for every one who can be reached at all.

People who would like to know more of the mind of God, do not realize what they are talking about. Most of them do not obey what they do know. What do they want with more? A woman once prayed the Lord to reveal unto her whether it was her duty to be baptized. The Lord had already revealed her duty on that point, and had it plainly written in the Scriptures, but she did not wait to listen to what was in the Book. Another one prayed and prayed, to learn direct from heaven whether feet-washing was a Christian duty. The 13th chapter of John contains the Lord's mind on that subject. But that did not suit her. Most of those who pray the Lord for new revelations on points where the Scriptures are plain enough to be understood by any one, have very little confidence in what has already been revealed from heaven, and confirmed to us by miracles and wonders.

God has made his own laws—we are in no sense responsible for them, but it is our duty to gratefully receive them, and make them our rule of action, and instead of praying for more revelations we need most earnestly pray the Lord to help us to understand and obey that already revealed unto us. That revelation contains his mind in full. It contains his will all complete and sealed. That is certainly enough for any one who is willing to learn and obey. J. H. M.

THE POINT AT ISSUE.

Dear Brother:—In your article, "The Three Powers Delegated to the Church," you refer to the question that the disciples at Antioch sent with Paul and Barnabas to Jerusalem. Why is it, that the council, in its answer, said nothing about the very thing that was at issue? The answer is not like many of ours, of much less importance. They did not disown the erring parties even in so great a point of doctrine. J. E. YOUNG.

Beatrice, Nebr.

By referring to Acts 15: 23, 24, it will be seen that the council did act on the very point in dispute. The Scripture reads thus:

"And they wrote letters by them after this manner: The apostles and elders and brethren send greeting unto the brethren which are of the Gentiles in Antioch and Syria and Cilicia: Forasmuch as we have heard, that certain which went out from us have troubled you with words, subverting your souls, saying, Ye must be circumcised, and keep the law; to whom we gave no such commandment."

The last clause,—"to whom we gave no such commandment,"—refers to the point in dispute, and gives the Brethren to clearly understand that the Brethren at Jerusalem gave no authority to any one to teach that "ye must be circumcised, and keep the law." That settled the question of circumcision at Antioch and elsewhere.

True, the apostles did not expel any for merely teaching or believing in circumcision just at that time, for in weaning the people from the rites and ceremonies of the law of Moses, it was needful that they act with great prudence, and thus correct the errors by degrees. When the Gospel order became well established among the believers they were then instructed to "withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly, and not after the traditions which he received of us." 2 Thess. 3: 6. This may very properly refer to every department of misconduct, on which the church should act. Hence it became the duty of the church to "mark those which cause divisions and offences contrary to the doctrine which ye have received; and avoid them." Rom. 16: 17. In Titus 3: 10, Paul tells us just what to do with those who are false in doctrine: "A man that is a heretic, after the first and second admonition, reject." And while the apostles did not in the beginning reject those who both believed, and even taught the necessity of obeying the law of Moses, they nevertheless, in later years, laid down, and urged the enforcing of principles that would result in the church finally rejecting all those who taught erroneous doctrine. Like their Master, the apostles in the early stages of their ministerial work, under the influence of the Holy Spirit, showed great kindness and charity towards those who were blinded by the Jewish traditions, yet never gave an uncertain sound in their preaching or writing. And all the churches that followed their divinely inspired instructions finally rejected the heretics, but not till after the first and second admonition; this they did in perfect keeping with principles laid down for private offenses in Matt. 18. And even after they had rejected them, and had no more church fellowship with them, it was still their duty not to count them as enemies, but to admonish them as brethren. 2 Thess. 3: 14. J. H. M.

If there is a poor minister among you, make him a present of the "Life and Sermons" of Eld. James Quinter. It will not only encourage him in the work of the ministry, but will afford him no small amount of information. Give your sons and daughters a copy, and let them see how a poor orphan boy rose, step by step, until he reached a field of usefulness and honor as broad as the nation. It may prompt your sons to a life of Christian consecration, and give your daughters as well as your sons, a good impression of the happiness and cheerfulness that may pervade a home hallowed by the presence and prayers of a devoted Christian man.

Methodism in this country has over four and a half million members, led by over 30,000 preachers; Baptists, nearly four million followers, led by over 28,000 ministers; Presbyterianism a million and a half, led by a ministry of 11,500; Lutherans 1,023,000, headed by over 4,200 preachers; beside, a host of smaller denominations, and a band of Sabbath-school scholars, numbering over 9,000,000. In the whole country there is a gain to the Christian churches the past year of 1,089,853 members, 4,867 ministers, and 8,494 churches, and a Bulletin, soon to be issued by the United States Census Bureau, it is said, will show that there are in this country 6,250,000 Catholics over fifteen years of age.

The money and notes in the United States Treasury have just been counted. This must be done every time a new Treasurer comes into office. It is quite a task, for there are nearly 5,000 tons of gold and silver, besides $300,000,000 in bank and treasury notes. But the department is extremely particular, for the new Treasurer must give a receipt for every cent of money, and when his time is up, and any of it should be found missing, he must make it up out of his own pocket. At the close of the last count that was made of the money in the treasury the cash was found to be $19 short, but the amount was subsequently swept out of the corners of one of the vaults in the shape of some stray silver coins. It is said that no deficiency of this sort has ever occurred save once, when the specie turned over to a new Treasurer proved to be just three cents short, and the outgoing official was obliged to make up the amount out of his own pocket.

PAMPHLETS WANTED.

We purpose holding a protracted meeting in this City of 4,000 people, to commence Aug. 14, and continue two weeks. Bro. J. S. Mohler, of Kansas, is to do the preaching. Could you favor us with some "Charts on Baptism," pamphlets on "Trine Immersion Traced to the Apostles," also tracts on "Safe Ground?" We expect large congregations, and may be able to sell a good many of those publications.

J. B. Sell.

Cameron, Mo.

We are receiving a number of calls for "Trine Immersion Traced to the Apostles," and also a few for "Perfect Plan." We beg to state that both pamphlets have been out of print for some years, and we take this method of informing our readers that we know of none for sale. We have a few copies on the way here from Florida, but they are promised. Both tracts have been examined by the Examining Committee, and we understand that it is the intention of the Brethren's Tract Work, at Dayton, Ohio, to have them republished as soon as they can arrange for it.

We have just printed for the Tract Work a new tract, entitled, "The Brethren, or Dunkards," by D. L. Miller. It is the article published in the Almanac for this year, properly revised and corrected. This will be found one of the best tracts ever put out by our Brethren, and ought to be distributed by the millions. It will be just the thing for new fields, and will fill a long-felt want. We recommend it for protracted meetings. Price, $1.50 per hundred.

Another tract we recommend for protracted meetings is "The House we Live in," by Daniel Vaniman; price, 60 cents per hundred. If a third tract is wanted, where there is much opposition on baptism, "The Origin of Single Immersion," by James Quinter will be found excellent. Price, $1.50 per hundred. All of these tracts may be ordered of the Brethren's Tract Work, Dayton, Ohio. For further particulars, see their list of tracts on next to last page of this issue. We further state that the "Historical Chart of Baptism" is also out of print, and no more are likely to be printed.

MANNER OF PREACHING.

Unfortunately for the cause, as well as for themselves, some of our ministers seemingly can never preach a sermon without running into special subjects that they use so repeatedly before the same congregation, until the people become sick and tired of it. Occasionally there is a man who seldom or never preaches without saying something about baptism. Another treats nonconformity in every discourse, more or less. Another must say something about tobacco and intemperance every time he comes before the public, and thus it goes with various special lines of thought.

It all may be good and even instructive in its place, but the thing of telling people the same thing over and over, time and again, finally becomes disgusting, and does much more harm than good. Congregations enjoy a variety of preaching, and it is altogether proper that they should, for the Good Book is full of most excellent things, both new and old, and it is the duty of ministers to study the Scriptures in order to give their hearers some of the new as well as the old. Variety in spiritual as well as in temporal things is the spice of life. The great central object of preaching is to make better men and women, and it is only by a continued effort in the right direction that this can be accomplished. Ministers who are more or less inclined to run into one or more of these favorite subjects in all their discourses, will do well never to say anything about such subjects, only when they preach a regular discourse on them, and then be careful that they do not deliver these discourses too often before the same congregation.

Every minister should bear in mind that he is responsible to God for the manner of his preaching, as well as for what he preaches. No minister can succeed who does not make his congregation as well as his Bible a study. He studies the people to learn what they need, and what will result in the most good, and then studies how to present it in the most acceptable manner. In this line he must be as wise as a serpent, and yet as harmless as a dove. He studies his Bible that he may learn how to rightly divide the Word of Truth for the instruction and warning of sinners as well as for the information and edification of the saints. While it is his duty to rebuke sin most earnestly, he should remember that it is an unwise use of his authority to spend all of his precious time before a congregation in that manner. Christ told Peter to feed both the lambs and the sheep—the young as well as the old, but never told him to whip any of them,—deal tenderly and yet firmly with the Master's flock, leading them to pastures fresh and new, and beside the still waters,—keep them not on the old pasture all the while; change them now and then from the Old to the New Testament, from the Law to the prophets, from the sorrows of earth to the joys of heaven. And when you have spent many years leading the flock all through the Bible you will, in your old days, find many a shady nook entirely new to you as well as to the sheep of your Master's flock. That Bible of yours is a good old book, and if you study it well and prayerfully, you will never cease to find something new and refreshing for both the lambs and the sheep.

DECLINING HONORS.

It takes a man of nerve and conviction to decline honors in this day of unceasing striving for distinction, but Mr. B. W. Johnson, Editor of the Christian Evangelist, St. Louis, Mo., and author of "People's New Testament with Notes," etc., has done so. He is a minister in the Disciple church, a man of brilliant talent and scholarly attainments, but lately refused the title of D. D., proffered him by the Drake University. His reasons for declining the title are well worth reading. We give them below:

"The only reasons necessary to give are that my understanding of our Lord's words in Matt. 23: 8-10 is that their spirit forbids the wearing of such a title by those who are loyal to the New Testament. All our better informed brethren require no telling that this has been the opinion of the Lord's teaching held by the older teachers of the "current Reformation." If there has arisen a new generation who have no reverence for the convictions of our older teachers it is well for them to know that many of the best interpreters of other religious bodies take a similar position. Lyman Abbott, in his Commentary on the passage, says: "Be not called Rabbi forbids all ecclesiastical titles given and received for the mere sake of honor. In direct violation of its spirit, and almost in direct violation of its letter, is the custom of conferring the title of Doctor of Divinity on clergymen." Albert Barnes in his Notes on Matthew says, "The title Rabbi corresponds with the title of Docter of Divinity as applied to ministers of the Gospel; and so far as I can see the Spirit of the Savior's command is violated by the acceptance of such a title, as really as it would be by ministers being called Rabbi." These two quotations are samples of the opinions of many commentators. I have myself said in the People's Testament, in the note upon the passage, "The spirit of his command forbids all ecclesiastical titles of honor." One could easily see that I would be false to my own expressed convictions if I were to accept such a title.

That the primitive church thus understood the Savior is shown by the entire absence of such titles until after its corruption. There were no Doctors Paul, John, Clement, Ignatius, Polycarp, Irenæus, or Eusebius. It is only after the "falling away" that the "Doctors," and "Reverends," and "Right Reverends" come to the front. Shall we stand before the world as the advocates of Apostolic Christianity, and disdain its practice? Shall we insist upon the letter of the baptismal commands, and yet disobey the spirit of so plain a command as the Lord's words in the twenty-third chapter of Matthew? There are circumstances that have made it painful for me to decline this honor, but when I have consulted my conscientious convictions of duty there has never been a doubt.

A GOOD PLAN.

THE Antietam church, Waynesborough, Pa., has nted a very tasty leaflet, naming the place and r for each and all of the appointments for that gregation during the year 1891. In the centre the leaflet is found the following, neatly ar-ged:

RESOLVE. That a system of collection be adopted, taking place of the late system, from Jan 1, 1891. That all the bers be visited by the deacon brethren and asked to set n on paper what they will obligate themselves to pay month, putting said amount in the envelope, provided hat special purpose, on the first of each and every month, ing it to the deacon brother visiting the territory in h they live; which can be done at our regular meetings sewhere, when they meet the deacon brother, said money credited to each member. In case any member fails to p regularly, he or she shall be notified by said deacon, gh the mail or otherwise. Passed by the council, Jan. 1891.

pon the first day of the week let every one of you lay m in store as God hath prospered him."—1 Cor. 16: 2. l loveth a cheerful giver." 2 Cor. 9: 7.

ne of these leaflets is given to each member e congregation. It not only affords a record ll the appointments, but reminds them of duty respecting the missionary cause. The seems to be a good one.

We may mount and soar aloft on the airy pinions of idealism until we reach the ethereal heights on the summit, yet, when time, with its stern realities, is encountered, we are compelled to submit to an unpleasant, unwelcome, and even ignominious, descent and disaster.

We just now call to mind a mother whose ideal, a quarter of a century ago, was just as heavenly as ours are. To her were given two buds of promise to gladden her young heart. Many were the air castles she builded on her ideal of true nobility in her children. But God, in his infinite love and mercy, kindly transplanted one into that more congenial clime, and though, at the time, it left the parent stem all torn and bleeding, she now looks back over the vista of years, and realizes it as one most sacred spot in her memory, having the blessed assurance, that "of such is the kingdom of heaven." Who knows, but that Mrs. Nicely, who is said to be a raving maniac, over the sad fate of her two sons who were hung for the murder of an old man in Pennsylvania, not many months ago, once cherished as high ideals of the future greatness of her boys, as any other mother! Had she foreseen and known the tragical ending of their lives, no doubt she would have plead with God night and day to call them hence in their innocent childhood.

But ah! the sad and heart-rending reality has come and gone over her head like a terrible cyclone of destruction, and left nothing but desolation and despair!

How many mothers consecrate their sons to the service of God like Hannah of old? Not many. And often, when they do, they soon become the sons of the old prophet Eli,—"the sons of Belial," or are enticed and decoyed into the snares of vice and iniquity, after they leave the influence of the parental home. Farewell Words.

BRO. D. L. MILLER'S address in Denmark, as well as my own, during our stay, should be, "In care of Bro. Chr. Hansen, Augustegade No. 22, Amager, Kjobenhavn, Denmark, Europe," and not No. 26, as you had it.

In going to Europe, I would state to our Brotherhood that the Mission Board have worked at this plan ever since our return to this country, but hindrances of various kinds have so far interposed. That Bro. D. L. Miller needs an interpreter between him and our members, seems evident, in order that he and the Mission Board might be able to look into matters, and express what they want to impress on the members of our churches in Europe. Hence they (both the Mission Board and the members in Europe) thought I would better go along.

Though my family need me at home, perhaps more so than any other family, I did not feel like refusing to comply with that reasonable and urgent request. Ever since I decided to go, sorrow, tears and grief have been in our humble home.

We hope, by God's will, to return, yet the uncertainty of life is so great that we would better not depend on anything but a reunion when Christ comes to gather us in the clouds.

Now, since I leave all the dear ones a second time, to go and work for the Brotherhood, may my family and I be remembered by you all! Especially let my wife and children be remembered, —not only in your prayers, but much rather in visiting them, for their encouragement. Please write them occasionally,—as some have done heretofore, and for which we have felt very thankful. Let that good work go on! Many who can do no other missionary work, are good letter writers, at least. It is not only my family who need such workers, but it is every minister's family who are left at home, with all the care and trouble resting on them. Brethren and sisters, if you knew how much good you could do by encouraging and consoling them, and assisting them in any way they need, you certainly would be glad to do it, and some day you will hear your Master say: "Well done, good and faithful servant; what you did to them, you did to me." Whenever our people learn to encourage and bear up their ministers, as those ministers are now upholding the church, we will have the most happy and powerful church the world has ever seen. Then the Lord's work will be done with zeal. A minister, as well as his family, stands in need of care and tenderness.

Now farewell. May God bless you one and all! Address my family: "Mary Hope, Herington, Kansas." CHR. HOPE.

G. ROESCH, Treasurer.

From Salem, Ill.

WE, the members of the Romine Hill church met in council in Salem, July 18. Brethren David Eby, of Mt. Vernon, and Geo. Gibson, of Girard, Ill., were with us. Our meeting passed off pleasantly, considering the business before us. Bro. David Eby, who has been our elder for some time, has sold his farm now and will move to Indiana. We selected Bro. John Hershberger, of Wayne County, to fill the vacancy caused by the removal of Bro. Eby.

We appointed our Communion for Oct. 10. We hope those who can will make this one of their stopping-points on their way to the District Meeting, as they can go from here direct to District Meeting. Those wishing to attend our meeting will stop off at Salem, on the O. and M. R. R., where they will be met by the brethren and taken to the place of worship. LIZZIE FOUTS.

July 22.

Meeting of the Mission Board of South-eastern Kansas.

THE following brethren, composing the Mission Board of the South-eastern District of Kansas, M. O. Hodgden, S. E. Cornelius, E. M. Horner, J. M. Quackenbush, and N. Trapp, met in the Neosha church. After singing and prayer they organized by choosing M. O. Hodgden, Chairman; N. Trapp, Secretary; S. E. Cornelius, Treasurer.

The following rules for the government of the Board were adopted:

1. The solicitor of each church, in the South-eastern District of Kansas, shall, as soon as possible after each quarterly council, report all money received by him for missionary and other purposes to the Secretary, and remit the amount to the Treasurer of the South-eastern District of Kansas, who will send a receipt to the solicitor for the amount.

2. Five per cent of all money collected, shall be set apart for General Missionary purposes, and five per cent for Church Extension purposes, unless otherwise ordered by the donor.

3. When calls for preaching are made, the chairman shall have the power to fill, or refuse to fill, such calls, being governed by the amount of funds in the hands of the Treasurer.

4. What shall be considered a call for preaching? First, By isolated members through their home church. Second, By isolated members not knowing what church territory they are living in. Third, Churches having no home ministers.

5. The evangelists shall be compensated for their labor at the rate of one dollar per day and expenses. No extravagance will be allowed, and they must be governed by the interest taken at place of meeting, and not use time unnecessarily.

6. No money is to be paid out, excepting when ordered by the Chairman of the Board, countersigned by the Secretary. The order should be drawn on the Treasurer, designating for what purpose funds are to be used.

7. The Chairman shall have power to call a meeting of the Board whenever he believes the urgency of the case requires it. He also shall have power to fill all vacancies that may occur during the year, from one District Meeting to the other.

8. The Board shall meet at least once a year at place of, and one day before, District Meeting.

Any member of the Board may be addressed as follows: M. O. Hodgden, Galesburgh, Kans.; N. Trapp, Altamont, Kans.; S. E. Cornelius, Parsons, Kans.; J. M. Quackenbush, Olpe, Kans.; E. M. Horner, Fredonia, Kansas.

The meeting closed by singing and prayer.

N. TRAPP, Sec.

Eld. J. F. Oller.

THE following, clipped from the Waynesborough Gazette, will enable Bro. Oller's many friends to more fully understand his condition:

"Eld. Jacob F. Oller, at whose bed-side a loving family have been watching, at times with despair, for the past four days, and the tidings from which the public have been noting with painful interest, passed a fairly comfortable night and this morning gave evidence that the progress made yesterday in his case was yet well maintained, and the crisis had probably been passed. The difficulty in his case, as was noted heretofore, was an obstruction of the bowels. This was relieved Tuesday by the attendant physicians by the vigorous application of enemas, with poultices to keep down inflammation and avoid the danger of peritonitis. This morning the digestive functions were for the first time natural, and the esteemed patient expressed himself as feeling much better.

"Tuesday afternoon, when the patient was at his worst, a consultation of local physicians was held, and to gratify a desire on the part of the family to omit nothing that would be helpful to his case, Dr. Tiffany, a noted surgeon of Baltimore was telegraphed for, with a view to perform whatever operation the case might seem to require. Dr. Tiffany arrived at 11:30, being brought down from Pen Mar by a private conveyance.

"Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock a consultation was held by the attending physicians and Dr. McLane Tiffany, of Baltimore. It was decided that the obstruction was fully removed, and the only danger was from inflammatory action of the bowels following. No operation was necessary unless serious inflammatory trouble should supervene. Whilst Mr. Oller's condition is better it is still grave, and will require the utmost care and attention."

In the Field.

WE always like to hear from the Brotherhood, far and near. When we hear of the many good meetings, it builds us up in the faith once delivered to the saints. We have been spending most of our time since March laboring among the churches, and have had many meetings with good interest. Some are coming to the church, and there are others who will come in the near future.

I baptized a few days ago near the top of a mountain. The applicant was a man that was born blind, — a minister who had belonged to another denomination, but became dissatified, because his people do not keep all the commandments. This is becoming very prevalent amongst the different sects in our country.

I have just returned from the Dunn Hill church, Montgomery County, Va. The church there had gotten into some trouble, and was not getting along very well. After a few hours' work, in the spirit of meekness, the troubles were adjusted in such a manner that all seemed to be satisfied. May it so remain, is my prayer!

J. H. SLUSHER.

Falcon, Va.

REMARKS. — If in the New Testament we should read of Paul or Philip baptizing a man near the top of the mountain, the Pedobaptists would conclude at once that sprinkling or pouring was the mode used. We do, however, read that both Philip and the Eunuch went down into the water, and that they came up out of the water, and yet there are those who seem to see sprinkling in this case. If they can see sprinkling so clearly in a case like this, what would they not see if it should read: "And they both went near the top of the mountain, both Philip and the Eunuch, and he baptized him. And when they had come down from the mountain," etc. There would be no getting around a case of sprinkling as clear as that. Still everybody knows that Bro. J. H. Slusher immersed the candidate near the top of the mountain, for there is plenty of water there. We understand language in newspapers, but how such expressions would be twisted if found in the Scriptures! It is hard to see clearly through colored glasses, and how promptly people put on these glasses when they read the Bible, and remove them to read newspapers.—ED.

ON Sunday, June 28, Bro. R. J. Shreve filled his two weeks' appointment at the Waterford school-house. We were made glad to see one dear sister leave the world and come and accept the Gospel. Although she is young in years, may it be an example for her little friends who are yet out of the church.

July 26, at the same place, three more united with the church. Two are young men, and the other is a married man who lives in Michigan City. Bro. Shreve has been holding meetings at the City. He is the first one of the brethren who has held meetings at that place. There are but a few brethren and sisters who live there now, but we hope there will be more in the future.

THE members of the above church are laboring for the upbuilding of the Master's kingdom. We are having a Sunday-school at the church conducted by the Brethren. Bro. Geo. Killian is Superintendent, Bro. John Killian, Chorister. We use the GOSPEL CHIMES. This book, we think, is well adapted to Sunday-school work. We are also using the Young Disciple, which gives excellent satisfaction. We have an average of about sixty scholars, although another school is in session within one mile of us, at the same hour. We are having preaching every two weeks at the church this summer. The first Sunday of this month we had the pleasure of leading three persons down into the liquid stream, there to be planted in the likeness of the death of our Savior, and we hope, to arise to walk in newness of life. Among the number was one old mother, seventy-eight years of age, and blind. JOHN STAFFORD.

ON account of the sickness and death of the infant son of brother and sister Price, our quarterly council, which was appointed for July 4, was postponed one week. July 11 the members met at the home of friend Frank and sister Mary Whitney, to transact church business. As this was the council preparatory to our love-feast, which was held on the evening of July 19, the annual visit was paid to all the members, and the report given found all to be in love and union. Everything passed off very harmoniously. July 18 the hearts of the members were all made glad at the coming of our beloved elder, G. W. Fesler, of Longmont, Colo., who came to deal out the Bread of Life to our hungry soul. All seemed well pleased, and we think many good impressions were made. A. C. SNOWBERGER.

Chips from the Work-house.

I HAVE just finished reading the "Life and Sermons of James Quinter,"—a gem of first water. There are forty sermons, mostly to students,—all teeming with truths expressed in a clear, logical and helpful way for only $1.25,—three and one-eighth cents per sermon, to say nothing of the sketch and incidents of a life, showing how a poor boy by early in life giving his heart to God, and by faithful continuance in well-doing, rose in usess until thousands have been helped to a higher l nobler life by his example and ministry.

The book is neatly printed, on good paper, and ntains a portrait of Bro. Quinter in full man-od, about as we saw him at the Annual Meet-
g at North Manchester, Ind., May 19, 1888, ere the Lord took him while on his knees, ding in prayer an assembly of three thousand more of his brethren and sisters. You need hesitate to be agent for this book. It will do od wherever read. It should be read by both and young. Thousands, if put in possession t, would, when deprived of the privilege of go-to church, read one or more sermons and thus edified, encouraged and helped.

THE issuing of the Juvenile Quarterly supplies a long-felt want in our Sunday-schools. It is practical, and yet easy enough for any that can read. Heretofore, many schools had to get from Cook, and other publishers, the supply for the smaller scholars. I hope all schools of the Brethren will adopt our Quarterlies.

In a letter, received from Bro. Herman Stahl, he informs me that he received five precious souls by baptism near Rockwood. Their ages ranged from twelve to twenty-one years. The writer is happy to say that his health is so improved that he is in the "field" again,—thank the Lord.

I feel deeply interested in the trip which Bro. D. L. Miller and wife are about to undertake. May God's care attend them, and the prayers of the church accompany them! His letters cannot but be interesting and instructive.

"IF I could choose what of all things would be at the same time the most delightful and useful to me, I should prefer a firm religious belief to every other blessing: for this makes life a discipline of goodness; creates new hopes when all earthly ones vanish; throws over the decay of existence the most gorgeous of all lights; awakens life even in death; makes even torture and shame the ladder of ascent to Paradise; and far above all combinations of earthly hopes, calls up the most delightful visions of the future, the security of everlasting joys, where the sensualist and skeptic view only gloom, decay, annihilation and despair."

Notes from Our Correspondents.

"As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

TWO BAPTIZED.—July 26 I preached at the Hartman school-house to a large congregation. After services we buried two precious souls with Christ in baptism. There are more counting the cost. May God help them to seek Christ's kingdom, and walk in the newness of life! Pray for your unworthy servant, and for the building up of the cause.—Joseph Guthrie, Hazleton, W. Va., July 28.

PROPOSED MEETINGS.—Sunday, July 26, was our regular meeting day at Mount Union church. Our church is situated near Morgantown, W. Va. It is a part of the George's Creek congregation, Pa. Bro. J. C. Johnson, of Uniontown, Pa., filled the appointment. He also left an appointment for Aug. 29 and 30, at which time he expects to continue the meetings for one week, and close with the Communion meeting on Saturday evening, Sept. 4. An invitation is extended to all of the adjoining congregations and to all members who feel like meeting with us on that occasion. Come out, brethren and sisters, and be with us during our meetings!—L. D. Ross, Easton, W. Va.

PLEASANT COUNCIL.—On Saturday, July 25, the members of the Oak Dale church met in council, preparatory to District Meeting. We raised a little missionary money, amounting to $7.00, and also elected two brethren as delegates to District Meeting. Our council-meeting passed off pleasantly. All seemed to be in love and union. Our church is small in number, but all, we hope, are pressing forward! -Lizzie M. Snider, Oak Dale, Texas, July 28.

RAILROAD ARRANGEMENTS.—Those who desire to attend the series of meetings to be held in the Missouri Valley church, Iowa, Aug. 16 to 24, can secure reduced rates on the Chicago and Northwestern R. R. and branches; also on the Union Pacific R. R., as well as from points east of Chicago and elsewhere. By getting a certificate, when you purchase your ticket, you can go to the meetings and return at the rate of one and one-third fare.—I. S. Snyder, Missouri Valley, Iowa.

TWO BAPTIZED.—The members of the Spring Run church, Mifflin Co., Pa., assembled in council on Saturday, July 25. At this meeting two were baptized, making sixteen additions by baptism since Jan. 1. We arranged for a "harvest home" meeting, to commence at ten o'clock, on Saturday, Aug. 1, a Sunday-school meeting at one o'clock, and preaching afterwards. It was decided to commence the fall love-feast at one o'clock on Friday, Oct. 16. - Emma Bollinger, McVeytown, Pa.

OUT IN THE HIGHWAYS.—We are now arranging our matters to start on our mission to Louisiana, to assist in some church work, and do some preaching. When we get through at that place, we expect, the Lord willing, to visit some of the members in Texas, and do what preaching we can. Until further notice all correspondents will please address us (wife and self) at Esterly, La. We want to start July 30. We ask the Good Father to be with us, protect us, and bless our aims and efforts for the good of many.—Jas. R. Gish.

THE WORK IN CHICAGO.—The feast last night was an enjoyable one in every particular. The members in attendance, so uniformly attired as brethren and sisters, gave the meeting a cast of Christian simplicity, appropriate for the observance of the simple ordinances, appointed by the Master. The whole was an impressive service, and will do good. A fair congregation of spectators looked on in solemn silence. At the close of the meeting we found three persons,—brethren,—who had come prepared to unite with the church. The congregation was again called to order, and after the usual instructions were given, they were baptized in the same hour of the night. It was after eleven o'clock when we dismissed, and all went away rejoicing. Praise the Lord for what he is doing for the little band in Chicago!—J. G. Royer, July 31.

FOUR RECEIVED BY BAPTISM.—The church at this place is progressing nicely. During the first half of this year four have been received into the church by baptism, two by letter, and one reclaimed. At our love-feast, May 16, Bro. Geo. Carl was elected to the ministry, and Bro. Daniel Root to the deaconship. May the Lord bless them and their families! During the past year the Brethren have enjoyed weekly prayer-meetings, which have been highly edifying to those that attend. A flourishing Sunday-school, under the supervision of Bro. Thos. Barklow, has been in progress during the summer months. We have a membership of eighty-three at this place. We expect to hold another love-feast this fall. May the blessing of God be with the MESSENGER force! —D. M. Brower, Myrtle Point, Oregon, July 26.

FOUR BAPTIZED.—Bro. Beaver, of Chickasaw, Iowa, recently preached several sermons in the Root River church, Minn. Four made the wise choice and were baptized.—Sarah E. Bueghly, Lime Springs, Iowa, July 16.

GREATLY ENCOURAGED.—Bro. J. B. Early, of Salem, Oregon, came to us on Sunday, July 19, 1891, and gave us two very interesting sermons, which were of great encouragement to the members. At this meeting one member was received by letter. —J. A. Royer, Clackamas, Oregon.

A NEW HOUSE OF WORSHIP.—Our new meeting-house at this place is completed. We have announced the dedication for Aug. 16 at 11 A. M., and expect to continue meetings over eight days. We have a neat, well-finished house, on the north end of McGavern Street. The house will be deeded to the German Baptist Brethren church, clear of debt. All are invited to come and preach for us.—L. S. Snyder, Missouri Valley, Iowa, July 27.

ENCOURAGING MEETINGS.—The love-feast in the Owen's Prairie church, I. T., was an enjoyable occasion. Brethren Shamberger and Ennis from the Marlow church did the preaching, and ably defended the cause of the Master. Twenty-three members were present, and were encouraged in the way of the Lord. Many deep impressions were made on the outsiders, which caused them to search the Scriptures. —Henry Troxel, Velma, I. T.

PRACTICAL SERMONS.—Bro. M. M. Sherrick, of Mt. Morris, Ill., stopped with the members of the Maumee church, Defiance, Ohio, July 17, and preached seven practical sermons for us. By his efforts the congregation was edified and encouraged and sinners were warned. Bro. Sherrick is young in years but preaches the doctrine of the Brethren with power and in demonstration of the Spirit. He gained many friends while with us.—Jacob Kintner, Moats, Ohio.

THREE BAPTIZED.—I have just returned home from a visit to the Dayton country, Washington,—132 miles by rail. There are about twenty members in this locality who are living somewhat scattered. We had ten meetings with an apparently excellent interest. The dear isolated ones seem greatly encouraged, and seem to appreciate the privilege of meeting very much. There was great rejoicing when three came out on the Lord's side, and were baptized. We think this an excellent field to extend the cause. They have some young brethren here with excellent talent. We advised them to organize, and promised to meet them again on the third Sunday of August, at which time all will meet to consider the propriety of organizing and getting into a working shape, so they can carry on the work.—S. Hodgden, Moscow, Idaho, July 24.

NOTICE TO THE ELDERS OF SOUTHERN ILLINOIS. Please send in your missionary contributions for 1891 previous to Sept. 1, 1891, as a report will then be made to District Meeting. Some have done nobly this year while others have failed, so far, to do anything. Let all make an effort! "He that knoweth to do good and doeth it not to him it is sin." — Cyrus Bucher, Astoria, Ill., July 25.

ONE BAPTIZED. — The church at this place is still moving along slowly. One more was baptized yesterday. We pray for this sister, as she has much opposition to contend with. We hope that she will hold out faithful until death. Though each Sunday our time is taken up in trying to defend God's Blessed Word, yet we are unable to fill all the calls for preaching. Our prospects, both spiritually and temporally, are good. —John K. Shively, Wallace, Nebr., July 27.

FAREWELL ADDRESS.—On Sunday evening, July 19, Bro. Hope preached his farewell address to the Brethren and sisters of the Herington church. Our hearts were filled with sadness to think that our dear brother had to leave his family and go to a foreign land to preach the Gospel. Perhaps it was the last time for some of us ever to see his face again. Dear brethren and sisters, remember sister Hope at a throne of grace, that she may be able to bear up under this heavy affliction that is laid upon her! She has a large family to care for.—Sarah Shirk, Herington, Kansas.

FALLEN ASLEEP

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

SOLLENBERGER.—In the Yellow Creek church, Pa., June 6, 1891, Annie A., little twin daughter of Bro. Henry and sister Leah Sollenberger, aged 5 months and 16 days.

Annie has gone, never to return to her home on earth. She has gone to a better home where there is no more sickness or death, where all is happiness and joy.

Funeral services by brethren Geo. S. Meyers and D. T. Detwiler.

BARBARA HOLSINGER.

PROPES.—In Mound City, Holt Co, Mo., June 16, 1891, sister Eliza Ann (Link) Propes, aged 42 years, 8 months and 12 days.

Sister Propes was born Oct. 4, 1848. She was married Nov. 26, 1866, and their union was blessed with eight children, five of whom remain. The other three preceded their mother to the spirit world.

Sister Propes was born and raised in Augusta County, Va. In the year 1869 she and her husband united with the church of the Brethren, of which church she was a faithful member until death.

Her departure was very unexpected. On the evening before her death she was at the residence of the writer, on a visit, where she remained until nearly sunset, apparently as well as ever. On the morning of her death she arose, prepared breakfast, and almost completed her washing. While she was hanging out the clothes she was taken with a severe pain in the head. She started to the house, and, assisted by her daughter, was laid on the bed. The father was called and also the physician, but in one hour's time her spirit had taken its flight. Sister Propes, with her husband and little family, emigrated to Holt Co, Mo, in the fall of 1876, where they have resided ever since.

In the death of sister Propes the church has lost a faithful member, the husband a kind companion, and the children a loving mother. The funeral was preached June 18, in the Brethren's meeting house, to a large congregation by the writer, from Micah 2: 10, and Heb. 13: 14. JOEL GLICK.

GABY.—In the Mountain Valley church, Greene Co, Tenn, July 2, 1891, M. M. Gaby.

Deceased was afflicted for several years. He was a deacon in the church and will be missed. He was good in council and always ready to work for the Master. He leaves a wife and six children,—five sons and one daughter. All but two sons are members of the church. P. M. CORRELL.

FRENCH.—Near Buena Vista, within the bounds of the Walnut Level church, Adams Co., Ind, July 18, 1891, Lot French, aged 77 years, 3 months and 22 days.

The deceased was the husband of sister Polly French. Twelve children blessed their union, of whom six preceded him to the spirit world. The dear old sister and children, that are left to mourn their loss, have the sympathy of many neighbors and friends. Funeral services conducted by Bro. Samuel Neher in the Baptist church at Buena Vista, to a large and attentive congregation from Job 14: 10. MALINDA S. STUDEBAKER.

MILLER.—In the bounds of the Greene church, Butler Co, Iowa, July 5, 1891, of heart and kidney disease, Bro. Philip Miller, aged 64 years.

Deceased leaves a wife, six sons and two daughters. The funeral services were held July 7 in the United Brethren church, in the town of Bristow, to a large concourse of people, by the writer, assisted by Eld. J. F. Eikenberry. S. H. MILLER.

LONGENECKER.—In Hagerstown, Md., at the residence of her son in-law, James F. Moore, May 14, 1891, sister Mary Longenecker, aged 80 years, 2 months and 23 days.

Deceased was a generous, kind, Christian mother, always having a good word for every person she met. She was the mother of nine children; also leaves forty-nine grandchildren, and twenty-one great-grandchildren, and was a faithful consistent member of the Brethren church for about thirty years. Funeral services in the Brethren's church by Eld. D. L. Miller and Rev. A. Stapleton.

A. B. BARNHART.

ROYER.—In the Springfield church, Summit Co, Ohio, July 13, 1891, sister Hetty Royer, aged 82 years, 6 months and 10 days.

She was the mother of eight children, who are all living. Sister Royer was faithful until death. Three weeks before her death she was anointed and seemed fully resigned to the Lord's will. Funeral services by brethren David Young and George Cuper from Ps 119: 1, 4. MARIA KEISTER.

BARKLOW.—In the bounds of the Yellow Creek church, Ill., July 20, 1891, sister Mary Barklow, aged 46 years, 10 months and 28 days.

The deceased was born in Tioga County, Pa., Aug. 28, 1841, where she spent her girlhood days with her parents, and, in Sept. 16, 1891, was united in marriage to Wm. Barklow, Jr., whose faithful companion she remained until death. Though never possessed of a robust constitution, she never had been seriously ill until last October, when she was stricken down with lung fever, after which consumption took hold of her weakened body, and of soon became its victim. In 1872 she united with the Brethren's church and remained true and faithful until death. In early spring, time she called for the elders of the church and was anointed in the name of the Lord.

Deceased leaves a loving husband, five brothers and two sisters, to mourn their loss. Funeral services conducted by Eld. D. B. Eby.

LEWIS E. KEISNER

EDGINGTON.—Near Lacona, Iowa, July 15, 1891, of consumption, sister Emma Edgington, daughter of Nathan and Ebur Miller, aged 24 years, 2 months and 1 days.

Deceased was married to J. L. Edgington, March 12, 1891. Sister Edgington had neglected her eternal interests until M. 11, when she made the good confession and was baptized. During the short time she remained on earth, after this event, she became very prayerful. The Word of the Lord was a feast to her soul, especially the language of the Savior in John 14, 15 and 16. She suffered much during the last two weeks, but bore it all patiently. Funeral occasion improved from John 16: 28. Her father died about ten years ago, and her brother George, about four years ago, aged 23 years, 9 months and 22 days. Mother, sister, brother, step sisters and brother, and many other relatives are left to mourn their loss.

M. MYERS

MACHAMER.—At Canton, Ohio, July 1, 1891, Francis M. Machamer, aged 35 years, 11 months and 6 days.

Mr. Machamer was a workman on the train, and, on the morning of July 19, left to take his place as usual, but on the evening of July 18 he was struck on the back part of his head with a stone by a Mr. Andrews, a villainous character. After receiving the blow, he walked to his place of lodging, and retired for the night. In the morning he was called to breakfast, but made no reply. Upon entering the room he was found to be unconscious. Physicians were called in and after examination, his case was pronounced hopeless. The blow caused a fracture of the skull, resulting in death. Mr. Machamer was a quiet, inoffensive man but had neglected the one thing needful. His remains were interred in the brick church cemetery in the East Nimishillen church. Funeral services by the writer, from Psalms 34: 15, 16, to a large congregation of sympathizing friends.

J. J. HOOVER

MILLER.—In the George's Creek congregation, Mt. Union church, W. Va., May Miller, aged 93 years, 4 months and 20 days.

Sister Miller was a very faithful and consistent member of the Brethren church, a lady of marked ability, a great reader, an easy and pleasing conversationalist, of good memory and very familiar with the Holy Scriptures. Her Bible showed evidence of frequent and continued use. From it she gathered the true manna,—the Bread and Water of eternal life. Sister Miller was baptized by Eld. James Kelso, in Fayette County, Pa. She retained all the faculties of her mind up to the time of her death. Her home was a pleasant and welcome one to all, but she looked forward to a better one. She arranged for her funeral service, selected the hymns and the Scriptures. After giving all good-bye, she calmly and peacefully fell asleep in Jesus. A kind and affectionate mother, a true Christian, has passed from earth to a home in heaven. Funeral services by the writer.

JOHN C. JOHNSON

TUCKER.—In the South Waterloo church, Black Hawk Co., Iowa, April 22, 1891, of kidney disease, Bro. William Tucker, aged 91 years, 7 months and 10 days.

Bro. Tucker was an unassuming and consistent member of the church for many years, and died in the triumph of a living faith. He leaves an aged widow and seven children to mourn their loss. Services by the writer from Rev. 14: 13.

EMMONS BLAINE,

An Expert Opinion.

THE "Medical and Surgical Journal" for March 1891, says editorially:

"This pretty little city of Idaho Springs, Colorado, is situated in a beautiful park about 37 miles from Denver, and is about 7,500 feet above sea level. It is thrifty, prosperous, and has become noted for its hot and cold mineral springs, which contain medicinal properties of extraordinary value. Idaho Springs as a health resort cannot be excelled this side of the world-renowned Carlsbad Springs of Germany, whose waters and the waters found at Idaho Springs bear almost an identical chemical analysis.

"In the early stages of consumption these waters, combined with the invigorating air of this beautiful climate, are almost a specific. We take pleasure in recommending these waters to all suffering from coughs and catarrhal affections. It is the best place to go to for the cure of phthisis. Those of our colleagues who have been sending their patients to this grand health resort all join in praising the satisfactory results received from the invigorating waters and climate. We would therefore urge physicians to advise their patients, threatened with consumption, not to procrastinate, but to try, before it is too late, the salutary effects of the waters of Idaho Springs. The Union Pacific are making special efforts to carry the public to and from this famous resort, with all the modern comfort and ease which the tourist seeking health and pleasure can desire." 22–34.

TO KEEP COOL

One need only resort to the thick shade of the three symmetrically-developed maple trees which lift their tops so majestically toward over Mt. Morris College Campus.

These trees have been growing for nearly fifty years, and still they grow. Education is growth. Its end and growth is growth whether it be normal or abnormal,—straight or crooked. Some people seem to think education is so much grammar, arithmetic, etc., etc. This is a mistake. It is development, growth and resources.

Much useful knowledge may be acquired in a term or two, enough perhaps to enable one to become a schoolteacher or a book-keeper, but breadth of mental development can no more be secured in a term or two, than a maple tree two feet in diameter can be grown in two summers. Education is really only the influence of three powers, whether they spend years from the past or five to face. This influence comes to one, and unconsciously becomes a part of him. Hence a young man is only so much of the surrounding influences organized, and moving head to produce influence upon others.

What work parents run by allowing their children to attend schools where all sorts of evil influences surround them, and what fearful responsibility they take upon themselves by bringing these influences into the family and neighborhood. It is like sending a child away to bring small-pox home.

THIS excellent work, which we offer for sale to our readers, at the low price of $1.50 post-paid, is the only one of the kind that may be depended upon as being strictly reliable. Any verse in the Bible may be readily found by looking for any material word in the verse. Besides this there are given the significations of the principal words, by which their true, Scriptural meaning may be known. A full account of Jewish customs and ceremonies is given, as well as a complete concordance of the proper names of the Bible and of the books called Apocrypha. Send all orders for the above work to this office.

The Huntingdon College.

As we said last week, there is no way in which an investment can be made that will bring more real good to yourself, to your country, and to our church, than in a liberal support of Christian education. Like the religion of the Bible, its cheapest gift is most commanded.

THE OBJECT of the Huntingdon College is to give to young men and ladies an education that will be most practical and useful to them in the essentially living life's mission.

OUR DEPARTMENTS are, Normal, Scientific, Classical, Biblical, Music, Penmanship, and Business.

OUR ACCOMMODATIONS are two large, well arranged, three story, brick buildings, located throughout with steam, water on each floor, and the ladies' hall supplied with water-closets. Fine dormitories are of good size and well furnished. A plentiful dining hall is on the basement floor, where excellent board is provided, considering the price asked for it. In fact, the management is doing all it can to make the place a home for students and not a hotel.

OUR TERMS are very low, considering the value we try to give. We do not wish to compete or compete with others, but are determined to give the best that we can for value received. As an institution, to be a success, and a power for good, must be self-sustaining. And no sensible person will expect to get a good thing for less than cost. To the worthy poor we always hold out the helping hand.

WORK DONE.—As our name is best known by its work. Our graduates are our best advertising. They are doing honor to their Alma Mater. A number of them are preaching the Gospel, others are filling lucrative positions, and for the coming school year five are placed as principals of schools, in Louisiana, at wages ranging from $75 to $125 per month.

OUR RELIGIOUS ADVANTAGES are all that could well be expected or desired. Above everything else we shall labor to make the home pleasant and the place a resort where students and their friends love to come. In echo etc. If you think of going to school anywhere, write us your wants, and we will be pleased to correspond with you. Address, I. H. B. Brumbaugh, Pres., or J. H. Garfield Beach on Great Salt Lake, Utah.

THE famous health resort, Garfield Beach, on Great Salt Lake, 18 miles from Salt Lake City, is reached via the Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," and is now open for the season.

This is the only real sand beach on Great Salt Lake, and is one of the finest bathing and pleasure resorts in the West. Owing to the stimulating effect of the brine on the skin, or the saline air upon the lungs the appetite is stimulated, and after a bath, the bathers are ready for a hearty meal, and feel greatly invigorated.

Fine bath-houses, accommodating 400 people, have been erected at Garfield Beach, in connection with which there is a first-class restaurant and a fine, large pavillion built out over the lake. All of these are run by the Union Pacific, which guarantees a first-class resort in every respect.

For complete description of Garfield Beach and Great Salt Lake, send to E. L. Lomax, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent, Omaha, for copies of "Sights and Scenes in Utah," or "A Glimpse of Great Salt Lake." 22–34.

Eld. B. C. Moomaw informs us that they have just completed a house of worship in Buena Vista, Va., and that it will be dedicated on next Sunday. They have arranged to hold preaching services in it twice on each Sunday; also Sunday-school and prayer-meeting. We hope that this may be a beginning that will lead to a glorious end. This is exactly what we must do if we are to have successful work in towns and cities,—good houses, good ministers, regular services, Sunday-schools and prayer-meetings.

A VISIT TO THE OLD HOME.

The other day, brother, I, and our families went out to the old home. We call it the old home because it is the place where father lives; and he represents the home from which our homes, as brothers, have grown. It was harvest time, or rather, after harvest, because the wheat and the hay were all gathered into the great bank barn, and only a small part of an oats field remained unreaped. On walking to the barn we looked into the "implement store-house" and there noticed all kinds of old farming tools,—the five-beamed harrow with its pug-nosed iron teeth, the shovel plows, double and single, an old mowing scythe, a grain cradle. But they were all antiquated and stored away as relics of the past. They had served their day and generation well, but there seemed to be no use for them now. After dinner we went along out to the field to see the last section of oats reaped and the rabbit run—and we saw both. The rabbit was after the same pattern as those of years ago. The oats was the same but, dear me, what a change we saw in the manner of reaping it! Think of it! A man driving around a field of standing grain with a machine that cuts it down, gathers and ties it into sheaves, holds these sheaves until a half shock is gathered and throws them off on piles ready for shocking!

Some of you, who have grown into these changes, may smile and wonder where we have been. But twenty-one years have come and gone since we left, practically, the scenes of such operations. Well, we smiled too when we saw that machine work. We looked at it from one side and then from the other side, and then we walked to an elevated point of the field and sat down on a sheaf to have a short season for meditation, and now we are writing out some of the thoughts that came to us.

The day was clear, with a slightly hazy sky, through which the sunbeams fell softly, the air seemed pure and life-giving as it came from the mountain-top only a short distance to the west. As we looked [illegible] of their golden sheaves, we thought of the harvest days away back.

On Bethlehem's plains, in the fields of Boaz, we saw the reapers with sickles in hand. As they reached forth with regular tread, we saw the golden heads gathered in the hand—a rasping sound, and the bunch was severed at the ground. One after another was taken until the arm was full, and then they were laid aside. On their return these bunches were carefully tied into sheaves, save the purposely-dropped heads for the gleaners. Close behind came the loyal daughter Ruth, with pleasant looks and a light heart, as sheaf after sheaf so rapidly accumulated. Yes, this was a good field in which to glean and Ruth appreciated the cleverness exercised towards her. Some of our fields would be richer in gleanings had we more appreciative hearts. O, it is such a pleasure to fill a grateful heart. God looks upon such as his loving children, and he does more for them than Boaz did for Ruth. But why are we thinking about Boaz and Ruth? Because we always loved this beautiful, simple Bible story, and the associations brought it to us.

From this wonderful reaping machine,—wonderful now, ten years hence it may have a place in the shed among the former antiquities,—we went back to the first invented reaper that dropped its prey on the platform, then to the cradle that we learned to swing, and swung until we thought our poor body was swung to pieces. Yes, it took no great stretch of memory to go back so far. But back of this came the sickle and the reapers and with them Boaz and Ruth.

But while seated on the sheaf, other thoughts came to us. Why all these changes and what do they mean? The same sun, moon and stars run their courses in the heavens. The clouds still send their drops of blessings down to water the earth and cause the seed in the ground to sprout and grow. The oats, the wheat and the corn are the same as they were in the days of Boaz or those of our forefathers when the sickle, with hardy hands, was thrust in deep to gather the wheat from the harvest. Why the change?—we ask.

Some one says: Through the force of circumstances. Yes, that may be the solution. The oats, the corn and the wheat have not changed. But there has been a change in the manner of sowing, reaping, gathering and converting it into bread. And because these changes have been for the better, they have been accepted by the farmer. Does the farmer do right in accepting and introducing these changes? Yes, as long as they do not affect the quality of the grain. No matter what means are used in the sowing if the seed is kept pure. So with the reaping,—so with the gathering. Yes, this is a generally accepted truth and to it we all say Amen.

But is there anything else to which the same truth may apply? This is what we have been thinking about. Christ represents his Word as the seed and those who preach it as the sowers.

The farmer sows, tills and gathers the grain. The minister sows and tills to gather souls. The farmer, through the force of circumstances, changes his methods to gain better results. May the church do the same thing? We do not see why. We have the same blessed Gospel to-day that was given to the world over eighteen hundred years ago, and while it has not changed, the world has, circumstances have, and these changes call for a change in ways and means of sowing the good seed of the kingdom.

In the days of our forefathers the sowers of this seed went afoot and on horseback. Later on the spring wagon and the carriage were used—and now we have the railway coach with its soft, cushioned seats. We are now carried from place to place at the rate of almost a mile per minute.

These are changes that have been accepted almost without a question. But there are many more changes that are of vital importance to the church that might be accepted, that would prove of great advantage to the church in extending her borders and saving souls, and the wonder to us is, Are we as ready and willing to accept these changes as are the wide-awake farmers in their work? As the farmer dare not change the character of his seed to get wheat, so the Gospel must not be changed to save souls; but the ways and means to accomplish the end in both may be changed.

These are some of the thoughts that came to us while sitting on the oats-sheaf in the harvest field. There is nothing new in them, but by thus giving to each other, the good gifts are stirred up within us, and wherever we be, we may be made to say: "This is none other than the gate of heaven."

ESSAYS.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God; a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth."

FORGIVENESS.

SELECTED BY SARAH M. SAUNDERS.

"FORGET and forgive," tho' the friends that you trust
May give no return for the love that you bring,
And trample each delicate flower in the dust,
And spurn your affection like a half worthless thing.

What deeds of unkindness can ever restore
The warmth to the heart that lies crushed at your feet?
For flowers that are withered will blossom no more,
And cheer us again with their fragrance so sweet.

"Forget and forgive," tho' a word harshly said,
Will rankle for days with a venomous dart,
'Twere better, far better, to suffer instead,
Than give the reply that will rise from the heart.

The hand you extend may be met by a frown,
Your smile by a look that is cold and severe,
The aid you have proffered crushed scornfully down,
To die as the flowers when the autumn is here.

But cherish this motto when injuries rise,
And "evil for evil" return not again,
For bitter reproofs and provoking replies,
Are remedies uttered too often in vain.

Keep this as your watchword, "Forgive and forget,"
For One in the midst of his sufferings, died
Forgiving the ones who had cruelly set
"The thorns on his brow and the spear in his side."

"Forgive and forget," no matter who wronged you,
Or injured with malice, or envy, or threat,
Don't stop to think over the trials that thronged you;
Look forward, and seek all past ills to forget.

"Forgive and forget," your hopes may be blighted,
And friendship you trusted all else would outlive,
May sadly have failed you, but though you are slighted
By those you held truest and dearest, forgive

"Forgive and forget," your heart may be weary
With burdens; your eyelids with tears may be wet;
Though others' unkindness makes all your life dreary,
Oh! freely forgive them and try to forget.

"Forgive and forget," while sadly you wander,
Disheartened, discouraged, nor stop to regret
All your troubles, but look to that fair country yonder,
Where Christ all your sins will forgive and forget.

"I AM THE WAY."

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To H. BEELER, OF MINDON, NEBR.,

Dear Brother:—ALTHOUGH you no longer occupy "the street that is called Straight," and the scales no longer blind your eyes, and you have fellowship in the Spirit with the commonwealth of the Israel of God; in relation to the visible church, you stand where Ananias met Saul of Tarsus. I call you brother because the Lord has prepared you for induction, and "has sent me" to "tell thee words, whereby thou and all thy house shall be saved."

Your remarkable letter is here. It thrilled me to the center of my being. When I had read your eventful history, I said reverently and gratefully, "This also cometh forth from the Lord of hosts, which is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working." Isa. 28: 29. I rejoice with you in the marvellous Exodus God has given you out of "the iron furnace," and for His faithfulness in all the way you have been led hitherto. Many zigzags and strange inscriptions are found along your course, but from Rameses to your present tent-pitching, your path is marked with Ebenezers.

You have had your Egyptian schooling, your glad passover, your straightened Pi-hahiroth, your pæan of triumph, "Who is like thee, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders." Ex. 14: 2 and 15: 11. Also your Marah and Elim, your Rephidim and Sinai, and have seen both the bright and dark side of the awful Shekinah of Jehovah. You are past Kibath-hattaavah, and have now "pitched in the wilderness of Paran." Num. 11: 34, 35, and 12: 16. This is the critical juncture in the Christian pilgrimage. The spies are now to search the Holy Land, and our whole mortal future hinges on our acceptance of the testimony of the two or the ten. Forward to fight the trans-jordanic Anakims, or back again into wearisome wanderings till all Egyptian elements have been expurgated!

Christ is the archetype and antitype of all pre-christian emblems. He fulfills and exceeds them all. Types and ordinances have no intrinsic value. They are significant and instructive object-lessons, and serve as tests of loyalty. They give mental images of realities in the spiritual realm, and thus aid our higher education. But Christ is the substance of all that the objective dimly shadows forth. We may be zealous for the type, and "make a fair show in the flesh," and be distinguished for ritual scrupulosity and sanctity, and yet be as destitute of the life of God as a garnished sepulchre.

There is intelligence and conscience and will enough in man to walk in all the external ordinances of the Lord blameless, and yet not have that knowledge of God and his Christ which is eternal life. John 17: 3. To be reared in a church or a community where there is a stringent ceremonial element, is to be exposed to the same danger that rendered Judaism so conspicuous a failure. God gave them the best they were capable of, but they failed to look through their Christ-typifying ritual and apprehend the Great Verity that sanctifies and saves. The Christian ritual is wonderfully diminished, leaving only a few beautiful and luminous symbols to keep our apprehension of the Godman; and yet, few as they are, our corrupt and blind nature is prone to overmagnify them, and pervert them into causes instead of effects of salvation.

"I am the way, and the truth, and the life." The spirit is always nearer than the letter. The sense of right and wrong is inherent, even where the distinction in particulars is utterly reversed. The sense is there, even where, by erroneous teaching and baneful environment, the right becomes the wrong, and vice versa. God made many revelations to man, but only one revelation in man. "At sundry times and in divers manners" did He speak; but "in these last days" He has not only spoken, but embodied Himself in Him who is "the brightness of His glory, and the express image of His person." Heb. 1: 1, 2, 3. "This is my Beloved Son, IN WHOM I AM WELL PLEASED; HEAR YE HIM." Matt. 17: 5. "Lo, I come to do thy will." "This is the will of God, even your sanctification." "Sanctify them through thy truth; thy WORD is truth." "The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart: with the heart man believeth unto righteousness, and with the mouth confession is made unto salvation." Heb. 10: 7, 8, 9; 1 Thess. 4: 3; John 17: 17: Rom. 10: 8, 9, 10.

The Incarnation and Bible are indeed accommodations to human infirmity, but they are infinitely more. It was necessary that God should show us how He lives by becoming a man and revealing the beauty of holiness to our senses. But far deeper is the necessity that He should identify Himself with us so as to bring both God and man under the penalty of death for sin, and thus liberate us completely from the liability to divine wrath. But this is only provisional salvation. What transpired in Him must transpire in us before we can become His joint-heirs. No amount of endeavor to imitate Him can make us like Him. "What is born of the flesh is flesh," and will eternally remain flesh, no matter how adorned with ethical attractions under the inspiration of even so high an ideal as the very Son of God in the form of perfect manhood. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, Ye MUST be born again."

As the Son represented the Father and the Spirit, so the Spirit represents the Father and the Son. God gave not the Spirit by measure unto Him, and the Spirit unfolds not a minimized or mutilated Christ. John 3: 34; Col. 2: 9; John 16: 13, 14, 15. Into the genesis and development and perfection of our life are woven all the commandments and ordinances pertaining to our inner being and all its manifestations. This forever shuts the door to antinomianism. "We are His workmanship, CREATED IN CHRIST JESUS unto good works which God hath before ordained that we should walk in them." Eph. 2: 10.

Obedience from the spur of conscience and the energy of volition and the motive of personal safety, is wholly apart from the cross, and never brings abiding peace. To call such a life the "faith that worketh by love," is a gross misnomer. The words obedience and works, as used by the Holy Spirit, have special reference to those activities of the divine life that are symbolized by the Christian sacraments, rather than to the sacraments themselves. To wash feet is grandly typical of the humility and sacrifice that characterizes the elect of God; but apart from the humility and the sacrifice, it is a soul-withering sham. The holy kiss is a beautiful certificate of the love that gladly dies for others, but in the absence of self-crucifixion it is a hollow, Christ-betraying mockery. Christ did His good works by the indwelling of the Father, and we do ours by the immanence of Christ. John 14: 10; Gal. 2: 20; Philpp. 4: 13.

One of the most difficult things for our lapsed nature to do, is to render punctual obedience to the forms of religion, and keep clear of legal relation to them. To err in this we soon mar our peace, sap our strength, and ultimately commit spiritual suicide. Christ is "Alpha and Omega." "Come unto me." It is Him we need to constitute us Christians, as truly as the virgin needed Him to form the Godman. The life that generates my thought and moves my hand and directs my foot is the same. The Divinity that animates and glorifies the man Christ Jesus at the right hand of Jehovah, is the same as that which throbs in the soul of every true believer. "He is not ashamed to call us brethren," because we have one Father, one quality of being, one peace, one joy, one glory. Heb. 2: 11; Col. 3: 4; John 17: 22, 24.

"Be strong in the Lord, and in the power of His might." Eph. 6. Make the sublime prayer of Paul your own. Eph. 3: 16–19. The right use of the name of Jesus will make you "an Israelite indeed," "mighty through God to the pulling down of strongholds," "more than conqueror through Him that loved us." John 14: 13, 14; 2 Tim. 2: 19; John 1: 47; 2 Cor. 10: 4; Rom. 8: 37.

Be not afraid of the menaces of the devil nor his emissaries. "The prince of this world is judged." John 16: 11. Remember well the kept and the keep, and "the wicked one shall not touch you." 1 Pet. 1: 5; 1 John 5: 18; Jude 21. Wrap your body and soul in John 14: 1, 20, 27, and "the gates of hell shall not prevail against you." Make yourself as familiar with Rom. 8: 33–39, as with the experience of your five senses. Let the doxology of 2 Cor. 2: 14 cause heart and lips to quiver with gladness.

Do not shrink from being "a fool for Christ's sake." "The foolishness of God is wiser than men." 1 Cor. 1: 25. The fourth and sixth verses in 2 Cor. 4 make a prodigious contrast. The fools of the cross are always in the beatitude of Philpp.

4: 4, and 1 Pet. 1: 8, while the laughing dupes of the devil can never think of death and eternity without the apprehension of "a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation, which shall devour the adversaries." Heb. 10: 27. To believe in Christ is to be saved; to believe is to live and love and work with God's own life, to be holy as He is holy, and to "rejoice in hope of His glory." 1 Pet. 1: 15, 16; Rom. 5: 1, 2. This is our mission and blessedness on earth and our song through all eternity. Rev. 1: 5, 6.

MORE ABOUT PALESTINE.

PALESTINE is rapidly becoming a center of interest for the whole world, and Jerusalem is more and more a focus of attention. The long-slumbering city has suddenly become of sufficient importance to arouse the jealousy of those historic enemies, the Greek and Latin churches. Their members have been rioting and fighting in the streets of Jerusalem to the extent of involving the French and Russian Ambassadors at Constantinople in the controversy. They have both appealed to the Sultan, the Frenchman championing the Catholics and the Russians, of course, the Greeks. Here is a new cause of alienation between France and Russia, and a new obstacle in the way of Russia getting hold of Palestine. Meanwhile the 5,000,000 Jews who are being driven out of Russia will likely re-inhabit their ancient home, and it may be that, in the contest between Catholic and Greek for Palestine, the bone of contention may fall to the hungry Hebrew, who has a better right to it than either of the others. The Baltimore Sun, speaking of the possibility of the Russian persecution "planting in Palestine a population of hardy Jewish farmers, whose industry may yet make that long-neglected country blossom like the rose," says: "It only needs proper cultivation to be amply productive. The investigations set on foot by the Palestine exploration fund indicates that the climate and soil are similar to that of Southern Italy, and that industry, aided at the start by a little capital, will obtain thoroughly satisfactory results. A large part of Judea, Samaria, Galilee and Gilead is well watered and capable of producing fruits, vegetables, grain, wine, oil, cotton and silk in great abundance.

"What may be done is shown by the success of the Jewish colony not very long since settled at Rosh Pinals, in Galilee. This colony began operations under discouraging circumstances. It was located among hills that appeared to be absolutely sterile. There were no roads and no facilities for irrigation. Within a short time, however, the district was reclaimed from savagery, and it now teems with fruits and grains. The once barren hill-sides are now productive vineyards and luxurious gardens. Orchards of figs, olives, pomegranates, lemons, etc., abound on every hand. The people live in comfortable houses, and their surroundings indicate general prosperity and content. The colony's prosperity has, in fact, exceeded the expectations of its founders. Other colonies are consequently being planted."—Christian Standard.

A WORD TO THE MINISTRY.

BY LANDON WEST.

THERE are so many instances where our ministering brethren excuse themselves from preaching because they are not prepared, as they say, for the occasion, that I feel a word of caution should be given.

Not infrequently I hear brethren, after rising to speak, persist in making their excuses and apologies. This is not preaching Christ nor his Word, and should be abandoned. The excuses are made, more to awaken sympathy for the speaker than to enlighten the hearers. Too often it is done to create a surprise in the congregation for him who does so well, even when he feels so poorly fitted for the work. Read 1 Pet. 3: 15, and you see that it makes no allowance for poorly-prepared preachers. It tells us to "be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh you a reason of the hope that is in you, with meekness and fear." This will allow no room for excuses or apologies, for the hope and our reason for it, is all that is to be given by us.

Paul, in his solemn charge to Timothy, puts a limit to everything but the Word of God. That is enough for any man. He tells Timothy to "preach the Word: be instant in season, out of season," 2 Tim. 4: 2. See also verse 5 and 1 Tim. 4: 13, 15, 16.

The observance of these things, given by Paul, is certainly what gave Timothy the success that he made, both as a speaker and as an elder. I feel that the observance of these duties, named in the one verse, 1 Tim. 4: 13, will give success to any minister, in our day as well as in the time of Timothy. Hence I say to all, let all of us heed it, not overlooking the duties named in the verses which follow. Let us follow these commandments strictly, and that will give success to every servant of Christ.

But to what does the reading refer?—is the question that will at once arise in the minds of all. It refers to the reading of the Bible, the Word of God. It can refer to nothing else for it is that which is to be preached, hence we must know it to preach it. But the evil of our day is the vast amount of printed matter, thrown out to the world like a flood, and which is choking and drowning out the Word of Life, because it is not read and studied as it should be.

The daily newspapers are now the tattlers of our day. Filled with murders, frauds, accidents, rumors, slanders, novels, theories and scientific religions, there is nothing that can feed either mind or soul with good. Money and time are thus spent uselessly, and all the while the good seed is choked out, so that little, if any, of it can come to perfection.

The vast amount of discontent to be found in all places, but especially among the aged and even with those who are professors of the faith, is caused not by an excess of knowledge, but by the want of the right kind of knowledge,—a lack of acquaintance, practically, with the Word of God, which is the Word of Life. Therein is revaled the thought of holiness, godliness, and how to obtain it, and this, with contentment, is great gain. This kind of knowledge must exceed all others and should stand first and foremost.

Let me, dear Brethren, say this: "Prepare to read the Word of God some every day. Procure a copy of the New Testament or Bible in large print; have a place for it to lie on a stand, table, or window, and there go at every opportunity, if it be but a minute, and read a verse, a paragraph, or a chapter, or more, as time may allow you and meditate upon it. You will find soon, that it is better bread than that which you obtain from your dinner-table." The Word of the Lord is tried," 2 Sam. 22: 31. "The words of the Lord are pure words; as silver tried in a furnace of earth, purified seven times." Ps. 12: 6; John 4: 34.

The Word will be a companion to you when alone, when at labor, in sorrow and in trouble, and more especially will it be a strong attendant with you when in worship, and it will do away with this thing of making excuses to the people.

It will be a ready help to you when you attempt to feed the flock of God. You will always have something good to give them, and also an abundance of it: hence all will grow, and all will be warm and strong. It is then that serving God will be more of a pleasure to its people than a cross, for their delight will be in the law of the Lord; and in his law will they meditate both day and night. Ps. 1: 2. His Word will then be their thought and delight all the while, and they can not lack for something to say about it.

THE TRINITY.

BY CHAS. M. YEAROUT.

"For there is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus; who gave himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time."—1 Tim. 2: 5, 6.

THERE are three persons represented in the Godhead, and each of them was active in bringing about the plan of human redemption, and presenting it unto the children of men. Man, by right of choice, alienated himself from God, violating the law of the Most High. Trampling under foot his teachings, he went into the channels of sin and disobedience. Thus Adam's race became contaminated with wickedness,—entailing upon man and his posterity, misery and suffering. Man was created in the image of God, possessing in a certain degree the nature of God, but it was beyond the power of man to extricate himself from the deplorable condition into which he had plunged himself. The Levitical priesthood was powerless to restore man to his Adamic state. All the blood of slain animals on Jewish altars could not take away sin, or perfect one soul, but typified, or pointed forward to, the shedding of the blood of Jesus Christ,—the only remedy that can take away sin with its terrible effects.

Christ was with the Father in the creation of the world. "Let us make man in our image, after our likeness," proves there were more than one engaged in the creative work. See Gen. 1: 26; John 1: 3, 10; Col. 1: 16; Heb. 1: 2. God is the original cause of all things,—visible and invisible. Christ, the "sent of God," worked in subordination to the Father. He left the glory world, and came to earth to do the will of his Father. "I seek not mine own will, but the will of the Father which sent me. For I came down from heaven, not to do mine own will, but the will of him that sent me." John 5: 19, 30; 6: 38; 4: 34.

Christ worked in submission to the will of the Father. The Holy Spirit was sent into the world after Christ's ascension into heaven, to confirm and carry forward the work inaugurated by Christ. "It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you. When he, the Spirit of truth, is come, he will guide you into all truth: for he shall not speak of himself; but whatsoever he shall hear, that shall he speak: and he will shew you things to come. He shall glorify me: for he shall receive of mine, and shall shew it unto you." John 16: 7, 13, 14; 1 John 2: 27.

"But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you." John 14: 26; 15: 26. God was the moving power. Christ, the one sent of the Father, did the will of the Father in perfecting and establishing the plan of human redemption. The Holy Spirit who came forth from the Father and the Son, is the confirming power.

But Jesus says, "I and my Father are one." John 10: 30. Very true. There is a sense in which they are one, and there is a sense in which they are two. They are one in the same sense at the church of Christ is one. Christ, in

's prayer to the Father for the church, prays, that they (the children of God) all may be one;
thou, Father, art in me, and I in thee, that they so may be one in us: that the world may be-eve that thou hast sent me. And the glory hich thou gavest me I have given them; that ey may be one, even as we are one." John 17:
, 22.

It is evident that the believers are not one in erson, but one in sentiment, faith and practice.
perfect unity existed in the church of Christ in e early days. "And the multitude of them that elieved were of one heart and of one soul: nei-er said any of them that aught of the things hich he possessed was his own; but they had all ings common." Acts 4: 32. "Now I beseech ou, brethren, by the name of our Lord Jesus hrist, that ye all speak the same thing, and that ere be no divisions among you: but that ye be rfectly joined together in the same mind and in e same judgment." 1 Cor. 1: 10; Philpp. 3: 16.
From the above it is very plain in what sense
e Father and the Son are one.

Again Jesus says, "He that hath seen me hath en the Father." John 14: 9. Would we not fer from this language that the Father and the on are one in appearance? Otherwise, how uld they see the Father by looking at the Son?
ne book of inference is very large. But the ord of God answers the question very plainly.
n whom the God of this world hath blinded the inds of them that believe not, lest the light of e glorious Gospel of Christ, who is the IMAGE
GOD, should shine unto them." 2 Cor. 4: 4.
Who is the IMAGE of the invisible GOD, the first-rn of every creature." Col. 1: 15. "Who, beg the brightness of his glory, and the express age of his (God's) person." Heb. 1: 3. He is so called God, and represented as being above e angels. "But unto the Son he saith, Thy rone, O God, is for ever and ever: a sceptre of ghteousness is the sceptre of thy kingdom.
hou hast loved righteousness, and hated iniqui-
; therefore God, even thy God, hath anointed ee with the oil of gladness above thy fellows."
eb. 1: 8, 9.

Christ is called God because his Father's name as God. Hence he inherited that name from s Father. "Being made so much better than e angels, as he hath by inheritance obtained a ore excellent name than they." Verse 4. The -personality of the Godhead was demonstrated Christ's baptism. Christ comes up out of the ater, the Holy Ghost descended in a bodily ape like a dove upon him, and "a voice came om heaven, which said, Thou art my beloved n; in thee I am well pleased." Matt. 3: 16, 17; ark 1: 10, 11; Luke 3: 21, 22. The Son is on the rth, just come out of the water, the Holy Spirit between heaven and earth, descending upon the n. God, the Father, is in heaven from whence proclaims Christ as his son, in whom he is ll pleased. God also acknowledges him as his n on the Mount of Transfiguration. Matt. 17:
Luke 9: 35. The Son is not the Holy Ghost, om the fact that "whosoever speaketh or blashemeth against the Son, it shall be forgiven him, t he that speaketh or blaspheneth against the oly Ghost, hath never forgiveness, but is in nger of eternal damnation." Matt. 12: 31, 32; ark 3: 28, 29.

Christians are represented as being in each of e three persons in the Blessed Trinity. The postle writes unto "the church of the Thessalo-ans, which is in God, the Father, and in the ord Jesus Christ," 1 Thess. 1: 1, "But ye are t in the flesh, but in the Spirit."

We should believe in, honor, and reverence the n, even as we do the Father in our worship.
"The Father hath committed all judgment unto the Son, that all men should honor the Son, even as they honor the Father. He that honoreth not the Son, honoreth not the Father which sent him." John 5: 22, 23; 1 John 2: 23. "Let not your heart be troubled: ye believe in God, believe also in me." John 14: 1. Stephen, the martyr, beheld the Son standing on the right hand of the Father in heaven, after his resurrection and ascension. "Behold I see the heavens opened, and the Son of man standing on the right hand of God." Acts 7: 55, 56. "For there are three that bear record in heaven, the Father, the Word, (the Son) and the Holy Ghost: and these three are one." 1 John 5: 7. Paul recognizes the Three in his benediction. "The grace of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the love of God, and the communion of the Holy Ghost be with you all. Amen." 2 Cor. 12: 14 Christ, in giving his last and great commission, commands his ministers to baptize into each name of the Trinity. "Baptizing them (eis) into the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." Thus we honor the Son and Holy Spirit, even as we honor the Father, and are brought into relationship with each person, and each bears record to his own name. The Father created all things; then rested from all his work. Gen. 2: 2; Heb. 4: 10.

Christ came into the world as the Son of God, to redeem man from his lost and ruined condition, and I verily believe did a greater work in redeeming man, than God did in creating him. Creation was a work of rejoicing and gladness. The atonement, or work of redemption, was one of severe suffering and bitter anguish. The sun refused to witness the scene, when the Son of God was completing the last act of human redemption, by yielding up his life upon Calvary's cross, dying in man's stead. Christ accomplished his great work, and entered into his rest, "ascending into heaven, where he sits on the right hand of the Majesty on high." Heb. 4: 10; 12: 2; 1: 3. The Holy Spirit is now doing his work; reproving the world of sin, etc. John 16: 8, 9. He invites sinners to come to Christ, and accept of the plan of salvation. Rev. 22: 17. He leads the children of God into all truth, and brings to their remembrance all things "whatsoever Christ has said unto them." Christ is now in his high-priestly office; seated at the right hand of God as a mediator, he intercedes for the saints. Rom. 8: 27, 34; 1 John 2: 1. He intercedes for all that come unto God by him. Heb. 7: 25.

When he comes again, it will be with kingly authority to execute judgment. He then shall sit upon his throne as king. Rev. 19: 16; 20: 4. He shall reign till the last enemy shall be destroyed. Then he will deliver up the kingdom to the Father. "And when all things shall be subdued unto him, then shall the Son also himself be subject unto him that put all things under him, that God may be all and in all." 1 Cor. 15: 24, 25, 27, 28.

Kind reader, let us accept of Christ while he intercedes for us, and pleads with us to be reconciled to God, for his mediatorial work will cease when he comes in great pomp and glory to avenge himself of his enemies. We then must meet him as a mighty, conquering king; but if we have been faithful to him, in adhering to his councils and precepts, all will be well. We can say, "Come, Lord Jesus, come."

Westphalia, Kans.

"LITTLE faults become great, and even monstrous, in our eyes, in proportion as the pure light of God increases in us; just as the sun, in rising, reveals the true dimensions of objects which were dimly and confusedly discerned during the night. In the sight of God there are no little sins."

HONESTY.

BY D. E. PRICE.

Number Two.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."—Matt. 7: 12; Luke 6: 31.

HONESTY in spiritual things is still of more importance than in temporal, or worldly, things; and we cannot say under this head, as we did under the other, that men are not dishonest with themselves, thereby deceiving themselves. Paul says, "For if a man think himself to be something, when he is nothing, he deceiveth himself." Gal. 6: 3. It appears strange that men will practice dishonesty on others, but not on themselves in financial matters, but that they are so ready to be deceived, and even deceive themselves in spiritual things, which are of so much greater importance, and right in opposition to the positive declaration of God's Word, which says, "Be not deceived; God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap." Gal. 6: 7.

The above language implies that we may deceive ourselves, or be deceived, but we cannot deceive God. We may make pretensions of living a Christian life, and may appear to others to be sincere, while we are only acting hypocrisy, but God knows us altogether, for he can see into the secrets of all hearts, and knows the motive from which we act.

The reason why we are so ready to be deceived in spiritual things, we believe, is because of our depraved natures. It is more agreeable to our fallen natures to do wrong than right, or what God has commanded us to do. God has plainly told us what to do in order to obtain eternal life, but the tempter comes and tells us, "God did not mean what he said. Only follow your own inclinations: do as you please, or what you think right and all will be well."

One of the greatest deceptions of the present age is the theory that whatever a man thinks is right will answer the purpose. If a man can be saved by doing what he thinks is right, there is no necessity for Christ coming into the world and delivering us a code of laws by which to be saved; hence we are not honest with ourselves when we yield to such teachings in preference to the plainly-revealed will of God.

Honesty is a very essential element in our church government. It should be observed by all, from the elder up to the laity (I say "up," for the official body are the servants of the church, and the servant always occupies the lowest position). It is also in harmony with the teachings of Christ, which is plainly shown in the following Scripture: "Then came to him the mother of Zebedee's children with her sons, worshiping him, and desiring a certain thing of him. And he said unto her, What wilt thou? She saith unto him, Grant that these my two sons may sit, the one on thy right hand, and the other on the left, in thy kingdom. And when the ten heard it, they were moved with indignation against the two brethren. But Jesus called them unto him, and said, Ye know that the princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. But it shall not be so among you: but whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister; and whosoever will be chief among you, let him be your servant: Even as the Son of man came not to be ministered unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." Matt. 20: 20, 21, 24, 25, 26, 27, 28. See also Mark 10. Sometimes elders, in enforcing the discipline of the church, are too rigid with some, and too lenient with others, and especially with themselves. They are exhorted to be ensamples to the flock. 1 Pet. 5: 3. And they should be especially so in making acknowledgments for mistakes made or wrongs committed. I heard that a certain elder said he was too old to make an acknowledgment. If elders once get too much exalted to make acknowledgments for their wrongs, how can they expect to enforce discipline on the other members?

If a brother is accused of a fault, and knows he is guilty, but will not confess it until he is proven in fault, he is not honest with himself. It is true a man cannot be compelled to convict himself in civil courts; but a Christian (we don't mean a mere professor of religion but a Christian), if he falls into error, does not wait until some one else presents his case to the church, but he brings himself into judgment by voluntarily making confession to the church, and undergoing whatever penalty the church sees fit to inflict. We need not conclude that a man is not a Christian because he does wrong sometimes; but he is void of a Christian spirit if he refuses to make his wrongs right as far as he possibly can.

David was said to be "a man after God's own heart," yet he committed some gross sins. Why was he, then, a man after God's own heart? Because, when he sinned he humbled himself before God, and repented thoroughly for his sin, and that is what the Lord delights in. We have been present when personal difficulties were brought before the church. Charges were preferred against certain ones, which they denied, but when proven guilty by positive testimony, they acknowledged their guilt. They certainly were dishonest either when they denied, or when they confessed,—one or the other was the untruth. However much we may be ashamed; if we are overtaken by sin, we should never be ashamed to acknowledge our faults, for this is the only means that God has provided for the pardon of sin. How thankful we should be that the Lord has made this provision for us when we do that which is wrong!

We want to relate a circumstance that occurred some years ago, which will demonstrate our position. Two brethren went to Chicago. The one said to the other before they started, that he thought of going into the museum. The other said they would better not go there; but after they were there several days, and were about through with their business, and were going by the museum, the first one said, "Come, let us go in." The other, instead of using his influence to keep his brother away, followed him in. They were both well pleased with it, nearly all on exhibition being the work of nature, and so their consciences did not trouble them much. But when they were about through in this department, the folding doors were thrown wide open, and the rush was for the theatrical department. Then the first brother said, "Come, let us go in." Both went in, but the other brother was completely condemned. The two opposite spirits were striving with him,—the one to get him away, the other to keep him there. Finally, when the performance was about half over, he yielded to his convictions of right, and he left the place. He had, however, no peace of mind. They met again in the evening at a friend's house, and while they were eating supper, the first one spoke about what he saw at the matinee, for that was what they called it. The other said, "If you were condemned as I was, you would not have much to say about it." There happened to be a minister, but not of the Brethren, present, and he said there was no harm in going there, but that did not ease the conscience of the brother, and he had no peace of mind until he formed the resolution to acknowledge to the church, and ask forgiveness at his first opportunity. The following Sunday he went to meeting with the full determination to carry out his resolution. When he got there, there were no other ministers present, and he being one, had to preach. He first acknowledged to the church, before the congregation, what he had done, and asked forgiveness, and then preached as best he could.

When meeting was dismissed, a brother approached him and said, "You had no business to expose yourself before the congregation as you did to-day. Why your whole sermon condemned you." He replied, "I condemned myself before I commenced." But before the congregation had dispersed, an outsider was heard to say, "There is one honest Dunkard anyhow;" and before many months that man united with the church.

We have related this lengthy incident to show the advantage of making voluntary confessions, which is the strongest evidence of honesty.

We read that, "the time has come when judgment must begin at the house of God." 1 Pet. 4: 17. It is the duty of every member to bring his own work into judgment, and if he neglects his duty, the church is under obligations to bring him to an account. If the church fails through neglect, or for want of testimony, she will fall under judgment at the great day. "Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after." 1 Tim. 5: 24.

ENVY.

BY A. B. FISHER.

ENVY is a very small word, yet it contains enough to be the cause of our eternal ruin. Therefore we should be very careful not to let it get control of us, and thereby send us to eternal destruction. Please examine your dictionary and get the full meaning of this small word, and then you will see the importance of avoiding the evil, and not letting it get control of you at any time. "Wrath killeth the foolish man, and envy slayeth the silly one." Job 5: 2. The two words "wrath" and "envy," are closely allied, but the latter is more destructive than the former. Envy has been one great weapon used successfully by the devil, since the creation of man. Envy caused Cain to kill his brother, Abel, because the latter's offering unto the Lord was more acceptable than Cain's.

Moved with envy, Joseph's brethren sold him into Egypt. Acts 7: 9. The arch enemy to Christians used this great weapon in bringing our Savior to be crucified. "Whom will ye that I release unto you? Barabbas, or Jesus which is called Christ? For he knew that for envy they had delivered him." Matt. 27: 17. Yes, the more we investigate what envy has done, the more we find that it is one of the greatest evils that we can harbor in our hearts. Take it in its broadest sense, and we find that it has caused more loss of life, by the cruel wars of nations, communities and individuals, than any other one thing. Think of the loss of life, the heart-rending anguish of soul, separation of friends and relatives, husbands and wives, and all the evils in that line, to say nothing of the money and property that is spent to gratify one's envy and kindred desires. Webster includes covetousness as one of the evils caused by envy. The Divine Record tells us: "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's house, thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbour's." Ex. 20: 17.

See what Paul has to say on this subject, "Fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints." Eph. 5: 3. "Mortify therefore your members which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanness, inordinate affection, evil concupiscence, and covetousness, which is idolatry." Col. 3: 5. "Let your conversation be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have: for he hath said, I will never leave thee nor forsake thee." Heb. 13: 5. "Whoever envies another, confesses his rival's superiority." We might cite to numerous passages, showing the great danger there is in allowing ourselves to be led into this great sin of envy.

We will now refer to some of the texts, that show us how we should conduct ourselves, as true Christians.

Rom. 13: 13, "Let us walk honestly, as in the day; not in rioting and drunkenness, not in chambering and wantonness, not in strife and envying."

Titus 3: 3, "We ourselves also were sometimes foolish, disobedient, deceived, serving divers lusts and pleasures, living in malice and envy, hateful, and hating one another." But now the love of God should be shed abroad in our hearts, and "be subject to principalities and powers, to obey magistrates, to be ready to do every good work, to speak evil of no one, to be no brawlers, but gentle, shewing all meekness unto all persons."

1 Pet. 2: 1, 2, "Laying aside all malice, and all guile, and hypocrisies, and envies, and all evil speakings, as newborn babes desire the sincere milk of the word, that ye may grow thereby."

Paul, as you notice, says that we should be ready to do every good work, instead of envying one another. That takes in every good act that we can perform during our entire life, so that we should be striving at all times to see how much good we can do while God spares our lives. Thus we will feel happiness in doing good to others, in place of envying them.

It is wonderful what trouble even one person can cause in a church or neighborhood, by being envious and hateful. They can tear down faster than the whole church can build up. Our great High-priest says, "Woe to that man by whom the offense cometh." Matt. 18: 7. I hope, dear brethren and sisters, that we all will be more careful in our future lives to avoid being envious, and, instead, try to do good to all persons.

"THE person who complacently admits that any favorite sin is his 'besetting sin,' may be sure that no sin so thoroughly besets him as a certain willingness to be beset by any sin. And yet most persons seem to feel relieved of a certain burden of responsibility when they have catalogued an evil desire, or habit, in themselves, as their besetting sin. Because they speak of it as their besetting sin, they seem to regard it as a possession necessary to the completeness of their character as a sinner. If the discovery and stigmatizing of one's besetting sin means a fixed determination to exterminate it, that would be one thing. But if it means, as too often it does, that it is to be accepted and borne with as one of the natural constituents of every human personality; that the possessor of it has labeled it and put it by to keep as a part of his moral cabinet; that every other weakness and fault and sin is to be eradicated, while this is to be let alone so as to fulfill the supposed necessity of a sinner having a besetting sin,—that is quite another thing. Let us realize that there is no more virtue in besetting sins than in other sins."

"SOME men are always seeking for honors: trying to get higher positions. The better way is to walk faithfully in the path of duty and the honors will find them."

TRINE IMMERSION.

WRITER in the GOSPEL MESSENGER, an advocate of the e practice, answered our recent remarks on this subject. makes four quotations from history in support of the ice. But all his witnesses were between the middle of hird, and the beginning of the fifth century. The last ation reads as follows:

"The doctrine of our holy mother, the Catholic church, lways, my brethren, been with us, and doth still abide us, and especially the article of baptism, and the trine ersion wherewith it is celebrated."

is simply proves that trine immersion was at that time a ice of the Catholic mother of sects. Though that ate institution had not then reached the climax of popery, an prove by history that the mystery of iniquity had ly developed into actual existence at that time. That claimed primitive authority for the practice amounts to ng; for every new and superstitious rite they created,—they were many — they foisted upon Christ and the les. This any student of ecclesiastical history knows. says Mosheim, one of the most reliable historians: "Of ites and ceremonies used in the church during this (the) century." See page 69. "All the records of this ry mention the multiplicity of rites and ceremonies in Christian church.' And he goes on and says that the on which then reigned for exorcism, or formal supers, casting out of devils, which was practiced in close ection with baptism, which the Christians had borrowed the Platonic philosophy, or heathen superstitions, was a ng cause of this new addition to rites and ceremonies. ronder they then began to give men three dips. "At the time," says Mosheim, "The use of incense was intro-d." And, "several alterations were now introduced in elebration of the Lord's Supper." And, in fact, nearly r element of the Divine church was more or less sub-d, and supplemented by human ceremonies. It is a very ase, when our trine immersionists must pass over the in-d history of the church, and two hundred years later e they can find one plain proof of the three dip practice. heir citations of history from the third, fourth and fifth ries may be taken as an evidence that no earlier rec- can be produced that will help their cause. We can, ever, give them one earlier historical reference. Our rs remember that we remarked that the first mention of baptism, was followed by a remark that it transcended ommand of Christ. The passage was put on record by llian, who lived at the close of the second and in the nning of the third century. Here are his words:

"We are immersed three times, fulfilling somewhat more our Lord has decreed in the Gospel." This writer, g in the age in which triune baptism took its rise, con-d that it was an innovation, one of the many super-us additions and ceremonies, history informs us that had a mania for inventing at that time.

e writer also based an argument upon the rigid enforce- of our rules of grammar upon Matt. 28: 19. But who not know that the Scriptures abound in idioms that can-be resolved within the rules of English grammar, es-lly is this true where the trinity of Divine persons is en of.—Gospel Trumpet, for June 15, 1891.

ince our historical references in our former cle are not early enough to satisfy, we give a earlier ones. However, the writer fails to n attempt to prove that single immersion had earlier origin than the fourth century, and n then must found his practice upon a per-ter, viz., Eunomius. We challenge him to give n a respectable showing for an earlier claim. cannot do so, for there is but one route to the stles, and that one must be traced through e immersion.

lement, of Alexandria, living in the latter half he second century, says, "Ye were conducted bath, just as Christ was carried to the grave, were there immersed to symbolize the three s of his 'burial."—Wiberg on Baptism, page ustin Martyr, born A. D. 100, died A. D. 165. aking of baptism he says, "Then we bring m to the place where there is water, and y are baptized by the same way of baptism by ich we were baptized, for they are washed in water in the name of God, the Father, Lord all things, and of our Savior Jesus Christ, l of the Holy Spirit." — Pengilly on Baptism, ge 150. (See J. H. Moore's "Trine Immersion aced to the Apostles.")

Tertullian gives strong testimony for trine immersion. He was born about 145 A. D., but we will only give one passage from him. The writer in the Trumpet either willfully misquotes Tertullian, or else does not know, for Tertullian does not say, "We are immersed three times, fulfilling somewhat more than our Lord has decreed in the Gospel." We give here a number of translations of this passage in Tertullian from critical authors: "To deal with this matter briefly, I shall begin with baptism. When we are going to enter the water, but a little before, in the presence of the congregation, and under the hand of the president, we solemnly profess that we disown the devil, and his pomp, and his angels. Hereupon we are thrice immersed, making a somewhat ampler pledge than the Lord has appointed in the Gospel." — Antinicene Christian Library, Vol. 11 page 336–7.

Here is Dr. Duncan's translation of the passage: "Being about to approach the water, both there, and also in the church, a short time before, we testify, under the hand of the president, that we renounce the devil, his pomp, and his angels. Then we are immersed three times, having responded somewhat more at length than the Lord has determined in the Gospel." — History of Baptists, pages 128, 129.

Alexander Campbell's rendering reads thus: "To begin with baptism, when we are ready to enter the water, and even before we make our protestations before the bishop, and in the church, that we renounce the devil, all his pomp and ministers: afterwards we are plunged in the water three times, and they make us answer to some things which are not precisely set down in the Gospel."— Campbell and Purcell Debate, page 124.

Dr. Wall gives it as follows: "We do renounce the devil, and his pomp, and his angels. Then we are three times plunged into the water; and we answer some few words more than those which our Savior in the Gospel has enjoined."—Wall's History of Infant Baptism, Vol. 2, page 420. (See Quinter on "Trine Immersion," pages 295–300.)

It is clearly seen by any candid reader that Tertullian had no reference to baptism, as containing somewhat more, but to the questions that accompany the ceremony. S. N. McCANN.

IF THE HEART IS RIGHT, ALL IS RIGHT.

BY A. HUTCHISON.

Number Two.

IF it were true that the heart, emotions, or conscience are safe guides in spiritual matters, then we would have but very little use for God's Word. All these witnesses, as named above, may be brought into use, yet we dare not let them testify, unless they do so in harmony with God's Word. We must remember that not every one that prophesies, is sent of God. The Lord says, "I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran: I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied." Jer. 23: 21.

This would make us feel fully in harmony with the apostle's good counsel, when he says, "Beloved, believe not every spirit, but try the spirits, whether they are of God: because many false prophets are gone out into the world." 1 John 4: 1.

Now, those prophets all prophesy. "But they prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so." Jer. 5: 31.

Those prophets, who tell the people they need not be so careful about keeping all the commands of Jesus, are the kind that the Lord says he did not send. They will tell you that the only necessary thing is to see that the heart is right. "If the heart is right, all is right."

Right here we must bring up the test: "He that saith, I know him, and keepeth not his commandments, is a liar and the truth is not in him." 1 John 2: 4. We do not understand that a mere formal observance of the ordinances of the house of God will meet the case. All this may be done so far as the outward form is concerned, and at the same time the heart may be burning with unkind feelings toward a fellow disciple. We should never forget that our feelings toward our Father in heaven and our Blessed Redeemer, are to be measured by our feelings toward our fellow disciples. Jesus says, "Whatsoever ye do to one of the least of these my brethren, ye do to me." And, again, "If a man say, I love God, and hateth his brother, he is a liar: for he that loveth not his brother whom he hath seen, how can he love God whom he hath not seen?" 1 John 4: 20.

This reasoning is certainly logical. Then it requires something more than an appearance before men, before the question is settled as to whether the heart is right. Again, we hear it said, "All we need is to have a bountiful supply of the love of God in our hearts." This certainly is true. But we inquire, What is the love of God? We call upon the apostle for the answer. He says, "For this is the love of God, that ye keep his commandments." 1 John 5: 3. Then it matters not what our pretensions to sanctity or purity of heart may be, we cannot have the full measure, this side of obedience to the commandments of Jesus and the apostles, or as given by them.

FULL SALVATION.

BY SOLOMON SCHUBERT.

IN urging your suit, rest wholly on the name of your endorser,—Jesus Christ. In his address, John 9: 16, in which the pearl of perfect love is again and again promised in the coming of the abiding Comforter, Jesus inserts in every promise the condition, "in my name." This means that we are to identify our plea with the glory of Christ. We cannot fail when we pray for the same blessing for which he intercedes in our behalf.

We are sure that selfishness does not underlie our petition when our aim is the glory of Christ only. When we thus use the name of our High-priest, we clothe ourselves with his merit.

The name of Jesus is like the signet ring of an absent monarch,—purposely left behind to authenticate the acts of his ministers. It transfers his powers to them. So has Jesus transferred to our hands the key that unlocks the treasury of heaven, and secures the outpouring of the anointing that shall ever abide with us. This is the greatest gift that man can wish or heaven can send.

"TRUTH is always consistent with itself and needs nothing to help it out. It is always near at hand, sits upon our lips, and is ready to drop out before we are aware. A lie is troublesome, and sets a man's invention on the rack, and one trick needs a great many more to make it good. It is building upon a false foundation, which continually stands in need of props to hold it up; and proves at last more chargeable than to have raised a substantial building at first upon a true and solid foundation."

WILL WE DO IT?

BY GALEN B. ROYER.

WHAT, then, is needed to push the work forward into such extensive fields as are included in the State Districts, represented in the preceding article?

1. A District mission board alive to the importance of this work. At present most of the Districts have mission boards appointed, but some of them, I fear, are not active in the work. Then there are still a few Districts that have not appointed a board at all, although the General Conference recommended it over seven years ago. This board should be composed of men who feel the weight of souls heavily upon them so that they would use every reasonable and lawful effort to send the Gospel to the dying thousands. They should be brethren who will make the work some study, for without it they cannot work intelligently and advantageously.

2. We need such a spiritual awakening in our ranks that ministers and others cannot help giving up their worldly pursuits, and, like Paul, press the Gospel into these new fields. This seems to be the most difficult problem presenting itself to the church to-day. How shall the church get suitable and trustworthy ministers for the field? This question does not arise because talent is wanting in her ranks. This is a day, and I rejoice in it, when young people, as well as middle-aged and old people, come to Christ. But old people do not feel like leaving their comfortable homes to go out on the frontier, and the church does not expect it of them. The middle-aged are involved in business, and because of the sacrifice required to close out and the lack of income from mission work, compared with what they are making, they are slow to enter the field. Why, then, are not the young brethren called, for in them seems to be our greatest hope? I believe, in many instances, they themselves are largely at fault for not being called. There may be a few congregations that would not call a comparatively young brother to the ministry under any circumstances; but they are very few, if any. On the other hand, I feel sure if our young brethren would diligently study the Bible, come into full sympathy with the church, conform to her order, be active in Sunday-school work, labor at home for the cause, and manifest true piety in their daily walk, that it would not be long until they should be called to labor for the church. Sometimes the church is censured because she is slow in putting young brethren to dealing out the Words of Life. But she is not wholly in fault. The office is a responsible one; is a power in the church in moulding sentiment, and she does well to look carefully before she calls. For these reasons I say our young brethren are partly in fault for not having suitable missionaries in the field. And I would that our dear young brethren could be made to realize in part the responsibility of Elijah's mantle that will soon fall upon them, so that they would prepare to bear it for Christ and labor for Christianity in its primitive purity. Oh, for the day when more of the young soldiers of the cross will acquit themselves in such a commendable manner and manifest such an ability as will cause the church to have confidence in them and place them where they are so much needed—to minister holy things to the wanderers!

3. The final requirement, of course, is consecrated money. This point has been pretty thoroughly discussed from time to time, and some have a tendency to grow weary of hearing it. But it is not necessary to say that all this work cannot be done without money. Once accept that the church and her individual members owe this debt of salvation, and no one can escape the obligation of contributing his share towards cancelling it. And it is encouraging to see that so many in different parts of the Brotherhood take pleasure in making their share of the payment. To carry on the work for the church the District Boards must have money, and the General Board must have money,—the former to push the work in their own District; the latter to help the boards in the weak Districts. This shows clearly the relation between the General Board and the District Boards, and also the relation of the church to both. Every member should contribute to both boards; to the General Fund at least the fifty-two cents per year recommended by Annual Conference. This will give them ample funds to aid the weak Districts. In this way the burden of carrying on the work in the large and weak Districts is distributed over the Brotherhood. Sometimes a District assumes the attitude that it will not contribute to the General Fund because it has all it can do at home. The result is, the District being weak, the proper amount is not raised and the work is crippled. How much better and more systematic it would be if all would contribute, and then those that are weak call and receive sufficient help to push the work properly. To illustrate: Texas paid into the General Fund last year $61.87, or at the rate of sixty-five cents per member. The Board sent money into the State ($223.65) to push the work as fast as the Brethren there think best. While the Board carefully guards against any extravagance in expenditures, the Brethren in Texas were not hampered by the want of means to push the work. The Annual Meeting has adopted a plan, simple and systematic, and I am sure if every member in every District would work up to it, there would be no lack of funds to push the work properly in every State District or field occupied by the Brethren.

In addition to this each member should contribute at least fifty-two cents per year to the support of this District Mission Board. Who, that can earn day's wages cannot, if he will, give $1.04 per year for the salvation of souls? Who, that earns that much does not spend several times that amount yearly for that which is unnecessary? I have little fears but that the one who has learned to give fifty-two cents in the right spirit will give more if his "as God hath prospered him" will justify it. The great need in the Brotherhood on this part of the missionary question is for every member to learn to give willingly two cents per week.

To conclude: The work is a great one; the Brotherhood has the talent and the means; the sticking question is, Will we do it?

"HERE AM I: SEND ME."

BY H. W. STRICKLER.

"AMEN," saith my heart and soul to the suggestions of Galen B. Royer in MESSENGER No. 28, page 439. And to forward the cause and to carry on the work, let every solicitor who solicited, and every contributor who contributed to the temporal wants of the Kansas sufferers, cease not their solicitations and withhold not their donations, but continue in the good cause in behalf of these now perishing souls, and redouble their energies to send to them the Bread of Eternal Life!

Now is the time to act, for at the going down of the sun of life the hungry soul cannot be fed with the products of your field, the body cannot be warmed with your clothes, your human sympathies cannot reach the heart, and your money cannot buy one morsel of bread for the poor, starving souls of the children of men.

Let the dear brethren who so faithfully and judiciously distributed the relief funds, and who have learned to know the Districts, together with such men as they may choose to assist them, act as a special missionary committee, to say into what localities men should be sent to preach. Preach the Word to those who realized their situation and appreciated our efforts in their behalf! Let such ministers be sent as will be bright and shining lights, such as will do honor to the cause, and bear in their person the marks of a crucified and risen Savior!

A great battle must be fought, and we, as soldiers, are either to lose or to win it in this great conflict. Let every soul now go forth to the battle of the Lord! If you cannot be an officer, be a private. If you can do nothing else, you can hold up the hands of an Aaron.

"Let none hear you idly saying,
There is nothing I can do,
While the souls of men are dying,
And the Master calls for you.
Take the task he gives you, gladly,
Let his work your pleasure be,
Answer quickly when he calleth,
Here am I: Send me, send me."

HARD TO UNDERSTAND.

THERE are some things that I cannot understand. One is this, that people can stand it to lose a large sum, and cannot stand to give the same large sum. I once asked a man for $25,000 for a college. He said it was utterly impossible. Two weeks later, he, by accident, lost $250,000, a round quarter of a million. When I met him and offered him my sympathy, he said: "Our house is a very strong one, and it will not affect us." I asked another for $60,000, and his wife said it would beggar them. He told a friend one year afterwards that he wished he had given it to me, for as I talked, he thought of the money it would take if he did do it, and that he had put it elsewhere, and lost it all, and more than an equal sum to get it out; but he would not feel it much! A farmer is shocked to be talked to about giving $100, but his best horse will die, and nobody sees that it will make any difference. I cannot understand this thing. Will not these people please give their testimony whether it makes any difference in the bank whether money is checked out to pay gifts or to pay losses?—C. P. Hugo in The Message.

The Gospel Messenger

Is the recognized organ of the German Baptist or Brethren's church, and advocates the form of doctrine taught in the New Testament and pleads for a return to apostolic and primitive Christianity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and maintains that Faith toward God, Repentance from dead works, Regeneration of the heart and mind, baptism by Trine Immersion for remission of sins unto the reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, are the means of adoption into the household of God,—the church militant.

It also maintains that Feet-washing, as taught in John 13, both by example and command of Jesus, should be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper, instituted by Christ and as universally observed by the apostles and the early Christians, is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening or after the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ.

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ

That the principle of Plain Dressing and of Non-conformity to the world, as taught in the New Testament, should be observed by the followers of Christ.

That the Scriptural duty of Anointing the Sick with Oil, in the Name of the Lord, James 5: 14, is binding upon all Christians.

It also advocates the church's duty to support Missionary and Tract Work, thus giving to the Lord for the spread of the Gospel and for the conversion of sinners.

In short, it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discords of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe.

Mount Morris, Ill., - - - - Aug. 18, 1891.

BRO. J. G. ROYER expects to spend this week with the Brethren at Mexico, Ind.

WE are in receipt of an item of church news, from Woolvine, Va., without the writer's name.

BRO. J. S. MOHLER, of Morrill, Kans., is now in the field again, his first point being at Cameron, Mo.

BRO. CHAS. M. YEAROUT, of the Scott Valley church, Kansas, has been ordained to the eldership.

ON account of sickness in his family, Bro. E. S. Young did not reach Girard, Ill., as mentioned in last issue.

ALL new subscriptions after this date must commence with the present number. Names are coming much faster than we had anticipated, hence we are short of all back issues.

THE steamer "Aller," on which Bro. Miller sailed, was reported safe, Sunday morning, Aug. 10. We hope to have more particulars for next issue.

BRO. J. C. LAHMAN and wife reached here last week, with the intention of remaining in Northern Illinois for a while at least. We welcome them among us.

BRO. I. J. ROSENBERGER, of Covington, Ohio, is booked for a series of meetings at Iowa Center, Iowa, the middle of this month. He expects to give us a call on his return the 5th of October.

WE have on hand a very neatly-written article, entitled "Burden of Sin," and the writer's name has in some manner got separated from it. If this meets the eye of the writer, we will be thankful for the name.

SEVERAL weeks ago we referred to a serious accident that befell Eld. Daniel Glick, of Missouri. He died July 25. Thus ended a busy and useful life. He was taken from the field just at the time he was needed. May the Lord raise up others to take his place in the field.

IT is not yet known in what part of Iowa the next Annual Meeting is to be held, but we learn from the Daily Iowa Capital, of Aug. 7th, that the State Agricultural Society has tendered to the Brethren the use of the buildings on the State Fair Grounds at Des Moines for that purpose. We shall probably be able to announce the place in course of a month or less.

THE Mission Board receives many very urgent calls. Here is one of them: "Out in one of the frontier Counties of Nebraska lives a brother and his family. His wife and two of the children are members. He writes now that others of his children want to unite with the church. The nearest church of the Brethren is over 200 miles away. In the town where he lives there is no church, and no preaching. Here is an excellent opportunity for the Brethren to occupy first, and build up the cause of our Blessed Master."

"SELECTIONS FROM THE BRETHREN'S HYMNAL" is now printed and ready for filling orders. In addition to the Rudiments of music, it contains 101 selections of music, and the same number of hymns from the Brethren's Hymnal, making a neat pamphlet of sixty pages, covered with stiff manilla. It is designed for use in singing-schools and series of meetings, where a cheap book is desired. Every page in it is just like the corresponding page in the Hymnal, and it is made by using sixty selected plates from the Hymnal. Send for a sample, examine it, and introduce it wherever you have series of meetings and there is a scarcity of Hymnals. Price 10 cents or $1.00 per dozen.

A BROTHER in Texas wishes a copy of "Moore's Life of John Wesley." Any party having a copy to spare will please inform us at once. Bro. Quinter in his work on "Trine Immersion" quotes from "Moore's Life of Wesley," showing that John Wesley preferred to baptize adults by trine immersion. There are those in Texas who deny that there is any such evidence in the book referred to, hence this brother wants the book so as to prove that Bro. Quinter's quotation is correct. We might here add, that not only did both John Wesley and Martin Luther endorse trine immersion, but that there is not now in existence one Christian denomination, and never has been, holding any just claims to antiquity, that did not at one time, or does not now regard trine immersion as valid and sufficient baptism.

SISTER LIZZIE JOHNSON, of Garrison, Iowa, informs us that the Sunday-school at that place raised $11.00 for those unfortunate people in Western Iowa, who lost their homes by the recent flood. The Lord loves that kind of a Sunday-school. It feeds the body as well as the mind and soul.

A LADY was heard to say, "If the Bible was written over again, some things would read differently from what they now read." That would depend upon who would do the writing. If all the Bibles in the world were destroyed—not one left—and holy men, moved by the Spirit, would rewrite it, there would be no change. The Bible is recorded in heaven. Destroy every copy in the world, and there yet remains the record in heaven. That men cannot destroy. If necessary, the Holy Spirit can reproduce the Book from the heavenly record. People who try to change or destroy the Bible never think of the copy on record, and deposited in the everlasting vault of heaven. Holy men of old wrote as they were moved by the Spirit. The Spirit has access to the record, and therefore inspired the men to impart only the Truth. That Truth changeth not.

ON another page of this issue will be found an article by Dr. N. F. Canaday, a little out of the usual line, but it will prove interesting to most of our readers, especially that part relating to the religion of the Indian. Back behind these crude notions held by the Indians may be seen the dim outline of the New Testament religion, which has been handed down from generation to generation until it is just discernible. Perhaps long ages ago the ancestors of these Indians heard the pure Gospel preached. By the word of mouth it was transmitted from father to son, losing a little by degrees, until all the reality has gone, and there are now left only a few rude outlines of the once pure and perfect Gospel first preached to them. Among many of the uncivilized tribes, a few of these Bible outlines are discernible in their religious practice, showing that at some time in the remote past, the pure Gospel may have been preached to their ancestors.

SOME time ago we heard a plain, intelligent sister relate her experience in a well-established congregation. It was on a love-feast occasion, and her first visit to the place, she being a stranger to every one present. At the close of the forenoon service no one came forward to speak to her. She said she never before had such feelings, a stranger in a strange place without one welcome recognition. This prompts us to further state that the best of our congregations need to cultivate a greater degree of courtesy toward strangers, especially members. If strange sisters enter your congregation, approach them and make them feel welcome. Introduce them to others, and let them know that you appreciate their presence. Do not wait until you have spoken to a dozen others, but go to them as soon as convenient after meeting closes. But whose business is it to do this? It is every sister's privilege, but the wives of the officials have it in their power to set for other sisters most excellent examples in this line. They are mothers in Israel and, by virtue of their relation to the flock, can becomingly take the lead in every good work among the sisters. Our sisters will also do well to approach and introduce themselves to any strange ladies who attend our meetings, and thus welcome them to our services. All strangers enjoy and appreciate courtesies of the kind when visiting strange congregations. In many churches there is too much coldness in this respect. What we have said respecting the duty of sisters, may apply to brethren in principle.

THERE are people who seem to be hardly con-ious of the present. They live either in the ast or in the remote future. The present has no harms for them, no special duties, no fields of bor. They look wholly into the future for all of eir enjoyments. We doubt their wisdom. How n there be a future reward without a present reparation! There is work all around us; this rld is full of it. We must work while it is day, d do our dreaming in the evening shade of life. et us make the world at least a little better; be ive to our present duties, and when the end mes rest will be only the sweeter.

ON another page of this issue Bro. S. N. cCann has an article concerning Tertullian's d trine immersion, that our ministers may do ll to clip out and paste in their scrap-book on ptism. And by the way, every student ought to ve a small scrap-book for this purpose. Have e book labelled "Design of Baptism," another he Mode of Baptism," another Lord's Supper l Feet-washing," and so on. By preserving the st of clippings in books in this manner, one can asionally read up on these points, and in that y become well posted, and prepared to treat subjects intelligently in a discourse. We wish merely add, in addition to what Bro. McCann s, that the term "Catholic" church in Ter-lian's day had reference to the general church over the world, and did not refer to the Roman holic church, or the mother of sects. In tullian's time no other baptism, save trine mersion, was used in any part of the Christian ld. And while many errors crept into the rch during these early ages, none of them af-ted the mode of baptism until near the middle of fourth century, at which time single immer-n was invented. For over 300 years Christian tism stood unchallenged amid all the errors corruptions. It is therefore the single and the trine immersion, that is the innovation.

OLD FOLKS' HOME.

HE "Old Folks' Home" for Northern Illinois been located at Mt. Morris by the unanimous sent of the Trustees. The place selected for "Home" is only a few blocks from the Chapel, re ten acres of land has been donated, and acres more will be purchased by the Trustees. luding the ten acres donated, the people of place have already raised $2,000.00. It is the of the Trustees to raise, among the churches Northern Illinois, about $8,000.00 in addition he $2,000.00 already raised here, for the pose of purchasing the additional five acres of needed, erecting and furnishing the necessary dings and putting everything in shape for the ates. When this is accomplished they feel e confident that they will have at command cient bequests and endowments to entirely port the "Home." They have already re-ed some bequests and have others in con-plation.

o it seems that all Northern Illinois needs now o, in order to have the poor well cared for, is to e the necessary funds for erecting and furnish-the buildings, as suggested above. The stees are in full sympathy with the worthy ect, and have already commenced active rations. If possible, they are going to get the dings under roof this season yet, if the money be secured in time. Their aim is to arrange a able place for our worthy poor just as soon as ible, so as to relieve the churches of the ent burden.

We trust that every member in the Northern District of Illinois will seriously consider this matter, and prepare to aid the Trustees in the work. It is certainly a worthy enterprise, and deserves the sympathy and support of all our members and friends. The members will be called upon by solicitors appointed for that purpose. Some of the Trustees have gone to Mexico, Ind., to fully investigate the plans and workings of that institution, in order to profit by the experience of others. The Trustees are active members, and will push the work to completion.

QUERIST'S DEPARTMENT.

SELLING AND BUYING SUNDAY-SCHOOL LITERATURE.

Is it right to sell and buy the Brethren's Quarterlies on Sunday? LYMAN TURNER.

ANS.—That depends upon what the buying and selling is for, and the manner in which it is done. If the object of the selling is to make money, then it is wrong, in our judgment, but if it is for the purpose of helping the Sunday-school along, so as to accommodate those interested in the work, we see nothing wrong about it, provided it is done becomingly. And yet we would say, Do as little business of the kind on Sunday as possible.

PENNY COLLECTION.

Is it right to take up penny collections in Sunday-schools? LYMAN TURNER.

ANS.—Certainly it is, not only right, but in our judgment it is commendable, and is also in harmony with the principle found in 1 Cor. 16: 2 where it says: "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store, as God has prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come." For years we have so practiced in our Sunday-schools, and find that the tendency is to make our children liberal givers for the support of the Lord's work. But in the gathering of these pennies make as little display as possible. It is always best to have the pupils hand their pennies to their teachers while in the class, and the teacher pass them over to the treasurer. Let everything be done decently and in order, so as to give no offense. In fact, everything connected with our religious work ought to be conducted so as to give as little offense as possible.

I AM THE DOOR.

Please explain John 10. 9, "I am the door: by me if any man enter in, he shall be saved, and shall go in and out, and find pasture." HUMPHREY TALHELM.

ANS.—Christ is the door, or the way into the church. By him, or by the way he has laid down, all must seek for salvation. He is the Way, the Truth and the Life. There is nothing connected with the church, as a Scriptural duty, of which Jesus is not the door, the way, the opening. Whatever may be said about faith and repentance, he is in them. He is in baptism; passed through the rite of feet-washing, the Lord's Supper, and the services of the Communion. In all these, and much more, he is the door,—the way. The man who enters into the church and her work, the way the Savior pointed out, shall be saved. Following the directions of Jesus places us in line with salvation and all the attending blessings. It is the opening to all that is true and successful in the Christian life. "Going in and out" does not mean going into the church and out again. It must refer to the general mingling of Christians. A similar expression is found in Acts 1: 21, where Peter speaks of selecting an apostle from among those who were with them while "the Lord Jesus went in and out among us." Not in and out of the church, but in and out of their presence as he associated with them while preaching, teaching and performing miracles. We will understand this better when we take into consideration that the church resembles a flock rather more than a fold. The expression in verse 16, "and there shall be one fold and one shepherd," should be rendered "one flock and one shepherd." This agrees with Luke 12: 32: "Fear not, little flock; for it is your Father's good pleasure to give you the kingdom." Also Acts 20: 58, "Take heed therefore unto yourselves, and to all the flock, over which the Holy Ghost hath made you overseers, and to feed the church of God," and 1 Pet. 5: 2, "Feed the flock of God which is among you," etc. We go out and in as we associate with the saints. Sometimes we are in their company and sometimes not, but if we follow Jesus, the Door, the Way, and the Truth and Life, we shall always find pasture and have spiritual bread to eat, of which the world knows nothing.

AND THE GRAVES WERE OPENED.

Will you please explain Matt. 17: 52, 53? "And the graves were opened; and many bodies of the saints which slept arose, and came out of their graves after his resurrection, and went into the holy city, and appeared unto many." When were the graves opened, when Jesus was on the cross, or when he arose? JOHN WEIMER.

ANS.—By referring to verse 51 it will be noticed that "the vail of the temple was rent in twain from the top to the bottom, and the earth did quake, and the rocks rent." This was at the time when Jesus expired on the cross. It was at that time that the graves were opened by the earthquake. Whether the bodies arose then or after the resurrection of Christ, does not seem clear, but they did not come out of their graves until after the resurrection; that part is clear. But we are inclined to think, that while the tombs were opened at the time Jesus expired on the cross, yet the saints did not arise until immediately after the resurrection. They then went into the city and appeared unto many. Christ was the first fruits of the resurrection, and that is why we think he arose first on this occasion; and then a careful reading of the narrative would seem to favor this idea. These saints were probably Christians who had died before the crucifixion. Their coming from their graves and appearing unto many in the city was further proof of the resurrection, and was also calculated to greatly strengthen the faith of all the saints, who either saw or heard of the event. We have no way of knowing whether they returned to their graves or not. On that point the Bible narrative is absolutely silent.

WITH ME IN PARADISE.

Also Luke 23: 43, "And Jesus said unto him, Verily I say unto thee, To-day shalt thou be with me in paradise." Did their bodies go to Paradise or their spirits? JOHN WEIMER.

By the term "their bodies" we presume the bodies of the resurrected saints are meant. No, neither their spirits nor their bodies could have gone with Jesus to Paradise, for Jesus went to Paradise the very day he died, while the saints did not come out of their graves until after his resurrection. That makes it clear that the saints were not with him in Paradise. The thief, however, went to Paradise that very day, for that is the meaning of the language. By the term "Paradise" heaven is not meant in this case, for Jesus did not ascend to heaven till forty days after the resurrection. Likely the abode of the disembodied spirits is meant. J. H. M.

THE Southern Californian says: "The report of the Brethren's Annual Meeting which was held at Hagerstown, Md., on June 2 to 5, is before us. It is a very valuable document, especially ought it to be to those who did not have the privilege of attending the meeting. We were present at most of the deliberations and can vouch for the correctness of it so far as we can remember. Every brother should send for a copy; it will cost 25 cents."

DR. TALMAGE says many good and instructive things in a very clear manner, but it does seem to us, as well as to some others, that some of his performances are rather a damper even on popular Christianity, to say nothing of the Christianity taught by the meek and lowly Jesus. The following, clipped from the Religious Herald, shows how much of the world is being mixed in with what little religion there is left in the church: "Dr. Talmage has made arrangements whereby his congregation will have nearly as much edification from the musical as from the oratorical part of the service. The organ is to be one of the most striking examples of improvement displayed in the new Tabernacle. It has a Chinese gong, a chime of bells and three drums. Evidently it is the preacher's intention not to allow interest in the Tabernacle to flag. There has always been a question in the minds of people of refinement, whether Talmage did not injure the really impressive character of his utterances by the gymnastics he likes to introduce. Any one who reads his published sermons cannot fail to be convinced of their vitality and earnestness. It seems they require no pyrotechnics nor other adjuncts of vulgar display."

AMONG THE MORMONS.

DR. J. W. BURROUGHS tells the readers of the Christian Cynosure how iniquity abounds among the Mormons in Salt Lake City. Here is his story:—"I have been here, among the Mormons, nearly seven years, endeavoring to lead them out of their terrible delusion, by preaching to them plain Bible truth. But they are a very hard class to reach, on account of their terrible secret, oath-bound creed, which is quite similar to the Masonic obligations, yet, if possible, more terrifying, and the penalty has been more rigidly carried out among the Mormons than among the Masons. The outside world has no idea of the extent of iniquity and evil that has been practiced by the Mormons, and kept covered up under secrecy. I am, after years of close investigation of Mormonism, constrained to say that 'the half has not been told,' nor will it be made known until the judgment. Such awful crimes could be kept secret only by a secret, oath-bound society, which was instituted by the devil himself. 'By their fruits ye shall know them.'"

TAKING THE NEGROES TO AFRICA.

THE Chicago Journal says, "A movement of considerable magnitude is now on foot to arrange for the deportation of the negroes of the Southern States to Liberia. Captain John Murray and Mr. W. B. Lewis, representing Elder, Dempster & Co., of Liverpool, owners of an important line of steamships, have been at Chamberlain's for some days, in consultation with Mr. Benjamin Gatson, the authorized agent of the Liberian Emigration Company. The negotiations between them have been carried to a successful issue, and an agreement has been reached whereby a fleet will be at the disposal of the colored people. Ships will sail at frequent intervals from Southern ports direct to the African coast, and it is believed that the first contingent will be ready to start out inside of two months. One of the company's vessels is now at Baltimore. Captain Murray talks enthusiastically of the good to accrue to the negroes by emigration to Liberia."

This movement has been in contemplation for some years, and has been more or less agitated in the Southern States. A number of the negroes may be induced to return to their native Africa, but nothing like the number will leave the South that is thought by some. The negro is very much attached to the South; they were born and raised there, and some of them are getting along quite well. It is true, that many of them in places are not well treated, but that it is by no means general. Still it will probably be better if at least half of them can be induced to emigrate.

They will carry with them their religion and the American ideas of civilization, as well as many of the industrial habits they have learned from the whites. On this foundation they can build up, and in course of years enjoy better government privileges than they can possibly expect in the United States. While they may receive very fair treatment in this country, they never can expect to enjoy liberties equal to the whites. They are of another distinct race, and so different from the whites that there will always be more or less feeling against them. People who have never lived in the South, among the negroes, can form no correct idea of their true condition and wants at the present time. For our part we see no way of hastily improving their condition. That is something that must be brought about gradually. They have their own schools, churches, Sunday-schools, preachers and society, but depend very largely upon the whites for employment. There is seldom any starvation among them—they can always manage to live, and when they attend to their own business rightly,—get along as well as the whites of the same financial standing. But there are too many of them, hence the advisability of emigration, so as to make room for more white labor, and thus bring the negro labor up to a higher standard.

While slavery was wrong, yet the bringing of the negroes to the United States may possibly prove a blessing to the race. Had they remained in Africa they would still be in the lowest depth of ignorance and superstition, without the first ray of Gospel light, and no conception of civilization whatever. Though here in America they have spent generations in bonds, yet they have gradually improved, religiously and mentally. The lowest of them is far superior to the native African of to-day. They have lived among a civilized and religious people long enough to enable them to have fair ideas of Christianity and civilization. They can now return to Africa as a nation of reformers, carrying with them the Bible, and our ideas of civil and religious liberty, and thereby be the means of elevating and greatly improving their own race. What has been a curse to our land of freedom, may yet prove a blessing to the benighted regions of Africa; hence we look upon the emigration movement with favor, believing that it may eventually open up the way to both civilize and Christianize the darkest spot now on the face of the globe. Echoes from the Highway.

WE have, until now, neglected to mention our pleasant quarterly council, held at Covina, July 4. There was a good attendance of members, and the manifestation of love and union made the occasion one to be desired in preference to joining in with the great crowds that "celebrated" the day in worldly amusement.

A number of letters of membership were read. The time of our love-feast was set for Oct. 17, if I mistake not.

July 18 we attended the quarterly council of the Brethren at Lordsburg. Considerable business was done, but everything passed off, seemingly, with general satisfaction. The relative position the church and school shall occupy towards each other, was considered, and it was unanimously decided that, as the college enterprise is a private business, or, in other words, belonging to individuals, members belonging to the same are to be amenable to the church as all other members. It was decided that church and school be separate, each assuming only what rightly belongs to each, and no more nor less.

Over one dozen certificates of membership were read. Elders John and J. W. Metzger are now located there. The community is in a thriving condition generally.

July 19 Bro. Lamar baptized a young man in the Brethren's pool at Tropico. His name is Ikenberry,—a resident of San Francisco. His father is an elder in the church, living in Indiana. This is another evidence that, if children are brought up in the true faith, they are inclined to seek identification with the people of God, no matter how far they stray away into distant lands and among strangers. This young man was five hundred miles from the Brethren, yet he found a way open to become a member of the body of Christ. It is to be hoped that his brother, who is identified with him in business, will take the same wise course.

Sunday, July 25, in company with other elders, we were present at the anointing of sister Myers, of Covina. Our sister had been under the care of physicians, who seemed to think there was but a faint hope of her recovery. She was anointed in harmony with her faith, and the design of the ordinance, for the healing of her bodily infirmities. As might have been expected, according to the promises of God, she was raised up and went visiting the same week. The Lord cannot only heal, but he can confound the unbelief of physicians.

Death of Elder Samuel Mohler.

ON the morning of July 26, our aged and esteemed elder, Samuel Mohler, fell asleep in Jesus at the age of eighty-three years, two months and seven days.

He was born in Juniata County, Pa., May 18, 1808. He had been a man of remarkable vigor of body and mind. For some months rheumatism had rendered him rather helpless. On the night of April 13, in trying to walk across the room, his strength gave way, and in the fall he broke his left limb. This never properly healed, and, under the influence of his age, his vigor steadily declined.

n 1827 he was joined in marriage to Catharine or. As the result of that union there were thirteen children, of whom nine are yet liv-

We now have meetings every four weeks, with a full house of attentive listeners.

I believe if the proper efforts were put forth, there could be a church built up here. One old man comes every week, to read my MESSENGER. He seems to be much interested in it, and I believe if there would be some tracts distributed here, our doctrine could be brought before the people successfully. We do not have to go far from home to find those who never heard our doctrine.

Let us take new courage, and endeavor to persuade men and women to turn from darkness unto the marvelous light of the Gospel, for no time is to be lost! The Son of Man will come in such an hour as we think not, and, perhaps, may find us idle and not improving the talents which were given us.

Our Trip to Amherst County, Va.

UPON the solicitations of Bro. John A. Cline, of Stuart's Draft, Va., we accepted an invitation to accompany him over the mountain to Eastern Virginia. Bro. B. C. Moomaw, of Buena Vista, furnished us a conveyance to the top of the Blue Ridge. From there we walked down the mountain to a Bro. Garret's, who had us conveyed to the next appointment. At this point we had several meetings and anointed a dear old brother who was very feeble, but desired to avail himself of the benefits of this blessed rite.

From there Bro. Ed. Powel and Bro. Charles Wood furnished us horses to go to a point near Amherst court-house. Bro. Wood accompanied us. He and Bro. Powel are the ministers in this County. At the last place but one brother is living,—E. W. Hudson. He seems to be well established in the faith of the Gospel. Here we found the people very kind and sociable. They seem to be well pleased with the doctrine, as held by the Brethren, and quite an interest was awakened. Two were baptized, and others were seriously impressed. After preaching five sermons we had to leave, much to our regret, on account of other appointments still to be filled.

On our return we had a meeting at Mr. Frank Hudson's,—a son of Bro. E. W. Hudson. He kindly opened his house to the brethren and neighbors, that they might enjoy a season of worship.

From there we went to Bro. Powel's and held a council-meeting, at which everything passed off pleasantly. After two appointments at this place, we went to Bro. Gilbert's, near Oronoco. Here the Brethren have a meeting-house, and at one time had nearly one hundred members. Here we had several meetings, which were fairly well attended. They also have a Sunday-school, conducted by Bro. Gilbert and his interesting family, eight of whom are members. Several others seemed to take active part in conducting the school. Bro. Gilbert has employed a Bro. Taylor for the last two years, to teach school in the church, and also singing-school.

From here we went to an aged sister's house, and held one meeting. Then we started for the home of our worthy brother, John A. Cline. Bro. John is a faithful worker. He has a very large territory in his care, and part of it is very rough. But few Brethren, comparatively, can realize what it is to cultivate such a field. In places the roads are so steep and rough that you have to go on foot. It would be a good lesson to many of our Western Brethren, to take a trip over the roads that Bro. John has to travel. Bro. Cline has three other helpers in the work, but most of the burden is resting upon him, as he has the eldership. He has given up farming and consecrated himself fully to the work. He is ably assisted in the ministry by his estimable wife, who patiently attends to home affairs.

Bro. Cline expects, in less than two weeks, to start over the same ground. This is right. The seed sown should be cultivated. I think there is a good prospect to build up a church near Amherst court-house. The country, from there on to Lynchburg, is not near so hilly, and the soil is capable of being improved and brought up to a fair state of productiveness, if in the hands of good farmers. Land is cheap,—selling from $8 to $15 per acre. We tender our best thanks to all the dear friends whose hospitality we enjoyed.

WE have great reason to rejoice. June 21, two were baptized; July 5, four more; on the 19th thirteen more were buried with Christ in baptism. To-day, after being richly entertained at our thanksgiving meeting by elders Daniel Hays, Benjamin Miller, Frederick Wampler, and Christian Wine, there were two more baptized.

These were all young, and we hope they will make strong pillars in the church. Nearly all were Sunday-school scholars. This is very encouraging to the Sunday-school workers. Our Sunday-schools (of which there are three in this congregation) are in good working order. We are anxiously waiting to hear from Bro. D. L. Miller through the MESSENGER. J. M. ZIGLER.

A Visit to York, Pa.

I ARRIVED at the above-named place on the afternoon of July 25. Announcement had been made for preaching on the evening of that day, and Sunday morning and evening. Saturday evening I met an attentive congregation. On Sunday, at 10 A. M., Bro J. C. Lahman, of Illinois, preached to a large and attentive congregation. My associations with Bro. Lahman were pleasant, and we were sorry that we could not be in his company longer. At 5: 30 P. M., we convened for Sunday-school, and at 7: 30 for preaching.

The Brethren have a large church-house in the city and a very interesting Sunday-school. Bro. Alex. Brodbeck is their Superintendent. Bro. Jacob Shamberger, the elder of the congregation, was present with us. He is working faithfully to build up the cause at this place. Bro. Shamberger is well advanced in years, but active and ready for every good work. Bro. Jacob Aldinger, also a minister, resides near the City, and takes an active part in church and Sunday-school work. The brethren and sisters of York and vicinity are very hospitable, and are anxious to have ministering brethren stop and preach for them. May God bless the dear ones of York and keep them from the evil that surrounds them. ALBERT HOLLINGER.

Some Experiences of a Soul in Seeking Light.

[THE following letter is from an earnest seeker after the Truth. She lives far out in the West—a lonely life so to speak—with nothing but books and papers for her companion in the faith. It is our prayer that some earnest minister may pass that way and be the means of helping her to comply with her further duty. We are indebted to Bro. Jesse Crosswhite for this communication, he having written her many letters to enlighten her more fully in the Gospel. She modestly requests that we withhold her name. We do so for the present.—ED.]

When but a little child, my gentle mother taught me that God, who made all things, is good, and wants us to be good, and will punish us if we are bad. When but eight years of age, I entertained the idea that ignorance (unbelief) would excuse disobedience, and that I could be saved whether good or bad. When nine years old I heard a sermon on "Belief," which dispelled this sinful idea. I made up my mind to believe with all my heart and try to please the Good Lord. At the age of ten, it was my fortune to attend a protracted meeting held by a minister of the denomination called Disciples. There I learned the lesson of repentance, and the fact that even little children might come to Jesus, "that Blessed Savior," and be his disciples. I repented, believed and longed to obey. I was baptized (by single immersion) but still I was unhappy. I was dissatisfied with my baptism, and I craved the gift of the Holy Spirit. As I learned more of the world, especially of that denomination with whom my lot was cast, I became more and more dissatisfied. I learned how hollow, comfortless and vain, are the many fashionable methods of dress, amusement, entertainment, etc. I saw the sinful methods of obtaining money, employed by many denominations. I lived mostly amongst Methodists, Baptists, Catholics and infidels. Whenever opportunity was offered, I tried to present the Truth to my companions, as I understood it, especially did I try to lead little children to Christ.

At the age of twenty I found myself a wife and mother in a lonely, isolated region, with no neighbors of any kind, no opportunities of meeting with Christian people of any denomination, surrounded by a few scattering, uncultured, unlearned infidels, with only my correspondence for sympathy, and only reading-material for company. I could not meet with my former companions, who were church members, but looked long and vainly for those who promised to visit me.

Years rolled by. None came. Sick at heart and in prison, I almost despaired of ever finding true religion on this earth. In my loneliness and sorrow I studied God's Word; it was my only source of consolation. I learned more of my own imperfection, and of the worldliness of the various denominations of Christians whom I knew. How my lonely soul did hunger and thirst after righteousness, and how my spirit craved Christian sympathy and companionship! In my earnest longing I sometimes penned an article for publication in some popular paper, denouncing the existing frivolous, unchristian customs, and pleading for a better way. To one of these, on the subject of "Dress," I dared to sign my name and invite replies. It resulted in a long, pleasant profitable correspondence with one dear sister, who claimed to be a Dunkard, and a most profitable correspondence also with a good old minister of that denomination, who kindly, patiently and faithfully instructed me in all the doctrines taught by that church, writing long letters on each subject of importance, and sending me some tracts which I carefully and gladly read; then sent them to others.

Occasionally I read articles in certain denominational papers, condemning the sacred rite of feet-washing, trine immersion, the laying on of hands, anointing the sick with oil, etc., calling the Brethren, who did such things, "cranks." Such unkind and disrespectful references to sacred ordinances which our Blessed Savior and his apostles had both observed and taught, always grieved me, and I accepted the title of crank, when applied to myself, as an appellation, indicating a part of machinery far more useful than the ornamental gilt or varnish.

After examining all the doctrines of the Brethren's belief, I am convinced that there is indeed an humble, faithful, obedient class of believers on the earth, who do truly follow Jesus in humble submission and love, taking up the cross, and doing all that he has commanded. I am very glad to believe that such is not merely a vague wish, but a blessed reality. While I have never yet met any of the "Brethren" face to face, I expect to, in God's own good time. How inexpressibly happy will I be to find them as faithful as their little tracts tell me they are, and to praise, worship and obey our dear Savior with his loved ones!

From the Colorado River Indian Agency.

HAVING been sent here by the Government to take charge of this Indian Agency in the capacity of physician and surgeon, I thought perhaps a few lines from me occasionally, in regard to this country, the Indians, and their habits and customs, would interest some of your readers.

The Colorado River is large enough for steam navigation from Uma to Fort Mo-ha-va, about three hundred miles, but as there are no white people living along the River, there is but little business; consequently the steamboat makes a trip about every two months.

The Agency is situated about one hundred miles south of "The Needles," Colo., and about two hundred miles north of Uma, Arizona, on the east side of the River. From the Needles to the Agency, the River runs through desolate-looking, rocky canyons, nearly the entire distance. At the Agency the valley broadens, and there are about forty thousand acres of fine bottom land that would be be very fertile and produce almost anything, if irrigated, but it will produce nothing but mosquite beans without irrigation.

The Government at one time spent a large amount of money putting in an irrigating ditch, but, on account of some improper management, it was a failure. Our present agent, Col. George Allen, thinks that, with a small amount of money, he can make the ditch a success yet. Col. Allen has had an extensive experience with the Apaches and other Indians, and thoroughly understands the wants of this country. The Government should immediately place the means in his hands to complete the system of irrigation, so as to give the Indians employment and the means of acquiring a better subsistence, as they are almost upon the verge of starvation a great deal of the time.

There is, perhaps, no tribe of Indians that are more peaceable, honest, and industrious, when they can get work to do, than the Mo-ha-ves, as the Government does not issue any rations to them, except to feed and clothe the school-children during nine months in the year.

There are, perhaps, very few places in the United States that are hotter than the Colorado River Valley. For four months in the year the thermometer ranges from 100 to 135 in the shade. Since I have been here it has ranged from 106 to 119; averaged about 110 in middle of the day.

There are about a dozen Government employes here. They are refined and cultured people, and I find them very clever and glad to see any one come. Our neighbors live one hundred miles away and do not come often.

We are a small band of "Robinson Crusoes," almost entirely isolated from the outside world. It is one hundred miles north or east, and two hundred miles south to the nearest white settlement, excepting a few scattering miners, and it takes four days to reach the railroad, except when the boat happens to come along. Not many of our brethren or sisters would desire to come here to live except those of an adventurous or romantic turn of mind. To those it would be a great pleasure, for a while at least.

The religious belief of the Mo-ha-va Indians is very peculiar and interesting, and I will relate as near as I have been able to get it.

They believe that there is a God, they call Mo-we-lia who was the maker of all things, and that he controls the movement of the sun, moon and stars, and sends the rains. They believe that God had a Son called Mas-tam-ho, who lived and died like man, and that he is therefore king of the departed spirits of all of the human family. They believe that Mat-o-we-lia controls the moon, stars, and rain, while Mas-tam-ho has control of affairs in their heaven which they believe is a white mountain. They believe that a good Indian will live inside of that mountain where it is always summer, and where there are large kettles always boiling with plenty of food in them. They believe that the wicked, or bad Indian will have to live on the top of the mountain where it is cold and desolate, with cactus and rattlesnakes, and where they can look down upon their good brethren where it is summer and plenty to eat, but cannot get down to them.

As soon as any of their number die, they hurriedly gather wood and burn the body, together with all of the valuable property belonging to them, believing that their spirit and their property will go, with the smoke, to the white mountain.

They usually wear their hair long, but on special occasions the near relatives cut their hair level with the shoulders or shorter, and burn with the deceased as a token of mourning. They immediately move out of the house that the patient dies in, burn the house and build a new one.

They believe that if any of their people die where they cannot be cremated, they will, if they are good, turn to an owl. If they are bad they will turn to a rat, but should they repent in the four days, they will turn to an owl. When the owl is killed the spirit goes to the white mountain.

The hoot of an owl frightens the children badly. They believe that there was an ark at the flood, and that the ark rested upon the white mountain. Col. Allen has issued an order prohibiting the burning of horses and articles of considerable value. He allows them to burn their houses and small articles.

With the education that the Government is giving these children, with religious services in the schools, a new Gospel light may yet dawn upon the minds of this ignorant, but well-meaning race of Indians in the future.

Notice to the Local Churches of North-Eastern Ohio.

I WISH to call the attention of the elders and solicitors of the above-named churches to the fact that the time for our District Meeting will soon be here again. Only a few of the churches have responded to the missionary call in the way of sending in their donations. I hope and trust that every church will see to this matter at once, and send in her donations soon, so that I may have time to make out my report. Do not wait until the day of the meeting.

I would have given notice of this sooner, but for several reasons have delayed. I thought that the churches had all received Minutes of District Meeting, and read them, thus knowing what is required of each church for the missionary work. Then, too, I thought that while the churches all did nobly for the destitute in the West, by this time all are again ready to do their duty toward the grand cause of saving the souls of those who were aided by us last winter.

Now, brethren and sisters of North-eastern Ohio, please make a strong effort all along the line! Give every brother and sister a chance to do something toward the saving of the children of men. Remember, I solicit and receive all donations for General Missions and Home Missions, and also for Book and Tract Work. Let us see what we can do during the next two months in the way of raising funds to carry on the work.

To my brethren in the ministry let me say: "There is room all over this broad land of ours for work. All around our local churches there are many who have not heard the glad tidings of the Gospel. The time may be short to do all the work the Lord wants us to do." I appeal to every elder, minister and lay-member, to come to the front, that we, as a church, may do our duty!

SAMUEL SPRANKEL.

Old Folks' Home.

THE Trustees of the Aged Persons, Infirm and Orphans' Home of the State of Kansas, met, according to previous appointment, at the Pleasant View church, Reno Co., and, after devotional exercises, proceeded with business.

After determining the size and kind of the house needed, and the probable cost, also the amount of available means in the treasury, we discovered we were entirely too short of funds, to justify us in building, without contracting debts. That we will not and dare not do.

In view of the above fact, we appointed brethren J. Wise and I. H. Crist for the North-eastern District; brethren I. H. Neher and C. W. Yearout for the South-eastern District; Bro. S. L. Myers for the North-western District; and Bro. E. Eby for the South-western District of Kansas, as solicitors. We hope they will prosecute the work with a zeal, worthy so noble a cause, so that, by Jan. 1, 1892, enough will be reported to encourage us to get the material on the ground, dig the well, etc., before the farmers get to their work on the fields.

The Lord has put it into the hearts of his people in Kansas to furnish a good home for those of his children and orphan children who need a home, and he has blessed the entire State with a reasonably good crop of everything. Now, if we withhold the needed means, we must not complain if he withholds the rain next year, and we suffer want again, more or less. We do not ask anything that would be unreasonable. For the present we could get along with the small sum of one dollar, average, to the member, in Kansas. We should have,—and hope we will,—get double that amount, reported by January, or sent to Bro. A. F. Miller, Booth, Reno Co., Kans., on or before Feb. 15, 1892. All moneys sent to him, as the Treasurer of the Home, will be reported and receipted for, and applied to the best advantage, according to our judgment. Economy, comfort and durability is our motto.

A few facts and we are done.

1. The Home is the work of the church and not of the Trustees, or a few individuals. The entire State through her District Meeting and delegates has inaugurated it, as the best method of keeping the poor, and orphan children, both as to comfort and economy.

2. The Scriptures plainly require us to care for our poor, and as many poor, homeless children as we can. The children of this world do it, and why should not Christians do much more?

3. It is the work of the Lord, hence a good reward can be expected for the liberal helper in this work, but a fearful responsibility will rest on those who can, and do not. Dear brethren and sisters, you may be asked to help some causes not so good as "The Old Folks' Home."

Notes from Our Correspondents.

"As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

PLEASANT SERVICES.—On Saturday, August 1, the Spring Run church, Mifflin Co., Pa., had a "Harvest Meeting," commencing at 10 A. M. We had a forenoon and afternoon sermon and also a Sunday-school meeting. Such meetings are productive of good.—Emma Bollinger, McVeytown, Pa., Aug. 7.

TWO ADDED BY BAPTISM.—July 19, the Berkeley church, W. Va., received two more by baptism. They are heads of families, and, we hope, will make faithful members. There were nearly two hundred persons at the water to witness the baptism. Others, we think, will unite with us soon. —John Brindle, Martinsburg, W. Va., Aug. 4.

PLEASANT COUNCIL.—The Middle Fork church, Clinton Co., Ind., held her quarterly church council Aug. 4. Two were received by letter. We appointed a harvest meeting for Aug. 20, and also decided to have a Communion meeting this fall, for which the date will be fixed in a short time. There will be a series of meetings held at three different points in this congregation during the coming fall and winter. Brethren L. W. Teeter, David Neff and G. L. Studebaker are expected to conduct the meetings. One dear sister was reclaimed in this church a short time ago.—John E. Metzger, Edna Mills, Ind., Aug. 5.

FOUR BAPTIZED.—The members of the Indian Creek church, Pa., have just enjoyed some refreshing meetings. Bro. D. H. Walker, from Somerset County, Pa., came to the County Line meeting on the evening of May 22, to conduct a series of meetings, and continue over two Sundays. He preached the Word with great power, to large audiences and with the best of order. Four persons came out on the Lord's side and were baptized; we hope to walk in newness of life. July 24, Bro. Walker preached the funeral discourse of sister Lydia Miller, who had died May 12 at the age of seventy-seven years. Sister Miller was a faithful member, and died in the hope of everlasting life.—D. D. Horner, Jones' Mill, Pa.

CORRECTION.—In a late number of the MESSENGER a communication appeared from this place. It should have been stated that Bro. Moses Dierdorff is to commence a series of meetings Sept. 15.—Ellen Nichols, Rockton, Ia., July 29.

ON THE WAY.—After preaching at Meriden, Kans., Aug. 3, the writer, in company with a number of brethren and sisters came down to Ozawkie where a large congregation was awaiting our arrival, who gathered with us at the river, where our dear sister, the wife of J. W. Mosier was buried in baptism. May the Lord help her to walk in new life.—J. A. Root.

TO THE CHURCHES OF NORTH-WESTERN KANSAS AND COLORADO.—There is a demand upon an empty treasury for an amount of nearly ten dollars. Housekeepers of the churches of the District will please see to it that their Treasurer remits to the District Treasurer at his earliest convenience.—Philip Landis, Treas., North-western Kansas and Colorado.

QUARTERLY COUNCIL.—On Saturday, Aug. 1, we held our quarterly council. Our elder, M. J. McClure, was present. One of our deacons, owing to the sickness of his wife, could not be present. Four were received at this meeting by letter. Two delegates were elected to District Meeting. The business, upon the whole, passed off satisfactorily. The church was well represented, which is encouraging. The outlook for the future is certainly encouraging.—Michael Flory, Girard, Ill., Aug. 3.

WHO WILL SECOND THE MOTION?—With interest I read the article of Bro. Sharp in GOSPEL MESSENGER of Aug. 4, in which he moves that a donation be raised, to send the Bread of Life to those whose temporal needs were so nobly administered to by our Brotherhood. Yes, Bro. Sharp, we second your motion, and may the love of God so warm our hearts until thousands of our brethren and sisters will be ready to respond with seconds, not only on paper, but with means and prayers going together, and the Lord will give us a rich harvest. J. A. Root.

PERSEVERING IN THE WORK OF THE LORD.—Notwithstanding the many discouragements we have to contend with, our meetings are still going on. The little Sunday-school which was organized in May, with eleven scholars, has almost doubled in number and we hope, when the oppressive season is passed, and autumn comes again, that our meetings will gain in interest and numbers as they did last year. While some of the churches are not doing what we think they ought and would like to do, yet it is cheering to our very soul to read in the MESSENGER of the great work that is being accomplished in some places. May it all prove a blessing to fallen humanity. The MESSENGER is full of good instruction. I peruse it, in connection with the Word of God, with much pleasure.—Mary B. Stitely, Dayton, Ohio, Aug. 3.

IN THE MISSION FIELD.—God is blessing the Louisiana mission. This afternoon we met at the pleasant home of Bro. Suter and, after devotional services, we went a short distance and baptized three willing converts. We also have a letter from a young man, from Arcadia Parish, who expects to be received at our meeting in Jennings on the second Sunday. By that time we expect brother and sister Gish with us. I recently made a trip north, about fifteen miles from here, and not only distributed tracts, but also looked up points to hold some series of meetings. Last Sunday I preached two sermons in the school-house in, what is known as, the China neighborhood, to good congregations. As soon as we are through with our meetings here, I expect to commence the work there. To-morrow I go to Evangeline, and, if an effectual door opens, I expect to remain till the meeting at Jennings.—S. A. Honberger, Esterly, La., July 31.

Literary Notes.

The Christian Ministry: Its Origin, Constitution, Nature and Work. A Contribution to Pastoral Theology. By William Lefroy, D. D.; Cloth, 8vo, 566 pp; $3.00. Funk & Wagnalls, New York.

This is the work of a ripe scholar, an able controversialist, and a Christian theologian. It defines the church of Christ as supernatural in its origin, and deals with the nature, constitution, and work of the Christian Ministry as an organization of the Divine Master, asserting that the apostles had a vivid consciousness of such organization, and contending that the churches of the Apostolic Age were by no means structureless, but vital organisms, in which bishops, presbyters, deacons exercised their several, clearly defined functions. The Constitution of the Ministry, itinerant and local, is elaborated with considerable detail In the treatment of the moral sphere of ministerial work, the grand scheme of redemption is held up as the essential corrective of sin and death, and the power of the Gospel, to raise man from his fallen condition, is emphatically asserted.

The work is divided into lectures, in which form they were primarily delivered before the University of Dublin, and it is not too much to say that the style is as eloquent as the argument is vigorous to show that "the kingdom of Christ has no sacerdotal system." As a whole the work may be characterized as perhaps the most important contribution to the literature bearing upon this special subject.

An Expert Opinion.

THE "Medical and Surgical Journal" for March 1891, says editorially:

"This pretty little city of Idaho Springs, Colorado, is situated in a beautiful park about 37 miles from Denver, and is about 7,500 feet above sea level. It is thrifty, prosperous, and has become noted for its hot and cold mineral springs, which contain medicinal properties of extraordinary value. Idaho Springs as a health resort cannot be excelled this side of the world-renowned Carlsbad Springs of Germany, whose waters and the waters found at Idaho Springs bear almost an identical chemical analysis.

"In the early stages of consumption these waters, combined with the invigorating air of this beautiful climate, are almost a specific. We take pleasure in recommending these waters to all suffering from coughs and catarrhal affections. It is the best place to go to for the cure of phthisis. Those of our colleagues who have been sending their patients to this grand health resort all join in praising the satisfactory results received from the invigorating waters and climate. We would therefore urge physicians to advise their patients, threatened with consumption, not to procrastinate, but to try, before it is too late, the salutary effects of the waters of Idaho Springs. The Union Pacific are making special efforts to carry the public to and from this famous resort, with all the modern comfort and ease which the tourist seeking health and pleasure can desire." 22–34.

Our Bible Department

This Department received such financial aid in the last year as to give it greater permanency It is a fixed part of our school work Besides the endowment, a brother and sister lately sent us $350 CASH to be invested in books for that department. From the estate of another sister, who died last March, we receive as a "Bible Library Fund," the interest of which is annually to be invested in books for the Bible Department. These, together with the religious literature in the Cassel Library, afford excellent helps to Bible students. We are glad to learn that many brethren and sisters began to see that the most lasting monument they can erect, and one that will do the most good, is to set apart a portion of what the Lord has given them to build in trust. It must not necessarily be a large sum if given as the Lord directs WRITE US and we will explain fully

In establishing this institution of learning, one of the objects was that our Brethren and their children could have a place where they could go to be educated, and at the same time be surrounded by church influences that would be desirable and safe. Another object was that we might have a Bible course adapted to the wants of our children, Sunday-school workers, and ministers to aid them in getting a practical and saving knowledge of the Bible. This we try to give in our Bible Department, and most heartily invite all who may wish such knowledge,—and who does not?—to come and take this course No one is prepared to do battle with the world without a thorough knowledge of the Bible.

The Commercial Department.

We name this department last, not because we think it least important, but because it has been added last. START EARLY.

the Middle and Western States, as a rule, nonth of August does not have much rep- on as a pleasure month. It is generally dry ot. This August, however, seems to be an tion to the general rule, as, so far, we have having some of the finest weather of the This is especially true of the mornings. by the way, many people lose the best part day in sleeping away these pleasant morn- ours, and seeing the day only after the hot of the sun have kissed away the morning and heated the fresh and invigorating air ives so much real comfort to those who are g to enjoy it.

re is something about the early morning that few can afford to miss, and yet there is ld of people who have never learned their . Those who make the early start in the nd the most satisfactory closing. And so it ife. Those who make the good start when . have great advantages over those who the strength of their manhood in idleness. hard thing to make life a success after a best days are wasted. To do it re- double and triple the effort and determina- tion, and even then there is so much less time to enjoy it.

In the strength of manhood there are not only greater possibilities, but then it is that in labor real enjoyment is found, so that those who thus labor receive a present as well as a future reward. All the advantages for both success and enjoyment are in the early starting. There are thousands in the world who have attained to what they call success after old age has unfitted them for either making it useful or enjoyable. To them it is a victory won after the crown has been lost.

Reader, did you ever battle with the very common affliction called dyspepsia? If not,—and we hope you have not,—you have experienced times when the most dainty and palatable food seemed but mockery to you. The appetite, the desire for it, was not there, and the more was offered you the less you cared for it. Things are good to us only as we have receptivity for using and enjoying them. Hence the importance of having them both at the same time.

And what is true in regard to things of this life, is also true as to our religion. The souls that start out in the religion of Jesus early in life, have the advantage of the refreshing dews of grace that fall in the early morning of Christian experience. Those who, early in life, seek the Lord, have the promise of finding. Those who find earliest can use longest and enjoy most. There is such a thing as a man becoming set in his ways,—in his habits of life. And those who become set in sin, even if they do turn, have a terrible struggle to get away from these settings,—bad habits and dangerous foes to a successful Christian life. We know of men to-day in the church who possess rare gifts for doing good work for the Master, but who are such slaves to habits, formed while young, that their Christian lives are most sadly marred.

The hope of making our religious lives a success when age comes, is a terrible delusion. While it is a great gain to commence the religious life at any time, every day spent in the sleep of sin is an irretrievable loss. Every day, every hour, spent in the service of Jesus is great gain, and if we lose this great gain we must necessarily sustain a corresponding loss. Then, the lesson to learn is, "Start early!"

A COUNTRY DRIVE.

FEELING somewhat unwell for the last several weeks, we concluded on last Saturday, with family and sister Anna Ross, to take a drive out into the country. The afternoon was pleasant, and the drive was delightful. After a continued ride of about twelve miles,—no great distance over a level road, but rather long when the way is over a dozen or more hills,—we drew reins at our oldest brother's home, where we were at home indeed, and a place we much enjoyed after the ride.

A drive through or over the hills of Pennsylvania this year, and at this season, presents a wonderful display of the goodness of our Heavenly Father. The fruit crop is abundant and beautiful beyond description. The apple, pear, peach and plum trees are laden with the fullest crop of fruit we ever saw. Every grapevine hangs full of great clusters of grapes, that will, in their season, make glad the hearts of the people, not through the intoxication of fermented wines, but in using them pure and fresh, just as God made them.

In beholding this fulness of abundance, we were made to feel: "O, that men would praise God for his goodness." The promise to Israel was that, at the end of their journey, they should enter a land that flowed with milk and honey. This, though slightly figurative, was largely literally true.

As they were down in Egypt mixing mortar and carrying brick, this lovely picture was held out to them as an inducement to leave their condition of bondage and go where they could enjoy freedom and abundance. As we read this promise we are made to wonder at the inducements thus held out, and feel that happy, indeed, must this people have been. But how is it with us? Is not God doing more for us than he promised to Israel? We, too, have the milk and honey, with a thousand and more other good things for life's enjoyments, including a time of national peace and freedom from invading foes. Then, too, we have religious freedom, with all its attendant blessings, so that it may truly be said that the Lord is blessing us above any other nation. Does all this make us contented, happy and thankful? It surely should, but, sad to know, it does not. No, we do not accept with appreciative hearts the gifts, so lavishly showered upon us from our indulgent Father's ever-open hands.

After a restful night, Sunday morning, in all its sacred quiet, dawned upon us, and, repairing to the Bethel church, we spent an hour in Sunday-school. The school, though not large, manifested a degree of earnestness that was commendable, and made it interesting. Following this, we had preaching service. And as it is the place where we started out in life's work, after our marriage, many pleasant scenes crowded in upon us. Here dwell a number of our old friends, with whom we associated and labored in days that are gone, and we felt that our attachments have not weakened during the years that have intervened. Some have passed over, but it is a consoling thought, that they have only gone before—we are following after, and the meeting may not be far distant. Yes, only "over there," and then we shall strike glad hands for aye.

After church we returned to our brother's where we spent a pleasant season with a number of the other members of our family, and in the evening drove home again, feeling much benefited by our country drive.

ESSAYS

Study to show thyself approved unto God; a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth."

THE BEAUTIFUL FLOWERS.

BY J. S. MOHLER.

THE flowers, the flowers, the beautiful flowers:
A gift from our Heavenly Father, that's ours,
What pleasant companions they are to the throng,
Cheering all, with their smiles, as we journey along.
They come to us fresh, from the heavenly bowers,
And speak of a country that is better than ours,
Where flowers ne'er fade, neither wither, nor die.
And frosts of the winter, to them, ne'er comes nigh.

Those beautiful flowers are painted above,
By hands of the Lord, and guided by love.
No hand that is human, such beauty can show,
That speaks to the hearts of poor mortals below.
When darkness and tempests would over us roll,
And thorns in our pathway are piercing the soul,
They speak to the heart in such beautiful love,
And beckon us look to the world that's above.

How charming are flowers, to those that must lie
On beds of affliction, as long days go by,
Their fragrance so sweet, that they quicken desire,
To forget things of earth, unto God draw still nigher.
Their beauty, sweet odor, and innocent face,
Take captive our heart, by their heavenly grace,
We lay on their bosom the sweet-blooming rose,
When our loved ones are sleeping in death's long repose.
The most fitting tribute, we can them bestow,
Close companions; together, they silently go.
And after the sleeper is lovingly laid
In the bed, that for him has been tenderly made:
Its pillowed-mound, there, in beauty complete,
In its silent bed, "plants," are coming to greet,—
To grow, keep alive in mem'ry, and heart
Our love, veneration, for those who depart;
They tenderly grow, and in beauty they bloom
In morning, and evening, at midnight, and noon;
Watching faithfully, always with tenderest care,
While guarding the trust, that, beneath them lies there.
And oft are found weeping at morn's early hour,
As the dews gently fall, or the clouds yield the showers;
Great tears, o'er their crimsoned cheeks silently roll,
Long after the tears of the mourners are told,
And their dead in the graves, where they passively lie,
Are forgotten, or always are lightly passed by.
The flowers are welcome companions to all,
The rich and poor, the great and the small.

The wife that is faithful in duty and care,
How oft' she gets weary with burdens she bears,
While resting a moment her strength to regain,
She turns to her flowers, some comfort t'obtain;
Her heart with emotion is lifted on high,
To that land where the flowers never wither nor die.
In cheer she arises, her duties resumes,
Refreshed by the flowers, her sweetest perfume.

The Christian that's aged, been long on the way,
Is cheered by the flowers, their glorious array
Inspiring his heart with a longing desire,
For wings of a dove, flying higher and higher.

The flowers are emblems to husband and wife,
In blending their colors; e'en so of our life,
In unity, peace, and love may be one,
While they journey together, to heaven's bright home.

God placed such value on flowers below,
That he caused them always, and in all lands to grow,
So we might all behold them wherever we go;
From the tropical sun to the polar snow,
Away on the mountain, and down its steep side
The flowers are blooming. In crevices hide,
Down in the deep valley, that's shaded below,
And out by the wayside, their beauty they show,
Far out on the wild and desolate plains,
Only seen by the beasts, the snows, and the rains,
The flowers are blooming and fading away,
While seasons are passing in regular sway.
In gardens, and houses, the cosiest place
Is given to flowers with excellent grace.
Even down at the brink, where the clear river flows,
Passing on to the ocean of water below,
There the flowers are blooming, and gracefully bow,
And are kissing the waves in their beautiful flow.

The flowers to us are so lovingly dear,
We grant them a place on our table, so near,
That while we partake of earth's bounteous good,
Our eyes also feast on this beautiful food.
And were there no flowers on earth, here to bloom,
All nature be barren, in deadness and gloom,
With nothing around us our hearts to inspire,
Or kindle our souls with an holy desire.
The flowers are links, in a beautiful chain,
That reaches from heaven, to earth's rude domain.
They tell of their Maker, his glory unfold
A glimpse of the "Far-away-home" of the soul.

Morrill, Kans.

WHO WILL BE HERE DURING THE MILLENNIUM?

BY I. C. RENNER.

THAT there will be a millennium for a certain class of persons, is proved by Holy Writ beyond controversy. The prophets prophesied of it, and the apostles pointed to it; John, the Revelator, saw it and wrote of it, yet, in the face of all this, we find that some of our modern professors of religion, when the minister refers to the Millennium, cry out and say that the Millennium idea is becoming absurd.

The truth is, that the Millennium is comparatively as important to a certain class now, as John's baptism was to some a hundred years before he came baptizing. Hence, having the assurance that there will be a millennial period for some class, we propose to enter into an exposition of the matter, and show who the people are that will enjoy the millennial rest; and we will also try to show God's divine purpose in it. It is a very deep and important subject, full of interest to the Christian.

Historically, the population of the earth, from Adam down, is divided into seven periods; the first was the Age of Violence, from Cain to the flood; the second age was from the flood to Abraham, known as the Transition Age; the fourteen generations from Abraham to David form the Dispensatory Age; from David to the carrying away into Babylon, fourteen generations, is the Prospective Age; from the carrying away to Babylon to Christ is the Prophetic Age; from Christ to the Millennium is the Probatory Age, or Dispensation of Grace, for preparation for what is to follow; and the millennial age is to be a peaceful, preparatory age, with rest, as we propose to show.

Having now set the seven ages before you, we proceed, first to dispose of the various classes of persons that have dominion over the earth, all descending from one parent, yet divided into great divisions, of which we might name the Antediluvians, the Gentiles, who were without God or hope in the world, and the Jews, God's chosen people. This embraces the whole race of humanity.

As a Savior was promised to all in the beginning, as God is just and true, always keeping his promises, and as many died long before the Savior came, we must try to find out whether the promise has been fulfilled to all. God compels no one; he lays the means before every one, to be accepted or rejected; if rejected, God is not responsible any further. The question then arises, Did God fulfill his promise to the Antediluvians and to all the tribes down to Christ, to those who died before he came? Also, How will he fulfill his promise to the Israelites who died prior to the coming of the Christ? Here are two questions, and we will now endeavor to answer them separately.

The promise was the preaching of the Gospel of the Son of God. All who heard it and accepted it, obtained the promise of eternal life. But, you ask, How could the dead hear the Gospel? Turn to John 5: 25: "Verily, verily, I say unto you, The hour is coming, and now is, when the dead shall hear the voice of the Son of God: and they that hear shall live." This Jesus spoke just before he was crucified, for he knew that he was soon going to preach to the dead, and all those who would hear him should live. How? Why, live eternally. Now turn to 1 Pet. 3: 18, 19. "For Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God, being put to death in the flesh, but quickened by the Spirit: by which also he went and preached unto the spirits in prison." As we are in the flesh, he preached to us in the flesh; and as spirits are in the spirit, he went in the spirit to preach to them. Hence they could live in the spirit, and be judged according to men in the flesh. See 1 Pet. 4: 6. Here the dead are brought on a level with the living, to receive the promise of the Savior, given at the fall of Adam: "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." Hence it is not this class that the Millennium is for.

Now we will consider Israel, which had the promise of being God's people, and see if we can find some way by which they can obtain the promise. All Israel that died before Christ's ministry, could hear his preaching while in the spirit. But right here you ask, Were all of God's chosen people in prison,—Adam, Noah, Abraham, etc.? No, we do not think so; for we read in Ps. 23: 4, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil." We believe the righteous sat in the region, or valley of the shadow of death, and that when Jesus was crucified, he, in the spirit, walked through the valley of the shadow of death, and enlightened them. To prove this view of it, we will turn to Matt. 4: 16. Mark the reading. "The people which sat in darkness saw great light; [thus far this verse pertains to the people in the flesh] and to them which sat in the region and shadow of death light is sprung up." This part of the verse pertains to the spirits who sat in the valley of death.

We have reason to believe that all the dead, from Adam to Christ, heard the Gospel preached by the Son of God. But, as the apostle said, "All have heard, but all have not obeyed," just so in the spirit world. Perhaps all did not hear him to receive his word, like some men in the flesh; hence they are reserved for the judgment, as the apostle said, 1 Tim. 5: 24, "Some men's sins are open beforehand, going before to judgment; and some men they follow after." Hence we have Scriptural reason to believe that all who died prior to Christ had the Gospel preached to them that they might live unto God in the Spirit, and are not to reign in the millennial age.

But now how about those since Christ? In this period we shall most likely find those who are to live during the Millennium. Let us see who they are. The Gospel was preached to all by Christ and his apostles. See Rom. 10: 18. "Their words went unto the ends of the earth." Col. 1: 23 says: "The Gospel which . . . was preached to every creature which is under heaven." All have heard, for the Gospel has ever been spreading; but all have not obeyed. It is certain that those who do obey the Gospel are a separate people who have purified their souls by obeying the truth; hence they are Christ's and he promised: "Where I am there ye may be also." They, then, being in Christ, their lives being hid in him, die in him; the apostle declares, 1 Thess. 4: 16, that the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we that are alive shall be caught up, ever to be with the Lord. Hence it is not the dead in Christ nor the living disciples of Christ that will be on earth the thousand years.

"But," says one, "How about Christ reigning with his saints a thousand years on earth?" Christ will reign with his saints, and we propose to show in this article who they are. They are not those who now follow him as their Lord and r; they are a nation that rejected him as the ah when he came to them. But, as the e says, Rom. 9: 27, "A remnant of Israel be saved;" and so there was, for unto all eceived him he gave power to become the f God; hence they are saved.

how about the rest? The apostle says, 11: 25, 26, "That blindness in part is hap- to Israel, until the fulness of the Gentiles ne in." Now notice what follows: "And so rael shall be saved." What, all Israel, both and alive! Yes, all; the apostle says so. is this to take place? Why, just as soon time of the Gentiles is fulfilled. How are o be saved? By believing on the only be- Son of God; for there is no other name under heaven whereby men can be saved. don't they believe on him now? Because me of the Gentiles is not yet fulfilled, and il is not yet removed from their eyes. How it be removed? By their beholding him he comes without sin unto salvation. They nen all believe on him.

, but how about those Jews who died since t was here on earth? They will all come again in the flesh, a great and a mighty of them, and they will be the inhabitants of rth during the Millennium.

w shall we prove this? Turn to Ezek. 37: "Thus saith the Lord God unto these ; Behold, I will cause breath to enter into nd ye shall live: and I will lay sinews upon nd will bring up flesh upon you, and cover ith skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall nd ye shall know that I am the Lord. . . prophesied as he commanded me, and the came into them, and they lived, and stood their feet, an exceeding great army. Then d unto me, Son of man, these bones are the house of Israel." re we have the strongest proof that Israel ome back into the flesh to serve the Lord. aw this in his day when he said: "I know ny Redeemer liveth, and that he shall stand latter day upon the earth: And though aft- y skin worms destroy this body, yet in my shall I see God." Job 19: 25, 26. Job had kling that, although his body was destroyed orms, when the Redeemer stood upon the in a later day, he again, in the flesh, would od.

ery candid reader of the Bible must confess he children of Israel always had the prefer- with God, and it fully shows that God means ll favor them. When they were in bondage ought them out; when the Lord came to re- sinners, he came to them first. When they l not believe on him he left them to them- , and they were dispersed among all nations. he is going to bring them into their own ed land (See Ezek. 37: 21); then he will take the tempter, for Satan shall be bound a and years and cast into the pit. Then Isra- ll be the saints on earth, and Christ will on earth a thousand years, just as he reigns his church militant now; for he says to his ples, "Lo, I am with you alway, even unto nd of the world." Again he said to his dis- , Matt. 10: 23: "Verily I say unto you, Ye not have gone over the cities of Israel, till on of man be come."

nen he came, he came to stay with his church ne times of the Gentiles be fulfilled; then will e great marriage feast to which none but wearing the Gospel robe of righteousness e admitted.

st as Israel fared for their unbelief in the of God, so the impious Gentiles will fare God takes vengeance on them. Israel re- l Christ, and the result was that they lost their city and temple, their land and country, and were driven out and dispersed among all nations; they were terribly persecuted, hated and despised. And why? Because they believed not upon the Son of God, but persecuted him. Just so with the reprobate Gentiles who have not believed upon the Son of God nor done his will, but have given heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of devils. See Rev. 16: 13 11: "And I saw three unclean spirits like frogs come out of the mouth of the dragon, and out of the mouth of the beast, and out of the mouth of the false prophet. For they are spirits of devils, working miracles, which go forth unto the kings of the earth and of the whole world, to gather them to the battle of that great day of God Almighty."

Now, as I understand it, this battle will be after the dead in Christ are resurrected and the righteous living changed and taken away. Then the impious Gentiles, those that were deceived by the dragon, the beast, and the false prophet, and all who loved not the coming of the Lord, will be gathered in battle array against Israel. See Ezek. 38: 16. "And thou shalt come up against my people of Israel, as a cloud to cover the land; it shall be in the latter days, and I will bring thee against my land, that the heathen may know me, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes." In the seventeenth verse he says that the prophecies of old time would now be fulfilled; in the nineteenth and twentieth verses he shows what a fearful shaking he will bring when he comes to deal with them, and in the succeeding verses he shows that Israel is not to do the fighting, but that the Lord is going to do it. He calls for a sword against them, and the sword shall be every man against his brother. See verse 21. The Lord says, "I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone," and will leave but the sixth part of them. After the Lord has destroyed them, then the Israelites will bury them; (Read Ezek. 39). After the land is cleansed from all filthiness and Satan bound, then Israel will enjoy the thousand years of millennial rest.

"But," says one, "What are you going to do with the sixth part that escaped and were not slain?" First, we read, Revelations, last chapter, "He that is unjust, let him be unjust still: and he which is filthy, let him be filthy still: and he that is righteous, let him be righteous still: and he that is holy, let him be holy still." In whatever condition they are when the tempter is bound and shut up in the pit, just so they will remain in a dormant state till the thousand years are finished; then, as Satan is to be loosed a season, he will go out to deceive Gog and Magog, all nations. This sixth part will have waxed numerous, the old principle in them will be enlivened and they will come up against the camp of the saints. But God will again come to the rescue, and destroy them and redeem his saints.

I find many professors of religion who say there will be no millennium. Some say that we are now living in that age. But compare this age with the millennial age. Now we teach our neighbor; then they shall not say, "Know ye the Lord, for all shall know him from the least to the greatest." See Heb. 8: 11. Again: Now death is in the land, then he shall swallow up death in victory, for death is the last foe that he puts under his feet. Now we have sorrow and weeping; then there shall be no more sorrow, nor crying, but continual rejoicing. Now beasts are ferocious and dangerous; then that animosity will be taken away; "The wolf shall also dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them. And the suckling child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice' den." See Isa. 11: 6, 8.

I know full well that many of the passages quoted in this article are explained away by the unstable, James 1: 8; 2 Pet. 2: 14; but nevertheless God has a purpose, and all are interested in his purpose; hence, whether dead or alive, they must answer his purpose. Even though they be the vessels of wrath, they must fulfill his purpose and bring glory to him. Rom. 9: 22, 23. Many references can be given to prove conclusively who are to be the people of the Millennium; but enough has been written to open the subject for examination and profit.

CHURCH GOVERNMENT AGAIN.

BY B. C. MOOMAW.

Bro. Moore needed to make no apology for discussing my propositions on church government, as, in my view, the discussion of any religious subject, carried on in the Christian spirit, manifested in his article, is both entertaining and profitable. Every sincere man wants to get at the exact truth on all subjects relating to religion and the church, and this cannot so well be done as by a brotherly exchange of views. It is in this spirit that we again venture to present what appear to us to be Scriptural teachings on the subject of church government, which were somewhat overlooked by Bro. Moore in his otherwise able editorial.

In the first place we confess our inability to comprehend the distinction which he makes between the legislative and judicial functions of church government, as it applies to our present system. His theory does not conform to the facts. I would be very glad if it did, for then one of the most serious objections would be removed. If it is true that our church councils do not exercise the legislative function, then it is equally true that no State Legislature, or National Congress, exercises a legislative function, for they proceed in exactly the same way, making no law which does not conform to a higher law, existing in the Constitution. This Constitution answers to our Bible; that is, what the Bible is to a religious representative body, the Constitution is to a political representative body,—a Legislature, or a Congress. Under the political system, as well as the ecclesiastical system, all legislation, or making of laws, or rules of conduct, must be in strict conformity to the higher law, else it is null and void; but it is legislation nevertheless. Now it is necessary for political assemblies to act upon the legislative principle, make laws, and enforce them by penalties, for the reason that it has no means of dealing, and makes no attempt to deal, with the moral or spiritual nature of man. It has no power or jurisdiction in that sphere. It cannot change a man's nature, and therefore cannot change his conduct in that way. It has no means of enforcing obedience to the Constitution on moral grounds. It is shut up to the necessity of enforcing obedience on material grounds. It takes hold of the physical man,—his life, liberty, and property.

Ecclesiastical legislation proceeds upon exactly the same principle. It makes laws, supposed to conform, in spirit and letter, to the higher law or Constitution (the Bible), and enforces those laws by physical or external penalties, — deposition from office, or expulsion from the church. We hold, exactly as before, that while this system is not entirely abandoned in the New Testament, it is made the exception, instead of the rule, and applies only in extreme cases. This fact we still believe was clearly brought out in our first article, where we quoted the one or two isolated cases of church discipline recorded in the New Testament, showing conclusively that it was rarely resorted to, and then only in extreme cases. Another principle had been set up as the rule of church government, and that was the principle of moral suasion,—the guidance of conduct by conversion, persuasion, pastoral admonition, bringing to bear upon the mind and heart the more powerful influence of moral and spiritual motives.

If there is any teaching in the Bible which is distinctive and specific upon any subject, the parable of the tares must certainly be regarded as an explicit and authoritative exposition of the Gospel plan of church government. It was admitted that an enemy had sown tares among the wheat. There was no doubt about it. They were tares, and nobody disputed it. The servants felt, as good church members feel now, that the tares ought to be pulled up. But the Lord said, "No; lest some of the wheat also be pulled up with them. Let them grow together until the harvest."

It is admitted that the tares ought not to be there, but better leave them alone than root up one single grain of wheat. And do not attempt to root them up for fear that you will "root up the wheat also." This is undoubtedly the teaching of the Master. We may say, "What would become of the church under that kind of government, how would you distinguish between the good and the bad?" Paul replies, "The foundation of God standeth sure, having this seal: The Lord knoweth them that are his."

The wisdom of this system is apparent when we reflect that no man, or body of men, however careful and conscientious they may be, can always judge with certainty what every man's spiritual condition really is. God only can tell. The history of all denominations, our own not excepted, goes to show that, in the exercise of the ecclesiastical function, the church has sometimes rooted up the wheat along with the tares. By exercising the legislative function, and if you please, a judicial function also, which was not delegated to it, much wheat has been lost, and much more has been discouraged which might have been sown in the fallow ground of the church. In our disregard of the Lord's teaching on this point, may we not find the fruitful cause of much trouble and dissension? That we should let the tares grow along with the wheat, as the Lord commands, does not, by any means, imply that the church sanctions their presence, character, or conduct. Far otherwise. The church, through its ministry, sets before them constantly, the law of God, enforced upon moral grounds, and in this way constantly binds the conscience of every hearer. Here comes in the right explanation of this doctrine of "binding and loosing."

We said before that it must be understood as a delegation of moral and spiritual authority, as against the legislative and judicial. We are of the same opinion still, for the following reasons: The legislative and judicial idea of religious teaching and church government had been tried under the Old Dispensation, and had signally failed. It always has failed, and always will. In the New Dispensation all things were made new. A new principle of government, founded strictly upon moral and spiritual forces, was inaugurated. Character and conduct, which before had been modified and controlled, or attempted so to be, by external laws and penalties, must now be governed by an internal, a spiritual law, addressed directly to the moral sense, and binding the conscience. This law has a penalty, but its penalty is not external, or temporal.

Now when we preach any law of the Gospel, having behind it the authority of the Lord Jesus Christ, we "bind" that law upon the conscience of every man who hears it. When we thus prove by the Gospel that any one is disobedient to it, and prove that he is a transgressor in any point, we thereby "retain" his sins. We convict him of sin. We "bind" sin on his conscience, on earth and in heaven. But the hearer who can, in his life and conscience, respond to the Word as a doer of it, and not simply a hearer, his sins are remitted. He no longer has conscience of unpardoned sin. He is "loosed," in earth and in heaven.

How much broader, deeper, and more effectual does this make the scope, power and influence of the church! We are satisfied that a church government, organized upon this Gospel plan, would be far more effectual in carrying out its supreme mission,—the salvation of souls,—for the reason that the time and strength which is practically wasted in the hopeless attempt to enforce innumerable specifications of individual conduct, inside the churches, would then be employed in evangelical and missionary labors. It could be employed in the grand work of saving men and women from sin. We present these views in no dogmatical spirit, but with the sincere desire of finding the truth; being fully persuaded that light will not be denied, nor labor lost, when the peace of the church, and the salvation of souls, and the glory of God, are the grand objects which are constantly kept in view.

HONESTY.

BY D. E. PRICE.

Number Three.

"Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them: for this is the law and the prophets."—Matt. 7: 12; Luke 6: 31.

We may also be dishonest in our preaching and writing on religious subjects, by trying to reason away the true meaning of the text, and substituting a meaning more congenial to our fallen natures, by either misquoting the Scripture, or entirely disconnecting it from the context.

A brother once wrote an article on how we may, and sometimes do, have unprofitable meetings. He said, "Sometimes when one brother preaches a good sermon, another follows and spoils it." Then he said, "We read, One shall speak and the rest judge."

Shortly after another brother met him and said, "Where do you read that one shall speak and the rest judge? My Bible says, 'Two or three shall speak and the rest judge.'"

"Well," said he, "if one opens the meeting, and one preaches, and another closes the meeting, it will be two or three speaking."

"All right," said the other, "we are agreed; but why, then, misquote the Scripture?"

"Oh," said he, "I didn't give it as a quotation; I didn't put in any quotation marks."

He no doubt intended to make the impression on those who knew no better, that it reads that way in the Bible, but left a loop-hole to creep out, if approached by others who knew better. I just bring up this simple circumstance to show how easily we may be led into the habit of acting from policy, and not from convictions of principle. If all men were truly honest with themselves in relation to their spiritual interests, there would not be the diversity of opinions in the world existing to-day, in regard to practical Christianity. It is only because we allow ourselves to be deceived by the adversary of our souls, and our own evil inclinations and dispositions.

To illustrate, Christ, the perfect Law-giver, says: "Resist not evil." But popular Christianity says, "If a man won't do right, make him do right, and if he does you an injury, seek satisfaction; self-defense is the first law of nature." They forget that we are grafted in the tame olive tree contrary to nature.

Again Christ says, "Love your enemies, do them good, pray for them, that ye may be the children of your Father which is in heaven." Popular Christianity says, "Love your friends, and hate your enemies; take their lives! The world is better without them; therefore you are doing God's service when you help the world to get rid of them;" and thousands, and I may say millions, of professors of the Christian religion are ready to receive just that kind of doctrine, and plenty of professed ministers of the Gospel are dishonest enough to preach it because it is popular, and meets the approbation of their hearers. But it is just a repetition of what occurred long ago, under the former dispensation, as declared by the prophet, Micah, when Israel had wandered away from the statutes and judgments of the Lord, and followed their own wicked inventions, or those of the idolatrous nations by which they were surrounded. "They build up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity. The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: yet will they lean upon God, and say, Is not the Lord among us? No evil can come upon us. Therefore shall Zion for your sakes be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest." Micah 3: 10, 11, 12.

Again see Jer. 5: 30, 31: "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so: and what will ye do in the end thereof?" It is now as in the time of the prophets,—the people love to have it so, they are dishonest with themselves, and willing rather to be led contrary to the teachings of the Gospel, because the Gospel demands too much denial of self; and they can always find just such teachers as they desire, if they are willing to pay them enough for it.

We want to introduce one more circumstance which, we think, is to the point, hence we may treat it more largely,—the dishonesty of the wicked king of Israel, Ahab. It appears that Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, went down to visit Ahab, king of Israel, and in their conversation Ahab said unto Jehoshaphat, "Wilt thou go with me to battle to Ramoth-gilead? And Jehoshaphat said to the king of Israel, I am as thou art, my people as thy people, my horses as thy horses. And Jehoshaphat said unto the king of Israel, Inquire, I pray thee, at the word of the Lord to-day. Then the king of Israel gathered the prophets together, about four hundred men, and said unto them, Shall I go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall I forbear? And they said, Go up; for the Lord shall deliver it into the hand of the king. And Jehoshaphat said, Is there not here a prophet of the Lord besides, that we might inquire of him? And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, There is yet one man, Micaiah the son of Imlah, by whom we may inquire of the Lord: but I hate him; for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil. And Jehoshaphat said, Let not the king say so. Then the king of Israel called an officer, and said, Hasten hither Micaiah the son of Imlah." While the messenger was gone, the four hundred of Ahab's prophets again repeated their former prophecy, saying, "Go up to Ramoth-gilead, and prosper: for the Lord shall deliver it into the king's hand." "And the messenger that was gone to call Micaiah spake unto him, saying, Behold now, the words of the prophets declare good unto the king with one mouth: let thy word, I pray thee, be like the word of one of them, and speak that which is good. And Micaiah said, As the Lord liveth, what the Lord saith unto me, that will I speak. So he came to the king. And the king said unto him, Micaiah, shall we go against Ramoth-gilead to battle, or shall we forbear? And he answered him, Go, and prosper: for the Lord shall deliver it into the hand of the king. And the king said unto him, How many times shall I adjure thee that thou tell me nothing but that which is true in the name of the Lord?"

Here is something remarkable. When the true prophet of the Lord spake just what the four hundred said, the king did not believe him, but adjured him to tell nothing but the truth Then Micaiah again answered and said, "I saw all Israel scattered upon the hills, as sheep that have not a shepherd: and the Lord said, These have no master: let them return every man to his house in peace. And the king of Israel said unto Jehoshaphat, Did I not tell thee that he would prophesy no good concerning me, but evil? And he said, Hear thou therefore the word of the Lord: I saw the Lord sitting on his throne, and all the host of heaven standing by him on his right hand and on his left. And the Lord said, Who shall persuade Ahab, that he may go up and fall at Ramoth-gilead? And one said on this manner, and another said on that manner. And there came forth a spirit, and stood before the Lord, and said, I will persuade him. And the Lord said unto him, Wherewith? And he said, I will go forth, and I will be a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets. And he said, Thou shalt persuade him, and prevail also: go forth, and do so. Now therefore, behold, the Lord hath put a lying spirit in the mouth of all these thy prophets, and the Lord hath spoken evil concerning thee." 1 Kings 22.

Here we see the result when we are not honest enough to follow the Lord, but give more heed to false teachers, or false prophets, as Ahab did and met with the judgment he justly deserved for his wickedness. We find, under the new dispensation, that the Lord says, "If we receive not a love for the truth that we may be saved, God shall send them strong delusions that they should believe a lie. That they all might be damned who believe not the truth, but had pleasure in unrighteousness." 2 Thess. 2: 11, 12.

If there is anything in the world that we ought to be honest in, it is in our religion. We only have once to pass through this world, and why not be honest enough with ourselves to take the Word of God as the man of our council; obey it implicitly, pay no attention to any teaching that is not in harmony with it; and we can then rest well assured that we will not be deceived; but in due time we shall reap a full reward. On the other hand, if we are not honest with ourselves, and "turn away our ears from the truth, and turn them to fables," we can expect to reap our reward according to our folly.

Mt. Morris, Ill.

IF THE HEART IS RIGHT, ALL IS RIGHT.

BY A. HUTCHISON.

Number Three.

JESUS informs us that he did not come to do his own will, but the will of his Father who had sent him. Then the words and commands which we have are from our Father in heaven, delivered unto us by Jesus and the apostles. These become the test, then, by which we are to know of our spiritual standing, and by our obedience to these, said obedience, growing out of a proper conception of their true import, and being done from proper motives, will reach the true design of the Lord in giving them to us.

When we find within us a willing mind to do all these, then, and then only, may it be said of us that our hearts are right in the sight of God, and we may be called the friends of God. Jesus says, "Ye are my friends, if ye do whatsoever I command you." John 15: 14. And again, "If a man love me, he will keep my words: and my Father will love him, and we will come unto him, and make our abode with him." John 14: 23. When we wish to know if our hearts are right in the sight of him who seeth not as man seeth, but who can see deep down into every part of our entire being, then let us bring the case fully before him, and, faithful Abraham-like, withhold nothing. And when he shall say, "Now do I know that thou fearest me, for thou hast not withheld thy service from me, then can we afford to say that our hearts are right, and so all is right. We all have our ambitions, aspirations and desires, as we are here, and among these are the desires for honor and glory among men. But we should look at these as being unworthy of our efforts, in so far as they apply to earthly glory only. We should well consider the following words from the Lord, "Son of man, behold, I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke." Eze. 24: 16.

He wants us to desire a home in heaven, but if we have been entertaining a desire for that better country, while we have not been willing and obedient, then our desires and hopes will all be taken away with the suddenness of a stroke. He shall say to us, "Depart from me." This language seems to apply to such as claimed that their hearts were all right,—for they say, "We have cast out devils in thy name, etc., but for all this the Master says, "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity." David says, "A good understanding have all they that do his commandments." Psalms 111: 10.

Now we have given these citations and quotations for the reader to see, read and study, and then, with me, to make the application. Lastly we say in the language of St. James, "But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves." Jas. 1: 22.

A STORM AT SEA.

WHILE we are waiting for a letter from Bro. D. L. Miller, it may be interesting to read an account of a storm at sea. It is to be hoped that our brethren and sister had a more pleasant time on board the steamer "Aller."

"Dr. F. E. Clark, during his recent trip across the water, had the interesting, if not a very comfortable, experience of a storm at sea. His graphic description is well worth reading:

"The different pieces of baggage go flying from side to side, now playing hide and seek under the sofa, and now under the berth, and then coming out from their hiding-place at an inopportune moment, as you attempt to stagger across the room, just in season to hit you a sharp rap on the shins. And look out! there come the life-preservers, loosened from their rack overhead, tumbling down about your devoted pate. The glasses over the wash-bowl play castanets in their sockets, and when we go to the dining table, if we are so venturesome, the cruets show a great affinity for the water-pitchers, and the soup is bound to find its way to the table-cloth, rather than into the mouths for which it was designed.

"But a storm at sea assumes its most awful and dismal proportions at night. The deep blackness 'which may be felt,' lighted only by an occasional lurid phosphorescent gleam, through which the ship plunges, adds an element of real terror until one gets used to it. The shrieking of the wind is exaggerated to the nervous imagination, while every ordinary sound without and within assumes startling distinctness. We crawl into our berths, but alas! not to sleep. 'I could sleep as well in a corn-popper,' says my friend, Mr. D. from the upper berth. Up and down we pitch, from side to side we roll; and just as we lose consciousness for a moment, whack, bang, like the report of a small cannon, comes a wave of terrific power dashing against the porthole, and we start up, dreaming that a whole park of artillery has been leveled against our unoffending selves. When we are awake enough to dispel the artillery idea, the ship takes a new freak; and, instead of rolling from side to side, she begins to pitch up and down, which is even more disagreeable. First our head settles down, down, down, and our feet go up, up, up, and then the position of things is reversed, and feet go down and head goes up, as though we were stretched across the seesaw, with the central segment of our spinal column for the pivot. Then, with a tremendous lunch, the propeller comes out of the water, and vibrates so as to make every stick of timber and every bolt shudder and shiver. Then after hanging thus in mid-air an instant, it settles down, not 'with a dull thud' (according to the favorite phrase of the reporter), but with a thrice-repeated and very lively thump, thump, thump; and one involuntarily wonders how many such shocks the ship can stand without breaking in two in the middle. Thus the night slowly wears away; a gracious Providence watches over us; the good ship Pavonia lives through it, as she has through many another such night before; and the only comfort we get from the captain at the breakfast table in the morning is, that he always has bad weather when he has two 'sky pilots' (i. e., clergymen) on board.'"

"EVERY gift, every possession, every attainment, that increases one's possibilities of well-doing, correspondingly increases his danger of ill-doing. The finer the nature, the more liable it is to contamination and defilement. The most delicately poised balance is the most easily deflected, and therefore the most liable to a false showing. The very refinements of scientific methods increase the chances of destructive errors. He who is capable of making the nicest distinctions in language is in the greatest danger of saying what he does not mean. It is because man has virtue that men are vicious; it is because man has reason that men are unreasonable; it is because man is made in the image of God that men are found in the likeness of the devil. Every allurement to vice ought, therefore, to be a reminder of man's capacity for virtue; and every skeptical doubt ought to suggest the possibilities of personal faith. He who has been efficient in the service of the evil one, ought thereby to be reminded of his duty and privilege of being at least as efficient in the service of his true Lord and Master."

"FAITH ought to show itself at its best when the need of it is greatest. Hence it is that when everything seems to go against us we ought to be surest that all is going well; for at such a time above all others, it is clear that God is choosing for us, since we should never have chosen this for ourselves."

"THE eye of true faith is so quick-sighted, that it can see through all the mists and fogs of difficulties. The faith that is grounded on the promises of God, discovers that in prison there is liberty; in trouble, peace; in affliction, comfort; in death, life; in the cross, a crown; and in a manger, the Lord Jesus."

THE PAST HISTORY OF THE CHURCH REPEATING ITSELF.

BY I. J. ROSENBERGER.

Number Two.

In No. 27 of Gospel Messenger will be found the first article under the above title. In that outline we mentioned the sad circumstance of losing the Book of the Law, found in Josiah's time. We stated our fears that the sad history was being repeated to-day,—that the Book of the Law was now to many being lost.

In the continuation of our subject we refer to a signal occurrence in the closing drama of King Ahab's life, recorded in 1 Kings 22: 3-37. Ahab invited Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, to go up with him to battle against Syria. To this Jehoshaphat gave consent, but asked Ahab, King of Israel, to inquire at the Word of the Lord as to the propriety of the enterprise. The four hundred prophets were called up, and all prophesied favorably of the enterprise, in harmony with the wishes of the king. Jehoshaphat not being satisfied, enquired, "Is there not here a prophet of the Lord besides, that we might inquire of him?" The king of Israel said, "There is yet one man, Micaiah, by whom we may inquire; but I hate him; for he doth not prophesy good concerning me, but evil."

A messenger was dispatched to summon the prophet Micaiah. The messenger used the following words of flattery: "Behold, now the words of the prophets declare good unto the king with one mouth: let thy word, I pray thee be like the word of one of them, and speak that which is good." And Micaiah said, "As the Lord liveth, what the Lord saith unto me that will I speak."

Micaiah's prophecy was, "I saw all Israel scattered upon the hills, as sheep that have no shepherd. Let them return every man to his house in peace." To this Ahab replied, "Did I not tell thee that he would prophesy no good concerning me, but evil?"

For this unfavorable, yet truthful, prophecy, Micaiah was smote on the cheek, was put in prison, and fed on the bread and water of affliction. How often is this pitiful history repeated? How reluctant the masses are to have their evil ways pointed out! Isaiah alludes to this class in 30: 10, as follows: "Which say, prophesy not unto us right things, speak unto us smooth things, prophesy deceits." The prophet Jeremiah saw this lamentable picture in his day, and he narrates the scene in the following alarming language: "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land. The prophets prophesy falsely . . . and my people love to have it so."

At our recent Annual Meeting the churches in Hagerstown kindly welcomed us in their houses of worship, and expressed themselves pleased with the Brethren's preaching. Two things commonly please people,—one is to speak approvingly of their course, to "prophesy good concerning the king," to "speak smooth things,"—flattery; the other is to try to please God by seeking the good of humanity in kindly pointing out truth; in showing the gain and beauty of truth over error. There is a necessity of occupying ground, not clouded with doubts. We name the Bereans, Felix, and Agrippa, as examples on this point.

I know not which of the above pleased the Hagerstown people, but I hope the latter, and if so, we class them with faithful Micaiah, but if the former motive prompted our Brethren's preaching in Hagerstown, or anywhere else, we class them with the unfaithful four hundred who fell under the chastisement of God. The apostle plainly affirms, "If I yet pleased men, I should not be the servant of Christ."

The measure adopted by Annual Meeting to guard the moral and religious interests of our schools, by appointing a committee to co-operate with the Faculty of each of our schools, meets our sanction. I wish to say to those committees, through this article, that Annual Meeting has appointed no committee, whose duty is more important, so wide-spreading, and so far-telling for the future welfare of the church, as their work.

It is important that, in their work and in their reports, they should repeat the history of Micaiah and not the history of the four hundred prophets, whose aim was to "speak good concerning the king," to please the people.

While it is a great pleasure to the patrons of a school, to see a favorable report, and while it is also pleasing to the church in general, yet to make a report that leaves an impression, differing from the facts, will result in harm, and be an act of unfaithfulness on the part of the committee. The reports of the committees last year were hasty and rather imperfect. A member of one of the committees told us, that he was not satisfied with their report,—that it was too meager, and needed further explanation.

The meetings of the different school committees at last Annual Meeting for mutual consultation, was a step in the right direction. It is certainly apparent, that, unless the Faculties and Boards of our different schools take a firm stand on the plain usages of the church, this will prove to be an era in which the church, or a large portion of it, will, in a short time, drift out into the changing tide of the pride and fashion of the world.

While we should not ask too much of our schools, they, like the best governed churches will have unfaithful inmates to deal with; and we have a right to look for a proper, loyal church government of the church in which the schools are located. We have a right to expect the officials and their wives, in those respective churches, to be ensamples to the flock, and that the teachers carry with them the recognized, plain usages of the church.

It is a fact that a faithful teacher in the schoolroom is an irresistible power in moulding his pupils. Hence were we to place our precious young people under the influence of fashionably-attired teachers,—brethren whose appearance in their apparel and the wearing of their hair and beards resembles lawyers or the popular city clergy,—the future results will certainly be apparent and sad. Hence I repeat, the importance of the work of our school committees is of much importance.

It should be remembered that the Methodist church dates her loss of Gospel humility to the era when the old, faithful preachers were crowded out of the pulpits by a rush of young preachers from their colleges. I hope that our lovely church will safely guard against repeating the foregoing lamentable Methodist history. Money and its abuses has greatly injured many, and so has education. The misfortune with so many in securing an education is, that they get knowledge, but not wisdom. Here Paul explains, "Knowledge puffeth up." In the course of obtaining an education, people are sure to make new discoveries in the system; but they are well nigh always on the dangerous side.

We often have the invitation given to us to visit the Brethren's schools, to see their work. To this we reply, "Not necessary." We can safely decide on the merits of a machine by passing the field after the work is done. We can decide with equal safety on the merits of a school, by meeting the material they send out. The extent to which they are crucified unto the world, their zeal for the cause, their humility, the care with which they guard every appearance of evil, their consecration to the cause, their gentle, submissive, yielding spirit,—all go to render the picture plain, the case easily understood.

THE CHRISTIAN HOME.

BY SOLOMON SCHUBERT.

The blessing of the Lord is on the Christian home. When the Ark of the Covenant,—the sign of the Lord's presence,—was in the house of Obed-Edom, it is said that "the Lord blessed the house of Obed-Edom, and all that he had." This is in accordance with the saying of David: "The voice of rejoicing and salvation is in the tabernacles of the righteous."

Matthew Henry has quaintly said of the Ark in Obed-Edom's house: "The Ark paid well for its entertainment. It is a guest that none shall lose by, that bids it welcome."

Has not our Lord himself said that if we seek first the kingdom of God and his righteousness, all these things,—all that is necessary,—"shall be added" unto us? And has not godliness the "promise of the life that now is?" Yes, if we are true to God, he will "bless us, and all that we have." He will bless us with that "blessing of the Lord which maketh rich, and addeth no sorrow therewith." There may be, and there will be, trials, sorrow and disappointments, but with them support and comfort, and the sweet assurance "that all things work together for good to them that love him."

[Let us, then, ask God, though we are not worthy that he should enter under our roof, to come into our houses and bless them! Let us banish from them all that could grieve his Spirit or offend; and let us cherish only the things that are true and honest, good and pure, as well as lovely and of good report. Thus will the home on earth be a shadow of the heavenly home, where all will be peace, and purity, and love.

"Every Christian family ought to be," says Jonathan Edwards, "as it were a little church, consecrated to Christ, and wholly influenced and governed by his rules. Family education and order are some of the chief of the means of grace. If these fail, all other means are likely to prove ineffectual; if these are duly maintained, all the means of grace are likely to prosper and become successful."

There is reason to fear that the church to-day does not sufficiently emphasize the importance and necessity of family religion as the means of maintaining her own spiritual life and power, and that the multiplicity of church privileges leads many Christians to neglect their own exertions for the salvation of their children. The family altar and parental care for the souls of their children are too often neglected, under the impression that the church can do all that needs to be done for their salvation. But only in proportion as piety rules in the home will the church itself be found to flourish. Remove religion from the home, and you destroy the best work of the church, and undermine the foundations of society.

"If we long to bring forth all the fruit of the spirit, let us strike our roots deep and wide in private prayer. That faith and support, that strength and grace which we seek of God in secret that they may be exercised in the hour of need, God will in that hour give us before men."

"Instead of asking what people will think or say, if you do thus or so, let the inquiry be, 'What will be the thought or record which God will make?'"

"Upon the first day of the week, let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him, that there be no gatherings when I come."—1 Cor. 16: 2.

"Every man as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give. Not grudgingly or of necessity, for the Lord loveth a cheerful giver."—2 Cor. 9: 7.

HOW MUCH SHALL WE GIVE?

"Every man according to his ability." "Every one as God hath prospered him." "Every man, according as he purposeth in his heart, so let him give." "For if there be first a willing mind, it is accepted according to that a man hath, and not according to that he hath not." —2 Cor. 8: 12.

THE WATCH TOWER.

BY GALEN B. ROYER.

"FOR God so loved the world," and I believe, yes, I know that he still loves it. But, judging from the efforts of his followers who are to be "the light" here below, "the world" does not include the same portion of the earth. That one who does nothing for Christ outside of his own neighborhood says by his actions, "My neighborhood is the world." That one who says the District or State in which he lives is as far as he will work, indicates what, in his mind, is the world. But he who lends his best efforts to carry the Gospel to all lands, "all nations," "every creature," at home and abroad, is the only one who has the Bible idea of loving and doing for the world.

WHO GAVE THE MOST?—A donor of $20,000 to the work of foreign missions was being spoken of as a most munificent giver. "Not quite so," was the answer. "I know of at least one more generous giver." "Really?" "Well, that gift is known to very few except the Lord. The other day I was calling on a friend of mine, who told me, with tears running down his cheeks, that his only son was about to leave home for missionary work in a far-away land. The father had discovered that the young man felt called of God to such service, but was tarrying at home for his sake. 'How could I keep him back?' said the old man. 'I had prayed nearly all my life, "Thy kingdom come;" Send forth laborers into thy harvest," and with all the pain of parting with my boy, in the certainty I shall never see him again on earth, there is a deep joy in giving him up for Christ's sake.'"—Sel.

One of the ways by which a business man is able to study his business, and in fact there is no other way by which he can learn as much, is in taking an inventory each year and comparing it with the preceding year or years. Through this he may know what departments produce the greatest income, and what ones a loss. Also, he may judge whether or not the income from each department is what it should be in comparison to the amount of time and labor put upon it. Other facts may be gleaned from a study of such an inventory, and the successful man will diligently study his business,—his mind is continually upon it.

The same is true of Christianity. It is a business. It is the only business which Paul determined to know, and, of course, engage in. "For I am determined not to know anything among you, save Jesus Christ, and him crucified." 1 Cor. 2: 2. And it would be glorious for the church, were there more persons within her bounds who are determined likewise. The Christian is the only one appointed to do this business, and just to the degree that he makes it the only "thing" of his life work, will he succeed in it. If he be as wise in this work as he is in worldly pursuits he will study to use the best methods of doing it. But this need not apply only to individuals of the church; it may apply with profit to the church as a body. She should adopt such measures as will enable her to determine her prosperity. Some of our State Districts are awake to this fact, and are doing it. I do not wish to bring any one District into undue prominence, but I believe that to show how they do some work will be a benefit to other Districts; it also illustrates the point I wish to make in the preceding remarks.

For a number of years the Southern District of Illinois has required at her District Meeting each year, and caused to be published in her Minutes, a report as follows:

Name of Church	Name of Bishop.	Number of Ministers.	Number Baptized.	Number of Members.	No. of Sunday-schools	Average Attendance	Missionary Contributions
							General Fund	District Fund

This year the Southern and the North-eastern Districts of Kansas have in their Minutes a report on the same plan. In the one the name of the church, the number of elders, ministers, members, baptisms, appointments, Sunday-schools, and the name of the solicitor are given. The other is similar. I am confident that if the brethren who read this, could examine one of these reports, they would say immediately that it is a good thing, and labor to introduce it into their own Districts. Show is far from the idea of these reports. It is simply a means of studying church work and church growth.

I believe sufficient has been given to get an idea of the report and I heartily commend it to the consideration of Brethren in other Districts. What an excellent record of church work are Minutes containing such information! What untold value will they be to the church in the future! What information it affords any one studying the progress of the church in various localities! I bespeak for these Districts thus studying the labor of their own hands,—their "business,"—continued and greater success and prosperity.

THE POWER OF INFLUENCE.

BY MARY A. EBY.

A STONE is dropped into the water. At first the ripples are hardly perceptible, but gradually they widen and become larger until they reach the further shores.

A small spring is hidden away, up among the mountains. It steals its way down the sides, unites with other small streams and joins the Gulf as a mighty river.

We are spending an afternoon in a social manner with some of our friends. A few of them, perhaps, are professing Christians, one is about to give her heart to God, and one may be skeptically inclined.

We all like to have a good time, and we have a good deal of what is called "fun." Perhaps we do some joking and, perhaps, even make light remarks about sacred things. We separate and that is all.

Ah! would that it were so; but by those few unseasonable words souls have been driven from Christ and eternity alone will reveal the harm done by a few little words.

Oh, that we would realize more fully the power of influence! We cannot live alone. Our lives speak either for or against Christ. Our influence will not stop with us, but will go on to the end of time.

As every soul, brought by us to the light will add one star to our crown, so one soul, driven away by our unfaithfulness will lessen the number. Oh, for more of that Holy Spirit by and through which alone the glorious Gospel light can be reflected by us over a wicked and sin-cursed world.

"Am I my brother's keeper?" Yea, verily, and we pray for more of the spirit which characterized the Divine Master that we may throw out his glorious light to all with whom we come in contact.

Yellow Creek, Ill.

EVEN the present reward—here in the life that now is—of affliction faithfully and patiently borne, is great. It is enough, as it is felt in the first moments of our spiritual relief, to reconcile us to labor and sacrifice yet more abundant, in order that we may secure like peace and gladness hereafter in heaven's fuller measures. But the difficulty is to keep this conviction in mind when the next painful experience to be endured looms up on the horizon in the repellent outlines of an approaching trial. We may gain help at such a time by anticipating our future standpoint, and trying to look at the event as it will appear to us from beyond the present life. When we reach heaven, how thankful we shall be if we can recall that, in hours of darkness and discouragement, we held fast to Christ, doubting not that his love would guide us, and that his power was able to deliver; how thankful, if we may look up into the face of him who knows every incident of our history, and say with joy, "Lord, I trusted thee when I could not see thee!"—Sel.

A SYRIAN woman, a convert to Christianity, who is now in this country, says that the Christian missionaries have done wonders in her lifetime, in spite of the degradation of heathenism and the persecutions of Mohammedanism. When it was announced in her native city on Mt. Lebanon, that Protestants had arrived, many sent to the markets orders for so many pounds of Protestants, not knowing what they were. But as of old, the leaders stirred the people up, telling them that Protestants were devils, and had them stoned out of the city. But they came again and again, until they were heard, and now in that place they have two high schools and many primary ones, and thirty Christian teachers; there are two fully-organized native churches and many native helpers, teaching the Gospel to their people.—Sel.

The Gospel Messenger

Is the recognized organ of the German Baptist or Brethren's church, and advocates the form of doctrine taught in the New Testament and pleads for a return to apostolic and primitive Christianity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and maintains that Faith toward God, Repentance from dead works, Regeneration of the heart and mind, baptism by Trine Immersion for remission of sins unto the reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, are the means of adoption into the household of God,—the church militant.

It also maintains that Feet-washing, as taught in John 13, both by example and command of Jesus, should be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper, instituted by Christ and as universally observed by the apostles and the early Christians, is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening or after the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ.

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That the principle of Plain Dressing and of Non-conformity to the world, as taught in the New Testament, should be observed by the followers of Christ.

That the Scriptural duty of Anointing the Sick with Oil, in the Name of the Lord, James 5: 14, is binding upon all Christians.

It also advocates the church's duty to support Missionary and Tract Work, thus giving to the Lord for the spread of the Gospel and for the conversion of sinners.

In short, it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discords of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe

Mount Morris, Ill., - - - - Aug. 25, 1891.

BRO. ANDREW W. BAKER, of Harrod, Ohio, reports that Bro. Geo. Studebaker is with them for a two weeks' meeting.

THE late District Meeting for Texas, Oklahoma and Indian Territory has appointed a Mission Board, and is now prepared for active work.

WE learn with pleasure, that Bro. J. F. Oller, of Waynesborough, Pa., has so far recovered from his late illness that he can now attend meeting.

BRO. S. A. HONBARGER, of Esterly, La., under date of Aug. 12, writes that one more was added to their number by confession and baptism on the 9th.

THE second edition of the Minutes is now out, and all orders will be filled by the time this reaches our readers. Those still desiring the Minutes should send in their orders early, as this is the last edition we shall publish.

BRO. R. T. POLLARD has changed his address from Elderton, Pa., to 537 W. Washington St., Hagerstown, Md. Also James P. Harris from Ergo, Mo., to Cabool, Texas Co., same State.

OUR foreman has made a very desirable improvement in the appearance of the "Gleanings," by placing the side headlines in full face type. This will be appreciated by our readers.

BRO. LEVI TROSTLE, of the Rock River congregation, is preparing to retire from his active farm life, and locate in Franklin Grove, Ill. The change will enable him to devote more time to the ministry.

THE Trustees of the Old Folks' Home, have returned from Mexico, Ind., well pleased with what they saw, and greatly encouraged in the work in which they are now engaged. They report fourteen inmates in the Home in Mexico, and everything moving along smoothly.

BRO. D. E. PRICE, the elder of this congregation, visited the church at Lanark, Aug. 16, and preached for them. While we have many ministers here they still find plenty to do. A number of them were at work in other congregations the same day, representing three States.

BRO. H. W. STRICKLER, of Loraine, Ill., who met with a painful accident some time ago, writes that he will soon be able to enter the field again, and may devote all of his time to the work of the ministry this season. His first point will be in Pike County, this State. From there he expects to go to Missouri.

NEXT week we shall publish a very interesting article concerning Rev. T. De Witt Talmage baptizing a young man in the River Jordan by trine immersion. A good deal has been said about this circumstance, but the trine immersion part has been generally omitted in the reports. We have the genuine report before us, and will give it in full. It will be worth preserving.

THERE is more building going on in Mt. Morris at this time than has been known for years. It is not a boom, but a steady, healthy growth. Some are moving into town with a view of educating their children, while others are locating here for the purpose of enjoying better church privileges. There seems to be a bright prospect before Mt. Morris.

ABOUT the most foolish thing that our members can do is to take the patterns from fashion plates, and fit (?) them over a plain Christian garb. Meeting such persons, one hardly knows whether they want to impress us with the idea that they believe in plain dressing or fashionable attire. If they mean to appear fashionable, why not dress with some taste, for really the most unbecoming garment one can wear is a dress between that usually worn by our plain members, and that worn by the fashionable world. The world itself admires a plain, neatly-made garment, worn by a consistent member of the church, but even sensible, worldly people are amused when they see us imitating the world just enough to appear ridiculous. We ought to be either for God or Baal. If we intend to advocate and practice Christian plainness, let us do it, and not attempt to mix the foolish ways of the world up with our religion. There ought to be at least one plain, religious body in this world, and it is to our own people that we must look for this Christian principle to be maintained. We need the united and sincere efforts of all our members to aid us in this department of the work, and we hope that not one of them will yield to the demands of fashionable religion.

IT is difficult for one to reason against his inclination. It will be wise for us, to now and then pause and examine the bent of the mind, to see whether it is in accord with Bible reason. To undertake this is a test of one's ability over his own mind.

IN Salt Lake City public sentiment is becoming strong against Mormon rule. In the school election, last month, the Mormons were defeated by 700 majority. Verily the Mormon period is passing away. It is strange that a people can be deluded by such false doctrine, but it seems that some persons can be led away by most any pretender, however ridiculous or false.

BRO. J. C. LAHMAN and wife are now with us. They will probably make Mt. Morris their home, or rather stopping place, for Bro. Joseph does a great deal of church and missionary work, and must therefore travel a good deal. We welcome them among us, and trust that they will enjoy their new field of usefulness. Bro. Lahman will visit all the congregations in Northern Illinois in the interest of the Old Folks' Home.

WE have just printed a new edition of "Church Certificates," neatly bound in book form, each book containing fifty certificates. They are neatly printed on good paper, and perforated so that the certificate can be detached from the stub with ease. Every congregation should have a book of these certificates, as it will enable them to make out church letters with more ease, and by retaining the stub a record of each letter is kept without any additional trouble. Price, 50 cents a book.

THE Brethren's Juvenile Quarterly for October, November and December is now before us. It is a great improvement over the former number, having twice as many pages, printed on better paper, the lessons much better arranged. It is also well illustrated, thus making it a great attraction to the young. We suggest that our Sunday-school Superintendents and teachers send for a sample. Price to schools, three copies per quarter, twenty cents; six copies per quarter, twenty-five cents; ten copies or over per quarter, three cents each.

WE had the pleasure of spending the Lord's Day with the Pine Creek congregation one week ago, preaching for them Sunday morning and evening. This is one of the best working congregations we have in the Northern District. Their meetings are well attended, and the services very much appreciated. Their Sunday-school seems to be in a real flourishing condition. They have two meeting-houses, one in Polo and the other in the country. It was at the latter we attended services. We feel like commending this congregation for its success in maintaining the landmarks, in non-conformity, our fathers have set. The visit was a very pleasant affair, and we enjoyed it very much indeed.

WE have before us a neatly-printed circular, setting forth the work and aims of the Bible Department in the Mt. Morris College. This department has an endowment of over $10,000.00, and some other funds to be used in supplying suitable books for the students. Bro. E. S. Young is now prepared to devote his entire attention to the Bible Department, and labor to make it a great aid to all who feel disposed to attend. Seven months of each year are to be devoted to work in the Bible, Church History and such other lines of study as will be in keeping with the department. During the month of January, 1892, a Special Bible Term will be held largely for the benefit of ministers and teachers. Of this special department we will say more later in the season.

People who are looking for faults in others can generally find them, and if they were permitted to meet a company of angels they would be sure to find fault among them too. Scores of people found fault with Jesus when he was here on the earth. They accused him of being a "wine bibber." It is all right for us to see real faults in others, provided we will profit by them, either to remove the faults or permit them to serve as a lesson to us that we may avoid similar faults. But if we look for faults with a view of talking about them, to the great discredit of our brother or sister, we ourselves become wrong-doers and need to be admonished.

We have a suggestion to make concerning the love-feasts in Northern Illinois. It seems to us that we are not as zealous as we ought to be about attending the feasts in other congregations besides our own. Our people do not spend any of their time attending places of worldly amusement, and they certainly ought to have plenty of time to attend the feasts. We wish to suggest that there be a general awakening among us this fall in this respect. Let us lay aside our worldly cares, and attend the feasts on every hand as in days of yore. Some of the older members think that we do not give as much attention to these feasts as in former years. That is doubtless correct. This is a busy world, and we are too much inclined to permit our business to keep us at home when we ought to be attending some of the feasts. So get your work in shape by the time these feasts commence and attend all of them you can. Let it be a time of reunion and general rejoicing all over the District. Especially let our ministers attend, and be prepared to preach the Word. What we say concerning Northern Illinois may perhaps apply to advantage to every State District in the General Brotherhood.

It is not likely that most of our thoughtful readers will agree with Bro. F. C. Renner in some of the ideas he sets forth in his article on another page of this issue, especially in regard to Israel alone being the ones who shall enjoy the Millennium with Christ; but as the return of the Jews to the Promised Land seems at least possible at this time, the article may induce a more careful search of the Scripture concerning these and kindred questions, and thereby be the means of a more thorough knowledge of the prophecies pertaining to the future of the Jews and Christians. It is a subject of special interest to those who delight in looking into the deep parts of the Word. For our part we feel more inclined to consider the practical things of life, so as to be prepared for Christ when he does come, "For in such an hour as we think not the Son of Man cometh." We look for "the dead in Christ to rise first" (1 Thess. 4: 16), to live and reign with Jesus a thousand years (Rev. 20: 6), and if we all do what is right, and die before that time we will certainly be raised according to promise, but if we should happen to be alive, we shall be caught up to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall ever be with him. 1 John 4: 17.

CHURCH GOVERNMENT AGAIN.

On another page of this issue will be found a second article from Bro. B. C. Moomaw on Church Government. We trust that these articles are bringing out valuable points concerning the New Testament form of church government. We know that they are proving interesting to some, and we hope they will be found instructive to all, for it is well that this subject be well understood by our people.

We thought that in our former article, "The Power Delegated to the Church," we had made the question of the three powers so clear, and pointed out their necessity, as well as their relation to each other, so plainly, that further remarks on that point would not be required, but it seems that Bro. M. fails to comprehend the distinction we make between the legislative and judicial authority in the administration of our church government. We hardly see how we could make that point any clearer than we have already done. But we say this, and we say it with emphasis, that unless an elder gets the facts of these three powers, legislative, judicial and executive, well fixed in his understanding, and comprehends the metes and bounds of each, it will be difficult for him to preside over the church, in the administration of justice as he should. Without them there can be no just form of government, either civil or ecclesiastical.

The distinction between the three powers is clearly marked in any good dictionary. But the distinction between legislative and judicial power is this: The former makes the laws while the latter interprets and applies them. This distinction is so clear that we can hardly understand how any one can fail to notice the fact.

The power to make religious laws is in the Deity alone. All laws are made by that power, and then placed upon record in the Scriptures. The church may interpret and apply these laws. In doing so she acts in a judicial capacity. That is as high as her authority goes.

In our former article we showed where, by whom, and under what circumstances all the three powers were to be exercised, giving chapter and verse.

Our people have never claimed legislative authority in any of their Conferences. Nor do any of our leading preachers or writers claim such authority. The church has never claimed authority higher than judicial. On this line she has a commendable record that marks a clear distinction between legislative and judicial authority. The former she has always held belongs to God, while the latter is delegated to the church. Not only so, but we have clearly proven from the Scripture, that judicial authority has been transmitted to the church. And we now add, that any church that does not exercise this authority cannot maintain any distinction between the body of Christ and the world. A glance at some of the popular churches will demonstrate this.

While our people have always held that legislative authority does not belong to the church, she nevertheless may have overstepped her authority in a few instances, and also stopped short of her authority a time or two. This is at least possible, for the church is not infallible, but she is far less liable to error than individual members. While the church may, now and then, make a decision that is not in harmony with our individual views, it will nevertheless be conducive to peace and right doing for us to always sincerely respect the actions of the body.

We say that it is true that our councils do not exercise legislative functions in any sense. Legislators make laws. Our councils make no laws; they simply render decisions on questions submitted to them. These decisions are made only after consulting that part of the law having a bearing on the point under consideration. These general councils answer somewhat to the Supreme Court of the United States with this difference: The Supreme Court may consider the constitutionality of a law passed by the legislative body. This the church cannot do, for she must accept in good faith all laws made in heaven, and recorded in the Scriptures. It will thus be seen that these councils do not answer to legislative bodies.

Furthermore, the Bible does not answer to the Constitution, but it rather answers to the laws made by Congress. Back of Congress is a Constitution to which all laws made by that body must conform. Back of the Bible is the Constitution of heaven, not in human language. In conformity to this Constitution all the laws recorded in the Scriptures have been made. This Constitution has never been transmitted to the church. She has no use for it. Not being a legislative body she needs not the Constitution to compare laws with. The comparing of these divine laws with the Constitutions of the universe, is an act that is done in heaven. The laws are then transmitted to the church with God's seal set upon them. The legislative body that makes our laws held all of its sessions in heaven, where every divine law we have was made. Now, with these laws spread before her, the church may sit in judicial capacity, not to decide on the constitutionality of any law, for the law is perfect, but she may render decisions on questions submitted to her by members. These decisions must conform to that law made in heaven, and recorded in the Scriptures. This was precisely the manner in which the council at Jerusalem acted on the question of circumcision sent in from Antioch. The council made no law whatever, it simply made a decision predicated on the law already made. The church of to-day can act in the same capacity, and it has ever been the aim of our Annual Meetings to so act in her work. And we now add, with emphasis, that there is not one instance on record in the New Testament, where the church ever acted in a legislative capacity.

We wish to remind Bro. M. that the wheat and tares of the parable in Matt. 13, cannot apply to the good and bad in the church, in the sense of preventing the church from withdrawing from every brother that walketh disorderly. It should be borne in mind that "the field is the world; the good seed are the children of the kingdom, but the tares are the children of the wicked one." Matt. 13: 38. If the field was the church, Bro. M. might have a point of some strength. The children of the kingdom are in the church, while the tares, or the children of the wicked one, are out of the church. That is just the difference. If any tares, or wicked ones are found in the church, it becomes the duty of the church to put away that wicked person (1 Cor. 5: 13). "Put away from among yourselves that wicked person" is the language. Put him out of the church where tares belong. "Them that are without God judgeth." "Ye judge them that are within." 1 Cor. 5: 12, 13. The church does not gather up the tares and destroy them; she simply puts them away, and still lets them grow in the world, but not in the church. The Savior never taught that the good and bad might grow together in the church. That doctrine is contrary to Matt. 18.

It is contrary to 1 Cor. 5: 13 as just quoted; contrary to 2 Thess 3: 6, which says, "Withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly." Also Rom. 16: 17, which says, "Mark them which cause divisions and offenses contrary to the doctrine which ye have learned; and avoid them." It is also contrary to the very spirit of the Gospel throughout.

Not only so, but it is contrary to all experience and reason. What would be the result if the weeds were allowed to grow unmolested with the corn! There would be all weeds and no corn. What would be the result if the fruit grower would permit the sprouts to have an equal chance with the grafted stock? His trees would soon be ruined. No man would ever think of conducting any business on such loose principles. Then, why should we think of running the church of God on such a ruinous plan? What would be the use of having a church if we are going to allow the tares to grow in it with the wheat? In this great world the wheat stands in the church, and yet by the side of the tares. The tares are in the world, and so is the church. The angels must leave them grow together until the end of the world. A few tares may get into the church, but the church is authorized to withdraw fellowship from them, and still leave them stand in the world until the end.

The church has no right to knowingly fellowship tares. In this important matter let us not forget to discern the Lord's body. To permit the good and bad to grow together in the church would not contain the first element of wisdom, to say nothing of Scriptural authority. In a few instances the church may have rooted up some wheat, but to leave the tares in the church would be to destroy all the wheat, and there would be nothing left but tares. The church is bad enough as it is, but what would be the result if all the tares were left in? We know of a people who have tried this method of leaving the tares grow with the wheat in the church until they are sick and tired of it. They have found out that one bad man in the church can do more harm against the reputation of the church than a hundred outside.

How often do we hear of very exemplary worldly men sometimes declining to unite with the church just because there are a few inconsistent members in it! Were we to leave all the bad in, no one, who has any self-respect, would care to unite with the church at all. Such a method would drive ten valuable men and women out to where it would bring one in.

In regard to binding sin on a man's conscience, that would amount to nothing in the way of removing the evil. A sister could adorn herself with gold to her heart's content. Merely binding the sin on her heart would not affect her in the least. The same is true in regard to the man who plays cards and billards. Binding the sin on his conscience will not remove it, for the sin is in his heart and he can stand all of this kind of binding possible to suggest. But a few of these gold-wearing sisters and card-playing brethren, left in full fellowship in the church, would so contaminate the church with their evil that there would soon be no one left to bind any kind of sin on their consciences. A church organized on this plan would result in about as complete a failure in moral and religious reform as would be possible to conceive. It would hardly remain moral, let alone religious.

We are glad for the opportunity of taking a square, deliberate look at this question, and must say, that the more we look at it the more are we confirmed in the belief that our General Brotherhood has adopted the New Testament form of church government. We also trust that the four articles that have now appeared on this important subject will aid our readers to understand the question more fully, and also prompt them to give it a more thorough investigation. We are not writing for controversy, but our aim is to awaken inquiry, and point out, as clearly as possible, the land-marks that our fathers have set and derived from the apostolic teaching. Let us study these land-marks, having the divine seal set upon them, and labor for the unity and the peace of the church.

LITERALISM.

A LATE number of the Central Presbyterian, published in Richmond, Va., says that we, as a people, are famous for "extreme literalism." The Presbyterian is generally well informed in most matters outside of the workings of our Fraternity, and doubtless states about the truth concerning public opinion respecting us. Exactly what is meant by the imputation of "extreme literalism," —how much divergence from orthodoxy it indicates,—is not stated. Of course we know what the ordinary meaning of the term is, but we have no means of telling how much this meaning is amplified, or modified, or varied, by its application to our particular case. However it would seem that we evidently have the reputation of being extreme literalists, and this fairly implies, in the minds if our critics, more or less departure from the popular standards.

Judging from isolated cases of actual experience, with our popular denominations of the more liberal schools, we might justly conclude that our "extreme literalism" placed us entirely out of the jealously-guarded pale of popular orthodoxy, as, now and then, it is denied that we are Christians at all, and the doors of some over-jealous church are at times closed against us. But this kind of treatment is growing more and more infrequent and exceptional as the better informed, and broader-minded people come to know that, through the preaching of "repentance toward God, and faith toward the Lord Jesus Christ," we actually save men and women from sin. God has thus been pleased to own our work, at least in some measure, and if we have a limited degree of the divine recognition, we can afford to do without the recognition of the misleading creeds.

It might be well however, to examine closely into the charge of "literalism," and see whether it is based upon reasonable grounds; or whether it is a far less departure from "pure and undefiled religion" than the liberalism of some of the popular denominations of the day. "Extreme literalism" occupies about the same spiritual plane as formalism, or ritualism; and denotes an exaltation of the externals of religion at the expense of its spiritual element. It rejects both the spiritual and metaphorical interpretation of the Scripture, and insists upon a blind acceptance of the latter, without any attempt to reason out its obvious meaning and application. This kind of dead literalism may be a very serious error, and lead to pernicious results, just as a dead formalism, or a dead ritualism, or a live liberalism, in the other churches, may produce fruits equally fatal to Christian character.

But while it would be manifestly unjust to make a wholesale imputation of all these errors to any other denomination, as a body, it is equally unfair also, and unjust, to impute "extreme literalism" to us as a religious body. Some of our members, or preachers, or elders, or churches, may be slightly afflicted with it, but it does not characterize us, as a body, in any sense whatever. We admit that we are opposed to that method of interpreting Scripture which "explains away" the plain commandments of the Master, and the practical duties of the Christian life, leaving a wide open door for the personal indulgence and worldliness, which has become the shame and weakness of the modern church. Good men in all denominations deplore the prevailing laxity of the personal Christian life. May we not find the cause in the growing departure and liberalism of the creeds, in which there is a constant tendency to exclude everything disagreeable to human reason, or distasteful to human pride? We have doubtless earned our reputation for "extreme literalism" by our persistent effort to secure a personal, practical obedience to the Gospel, its ordinances and precepts; insisting upon and perpetuating the symbolic teaching of the former, and the daily practical application of the latter. We believe with all our heart in the doctrine of "salvation of faith through grace," but do not believe that we are exempt thereby from "working out our own salvation with fear and trembling." Christ, the Perfect Pattern, said, "My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." This picture of the relation and co-operation of divine and human effort in the work of salvation is not preserved in its full integrity by the modern creeds. They are willing to retain the divine side, but the human side is more or less glossed over with a mild but meaningless form, which gradually weakens the hold of duty upon the conscience. We earnestly believe in showing our faith in God by our works, believing that works are essential to a living, active faith. We not only believe that faith without works is dead, but we do most sincerely maintain that there can be no virtue in any faith that is not kept alive by active works. Our aim is to carry out the apostolic practice and doctrine, and we believe that we are measurably successful in the undertaking, and have in our real life and practice the spirit as well as the letter of the Word, the spirit as well as the form. Possibly our critics judge us solely by the form, not considering that there may be just as much spirit as form.

IT is said that Harper's Monthly declined over 30,000 manuscripts last year. This shows that a goodly number of writers were disappointed at not seeing their articles in print. Some of the writers were accomplished scholars and able writers.

THE Free Church of Scotland raised last year for foreign missions $567,155. It has in foreign lands eighty-two missionaries and teachers, and 6,620 native communicants. How does this compare with our giving? That church numbers 350,000 communicants. This means nearly $1.70 per member. Were we to do that well we would raise over $100,000 a year. Are we doing as well as we can? Is there not much room for improvement in our spirit and practice of liberality?

WHEN we advise the use of good books we never mean to exclude the Bible. The Bible on the stand and in the family ought to be the first of all books, and each member of the family should be encouraged to use it. We are painfully aware that Bible reading in the family is falling too much into disuse, and in places the parents may be much to blame for it. The family altar is set aside and seldom erected only when some minister chances to call, and sometimes not then. Parents ought to keep good books and papers on the stand for their families in connection with the Bible, and yet never fail to have their daily season of prayer and Scriptural reading. Take time to read the Bible to your children.

From the Scott Valley Church, Kansas.

We are still doing what we can to advance the cause of the Heavenly Master. We have preaching every Sunday, and Sunday-school at the Scott Valley school-house every Sunday at 10 o'clock. We also organized a Bible school which meets every alternate Sunday. We need a church-house very much, as all of our services are held in school-houses, and sometimes our meetings are interfered with by worldly gatherings.

We expect to hold our love-feast at Bro. E. J. Miller's, Sept. 16 and 17.

By order of the elders of our late District Meeting, brethren Daniel Vaniman and S. Z. Sharp, of McPherson, Kans., met with us at the Mt. Joy school-house July 7, where we spent considerable time in singing the sweet songs of Zion, after which Bro. Chas. M. Yearout was ordained to the eldership. Bro. Yearout spends most of his time in the missionary field, especially during the fall and winter; we need help in the ministry very much, in order that our large territory may be worked for the Master. There are but few reapers to gather in the ripening sheaves. O! for more faithful men of God, who are willing to sacrifice the comforts of home, and go out into the unorganized territories, to teach the people the ways of the Lord a little more perfectly. Hundreds of good, honest people would accept of the pure Gospel, and join in with the people of God, were they but taught it, and given an opportunity. O may the brethren and sisters awake to a sense of their duty, and aid in carrying the blessed tidings of salvation to all mankind!

From the Pleasant View Church, Kans.

The Pleasant View church met in church council Aug. 9. The business of the meeting was disposed of in the spirit of brotherly kindness. We appointed our love-feast for Sept. 5, commencing at 10 A. M., and continuing over Sunday. This is the first love-feast of the Brethren ever held in Philips County, and we invite our dear brethren and sisters, of like precious faith, to be with us.

Since my last report we have received five by baptism, and we are persuaded that others are counting the cost and will, ere long, join in with the people of God. Oh, may they not put it off too long! We have had plenty of rain this summer, and small grain of all kinds is good. Corn is very promising and will make a heavy yield, if we have rain in the near future.

Brethren, wishing to be with us at our Communion, will be met (if coming by rail) at Republican City, by notifying us in time. We desire the prayers of the brethren and sisters for our spiritual welfare, that we may have our lamps trimmed and burning when the Bridegroom comes.

Sylvester Workman.

Working for the Master.

Aug. 8 I bade farewell to my little family,—wife and boy,—and started for the La Fayette church, Allen Co., Ohio, where we are now in the midst of a series of meetings. Our last series of meetings, held last February, was at this place. On account of over-work, we did not get to fill two of our spring appointments. The work at this place looks encouraging. We expect to continue the meetings here for about two weeks, and will close with a Communion Aug. 22.

As the time of the year approaches to hold series of meetings, we should prepare. There are a few things that we wish to notice, which have a tendency to make a success of our meetings:

1. The brethren and sisters should all take an interest in coming to meeting, bringing their children, and inviting their neighbors.

2. Have plenty of song books, so that all can take a part in the singing.

3. Be friendly and sociable; speak to those who are not members, as well as the members. Invite them to come again, and make them feel welcome.

4. Last but not least, let the religion of Jesus be your theme of conversation. Let sinners feel you are interested in their salvation. To this end let us labor, and may the Lord enable us to work together in his vineyard!

Death of Eld. John B. Shoemaker.

In the Pleasant Valley church, Elkhart Co., Ind., June 21st, Eld. John B. Shoemaker closed his eyes in death. Bro. John was born in Green township, Wayne Co., Ohio, March 11, 1829, and passed away at the age of sixty-two years, three months and ten days.

Bro. John united with the church of his choice about the year 1857, with his companion. He was shortly afterwards elected to the ministry, and in a few years later ordained to the Eldership, in which capacity he labored faithfully to the end, ever contending for the ancient landmarks of the Brotherhood. Bro. John was a natural orator and, no doubt, many of the brethren and sisters in the Brotherhood remember his earnest appeals to them to be faithful and to come to Christ. Bro. John complied with the injunction of the Apostle James, and was anointed with oil, Eld. John Metzler officiating. He leaves a dear companion, one son and three daughters. Our elder is greatly missed in the church and family, who need the sympathy and prayers of all God's children. His body was laid to rest in the White Pigeon cemetery. The funeral occasion was improved from Matt. 25: 23, by Eld. Peter Long at his late residence. Peace to his ashes!

Notes by the Way.

July 22 I received a telegram of the death of Bro. Jacob Hedrick, of Midland. Taking the evening train, I arrived in due time at the house of mourning. Next day the funeral took place at 2 o'clock.

We are sometimes made to wonder at the ways of the Lord, to see those taken from us whom we look upon as being so much needed. Again we see that those who are old and who have a desire to leave the world, must remain. The Lord's ways, however, are not ours.

Bro. Hedrick will be much missed. He had given himself to the work of the Lord, and his labors will follow him "over yonder." I remained with these brethren until their harvest-meeting. Upon that occasion they did not forget Bro. Quinlan, but collected something for his work. Brethren, do not forget the needy in the Master's cause. The Lord has abundantly blessed the labors of the husbandman.

We note an article in the Messenger in regard to the Lord's Prayer. We hope all will profit by it. The Master says, "When ye pray, pray after this manner." I do not think one-third of our Brethren use it just as the Master gives it. Now, we are not to add to or take from in other things, why in this? Let us stir up our pure minds by way of remembrance, and all profit by it!

Samuel H. Myers.

Death of Eld. Jacob Hedrick.

Eld. Jacob Hedrick was born in Rockingham Co., Va., Jan. 9, 1842, and died at Midland, Va., July 30, 1891, aged forty-nine years, six months and twenty-one days.

Deceased located at Midland, Fauquier County, in 1883, to take charge of the church there. Bro. Hedrick was one of the few of his age who was willing to devote his labor to the cause of his Master. His labor will be much missed, but we hope that his mantle will fall on some one.

Bro. Hedrick had his troubles and trials, but felt at peace with all, and said when taken sick that his time was here, and he did not think he would get well. Disease, typhoid fever. He leaves a wife, a sister and three children to mourn their loss, but they have a hope of reuniting in the kingdom of God. Funeral services by the writer from Rev. 14: 12, 13, assisted by the brethren.

From Burnett, Iowa.

The above-named place is about ten miles from the main body of the church. As the people here were anxious to hear our brethren preach, we left an appointment, and Bro. T. G. Snyder from Robins, Iowa, preached two sermons for us July 19. They then requested that we have preaching again in three weeks from that time. We then wrote to Bro. John Zuck, of Cedar County, Iowa, to be with us. On the morning of Aug. 9 we assembled for worship. Bro. J. Kurtz Miller, of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, opened the meeting by prayer, after which Bro. Zuck preached from 2 Chron. 1: 7-13 and Phil. 3: 7-8. In the afternoon we met again at 3 P. M.

Our congregations were quite large, and a deep interest was manifested. The people took an active part in the music, which we appreciated very much. We regret that Bro. Zuck could not remain longer with us. He preached with his usual earnestness and depth of thought, by which he won many friends here.

Let us look after the unsaved that are dying for the Bread of Life right by our doors. Here are people who never heard a sermon preached by our Brethren before, yes, more than this,—never knew there was such a church in existence as "Dunkards." The rising sun of every morning gives us all a fresh start in life. Let us begin to improve our time and talents, and do what we can to "rescue the perishing," for just as time leaves us so eternity finds us. Oh! eternity, eternity! We hope Bro. Zuck will respond to the earnest appeals by the people here, to come and preach for them again! Lizzie M. Rogers.

From the Lower Stillwater Church, Ohio.

One was baptized since our last report.

At the Annual Meeting I made inquiry of an aged brother from Illinois concerning a brother whom I had noticed at former Annual Meetings, but not at this. Said he, "He desired more liberty in dress than we could allow; hence is no longer with us, but has attached himself to a church that makes no question as to dress." He then added, "My brother, when the church loses her identity, she loses her Christianity. I have thought much on this last remark. With the history of other denominations before us it will be well for the church, especially those who have the care of the church, to note the road we are traveling.

While in Washington, D. C., after Annual Meeting, we visited the General Post Office, and in it the Dead Letter Department. We saw the thousands of letters and packages, sent by mail, that failed to reach their destination from various causes. Then we wondered if there might not be a dead prayer office to which misdirected prayers, or prayers of no good motive, go. Please read Jas. 4: 3.

To-day, Aug. 12, was our quarterly council. We were glad to have with us Eld. Jesse Kinsey, from the Salem church; Bro. S. W. Hoover, from West Dayton, and Edward Frantz from McPherson, Kans.

The meeting passed off harmoniously. Some discipline was needed, but correction is necessary even in a well-ordered family.

Our annual church visit has been made, and was reported at our late council. The church was found to be in union, still willing to increase in usefulness and to advance the cause of our Blessed Master.

Our Communion, as previously announced, will be Sept. 16, at 2 P. M., in the lower house. A cordial invitation is extended to all. Any passing through on the Pan Handle or D. & U. (Bee Line), will be met at Trotwood or Dayton, Ohio. Those coming on the Dayton, Ft. Wayne and Chicago R. R., will be met at Haines or Dayton, Ohio. L. A. BOORWALTER.

At Home Again.

NEARLY one more year of hurried time has passed since wife and I left our home in Franklin Grove, Ill., for Florida. April 1, we left again for Pennsylvania, stopping at points by the way with Brethren, of whom we have nothing but kind remembrances in our spiritual association, preaching, etc. After reaching Pennsylvania (wife arrived in advance of myself), I continued to preach and visit in Adams and Franklin Counties, Pa., and Washington and Carroll Counties, Md., until the time of Annual Meeting. Of the Meeting we entertain fond recollections of association with dear brethren and sisters, and know of little that marred our enjoyment. "How pleasant to dwell together in peace!" May we all long remember the occasion and bring back its influence to our home churches!

The location of the Annual Meeting being near our boyhood home, we visited the old homestead which we left forty-six years ago. Many familiar faces have, since then, passed away; the young have become aged, and the scenes of early boyhood come rushing back, to tell us how fast time is moving on! New responsibilities have fallen upon the younger, who have passed the meridian of life. Let us, dear Brethren, hand down to coming generations the good old Gospel ship,—upon which we have been sailing with the sails spread to the breeze,—sound and whole.

Several weeks after the meeting we again started Northward, across the State of New York, to visit the Great Niagara Falls. The view of the Falls is at once grand and beautiful. Thoughts of this wonderful work of God fills the mind, and the study of it gives one greater conception of the Creator of all things made, and of the things not seen but felt, by which we are able to understand the harmony of God's laws,—temporal and spiritual!

Crossing the great suspension bridge of the Grand Trunk Railroad, 250 feet above the water at the great Whirlpool Rapids, we are upon British soil for the first time. Continuing west through Upper Canada to Port Huron, we think of the Brethren, but time will not permit us to be with them at this time. Lansing, Mich., is our destination. Here my daughter is living. After a few days' stay, I continued on, to South Bend, Ind., where I remained over Sunday. Here I attended a council on Saturday, four miles out in the country. Bro. D. Whitmer has charge of the congregation. At the meeting there was but little business, and all passed off pleasantly.

On Sunday at 10 A. M., I preached for them; and at 3 P. M., attended Sunday-school at the Wenger church, near the City. We had preaching also at 4 P. M., here. Bro. Hiram Kreighbaum, son-in-law of Uncle Martin Wingerd, has charge here.

At South Bend are located the factories of the Studebaker Brothers, of whom nearly all have heard. They are the sons of Bro. John Studebaker,—a minister in the Brethren church. The building is yet standing where he worked at the anvil. Now the establishment has grown to immense proportions, covering nearly seventeen acres of ground. It is well worth a visit by any one. The courtesies of the firm will be extended to all in an inspection of the works. That which attracts our attention most is the welding of iron by electricity, at such a rapid rate. An introduction to one of the firm, Mr. Clem. Studebaker, and a short conversation, gave us a partial knowledge of the vastness of their business. It being near pay day, Mr. Studebaker said it would be necessary to provide $20,000 to settle the monthly pay roll.

After leaving South Bend we reached Mt. Morris, at 10 P. M., where we shall remain for a time at least, and engage in visiting the churches of Northern Illinois in the interest of our "Old People's and Orphans' Home," located at Mt. Morris. We trust the Lord will recognize this good work, and touch the hearts of our brethren and move them to liberality, so that all wants will be met, is my prayer! J. C. LAHMAN.

Mount Morris, Ill., Aug. 15.

From the Barren Ridge Congregation, Va.

THE above congregation met in council May 18, 1891. Elders Isaac Long, from Mill Creek, and S. H. Meyers, from Flat Rock, were present. After attending to some regular church-work, a choice for a minister was held, the lot falling on Bro. Jacob C. Garber (address, New Hope, Augusta Co., Va.). An election for deacon was also held, and Bro. Wm. Coffman was chosen. The duties of the offices being duly laid before them and their wives, they promised to serve the church as best they could, asking the prayers of the faithful.

Our annual church visit was extended the first week in August, and we met in council Aug. 8. The council was a pleasant one, as all were reported as being in the faith. One brother, who had strayed away, came and was received back into fellowship; his wife was also received by baptism. It was decided to hold our lovefeast Oct. 17, at 2 P. M., to which all are invited. We also intend to hold a series of meetings, commencing Nov. 1. E. L. BROWER.

From the Thornapple Church, Michigan.

THIS church is moving along smoothly. Bro. J. V. Felthouse held a week's meeting preceding our Communion, June 13, at which time three were baptized. On Bro. Felthouse's former visit, in February, four were baptized. This, with two received by baptism at Fisher, makes nine who were received by baptism since February, and one restored. For these lambs of the fold I ask the prayers of all.

Our Communion meeting surely was an occasion enjoyed by all. Over one hundred persons communed. Our adjoining ministers and elders were in attendance and did good service during the meeting. Our worthy brother, J. F. Rairigh, was ordained to the full ministry, and was given charge of the congregation, in place of Daniel Chambers, resigned. Many thanks are due Bro. Chambers for the labor and care bestowed upon this church in the past. May he not forget us in the future! Upon the above occasion Bro. Peter B. Messner was forwarded to the second degree of the ministry.

This church is in peace and union, and we fondly hope that such may be her lot in time to come. Aug. 22, at 2 P. M., we expect to hold our harvest-meeting in the West house. We expect Bro. Isaiah Rairigh to be with us at that time.

WE, the Brethren of the Pleasant Valley church held our regular church council Aug. 8. Our elder, J. B. Shoemaker, who has gone the way of all the earth, is missed very much at our council-meetings. The example of patience and forbearance which he left us we should not forget. We believe that our loss will be his eternal gain. The church selected brethren R. Hout and C. Schrock to go to District Meeting, which will be held on the first Thursday in October. This will be the second District Meeting for Northern Indiana for 1891, on account of making a change, in the time of holding said meeting, from April to October.

We had a harvest or praise meeting last Sunday, August 9. Bro. A. H. Puterbaugh was with us and preached three soul-cheering sermons for us. Our Sunday-school is in a prosperous condition. Bro. Eli Schrock, assisted by Bro. A. F. Cripe is our Superintendent. We are happy to see the interest taken by both young and old in the work. Our Superintendent is always at his place. This is right. We think it is better to be at Sunday-school than to go visiting on Sunday, and miss the Sunday-school exercises. A good way to teach is by example. C. SCHROCK.

I HAVE been a reader of the MESSENGER for the past five years and could not do without it.

While reading Bro. Hope's letter in the last issue, I was made to feel sad, and happy, too,—sad because there is a mother who has the cares of a family resting on her. Just think for one moment of the great responsibility resting upon us as parents! Happy to think that Bro. Hope is so willing to leave home and its pleasures, and work for the church.

Dear sisters, do not forget Sister Mary! Write to her some comforting words, and while you write to her, do not forget her otherwise. It will be a great comfort to her.

While brother Hope is working for the Lord, let us help him along! Those who live near her should visit her and have her come and spend the day with them. Let every one pray to God, that, if it is his will, they may be permitted to return home again. The Lord's will, not ours, be done!

From Mainland, Pa.

ON Tuesday evening, July 28, Bro. D. L. Miller preached at Grator's Ford. We had the plensure of listening to his sermon, on the text, "Be thou faithful unto death, and I will give thee a crown of life." His earnest words could not fail to arouse us to a greater zeal and faithfulness in even the minute duties of life. He reminded us of the Christians who had been faithful unto death, who had lived only for Christ, and him crucified, who had gone forward, by the grace and help of God, bearing their cross, never turning from the narrow way, until it ended in a martyr's death.

On Wednesday evening, at the Indian Creek church, he spoke on Bible Lands. A large audience had assembled to hear him. His vivid descriptions of Palestine were highly appreciated. He brought Bible scenes so clearly before us, that it seemed as if we could really see them. It was like a word-painting. May God bless Bro. Miller and wife, and keep them safely.

One was recently added to the Hatfield church by baptism, also two at Indian Creek. God grant that many more may find true happiness in serving Christ! ELIZABETH H. DELP.

From Lordsburg, California.

WIFE and I, accompanied by my son, John W. Metzger and his wife, left our homes at Cerro Gordo, Ill., July 7, and started for California. We arrived at Lordsburg, Cal., July 11.

We still like California on account of the pure air and healthy climate. I have improved considerably in health since my arrival here. Considering my age I am feeling quite well. We had a very pleasant journey to this goodly land. We did not suffer from the heat and dust, and had good company and a pleasant trip in all respects.

There is plenty of fruit here now. The good Lord hath blest us richly. We have good meetings, large congregations and good attention. We have a good Sunday-school, and a social meeting every week. There are several good openings here to organize new congregations.

As much as I like California I would advise all who have the California fever to come and look for themselves. Let them stay one year and see how they like it.

Quite a number of people are coming from different States, and among the number a good many members. Last Saturday about ten persons came here from Cerro Gordo, Ill. Of that number five are members. We desire the prayers of God's children every-where, that we may all be faithful to the end and show that light to the world that God's people ought to show.

A Sad Accident.

AUG. 10 Bro. Lloyd Harsh sent his son Luther, aged thirteen years, away on some buisness. With the team hitched to the wagon he left King's blacksmith shop at 12 o'clock for home. Between two and three o'clock the boy was found by a traveler near the Accident school-house, lying in the road,—dead. His neck was broken and his scull bursted. The rear end of the wagon was lying near the boy. The team was found a little further on, fast in the brush, with the front part of the wagon still attached to them. No one was near to tell the sad story. The supposition is that the tongue chains got loose and, that in going down hill, the horses became frightened, began running and finally threw the boy off. The hind wheel must have struck him on the head and done the deadly work, as there was hair and flesh found on the wheel.

Aug. 11 the funeral sermon was preached at the Accident school-house to a large concourse of sympathizing friends and neighbors from 2 Sam. 12: 23, by the writer and others. Luther was an obedient boy, and a regular Sunday-school attendant. May his classmates, as well as his brothers and sisters, try to meet him in heaven. Bro. Lloyd and sister Rachel have the prayers and sympathies of the community in this their sad affliction. They requested me to ask the brethren and sisters, through the MESSENGER, to pray for them. May God help us to be ready!

Notes from Our Correspondents.

"As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

Quarterly Council.—The Fairview church, Kansas, held her quarterly council, July 25. All business was disposed of in a Christian manner. We decided to hold a harvest-meeting Aug. 8. By request our dear brother, C. H. Brown, of the Colby church, labored with us on that occasion and remained over Sunday. We were heartily admonished to a sense of our duty. Our love-feast will occur Aug. 29, beginning at 3 o'clock. It will be held one mile north and five miles west of Goodland, at the residence of the writer.—John F. Cline.

One Added to the Fold.— Aug. 1 the brethren and sisters of the Mound church, Mo., met in quarterly council with our elder, Bro. J. Witmore, as one of the number. A good deal of work came before the church and all was decided in a Christian spirit and disposed of pleasantly, excepting the case of one who seems to be lukewarm. The church has decided to send for ministerial help and begin a series of meetings the last week in September, and continue over the first Sunday in October. One dear young sister became tired of sin and on Sunday was led into the water, to arise we trust, and walk in newness of life. We believe there were good impressions made, and we trust more will follow.—A. J. Smith, Adrian, Mo.

Notice.—Owing to our failure in getting ministerial aid for our series of meetings we have changed the love-feast of Indian Creek church, Polk Co., Iowa, from Oct. 10 to Sept. 12. Meetings will commence a week or two before. We expect Bro. I. J. Rosenberger to be with us.—A. V. Sager, Maxwell, Iowa.

One Baptized.—To-day the members of the Ogan's Creek church, Indiana, assembled in council, preparatory to our Communion, Aug. 15, at 2 P. M. Our council passed off pleasantly. At the close of the meeting one dear soul desired to walk in newness of life. May she prove faithful until the end and receive a crown of righteousness! Pray for us.—Martin W. Hoover, Servia, Ind., Aug. 8.

One Soul for the Lord. — The members in Bates County, Mo., held their quarterly council Aug. 1. There was not much business before the meeting, and everything passed off in a Christian spirit. Thus it should always be with God's children. One young sister came out on the Lord's side and was baptized. Two were added by letter. May God help us all to hold out faithful to the end!—Diana Miller.

Quarterly Council. — We, the members of the Falling Spring church, Franklin Co., Pa., held our quarterly council Aug. 8. Very little business was brought before the council, and a more pleasant council I never attended. In the afternoon, at 2 P. M., we had our harvest-meeting, conducted by the home ministers. After services we repaired to the waterside, and there buried a dear sister in Christian baptism, we trust to walk in newness of life.—Wm. C. Koontz.

Good Interest. – The members of the Monitor church, Kans., met in council July 25. All the business was disposed of, we hope, to the satisfaction of all. We decided to hold a series of meetings during the first half of October, and a feast on the 17th, at the close of the meetings. One was baptized since last report. A good interest is being manifested in the Sunday-school lessons of this quarter, and we feel to praise the Lord and press onward!—S. E. Lantz, McPherson, Kans., Aug. 14.

Good Place for Tract Distribution. — Some good brother or sister from Southern Illinois, who may not care to let his left hand know what his right doeth, has sent me a bundle of tracts on "Trine Immersion," by C. H. Balsbaugh, which we gratefully receive. We assure the giver that they are appreciated in our work here in the city. Should others feel like helping along this good work in a new field, we would hereby inform them that we can make use of many more of the Brethren's tracts and pamphlets, especially on doctrinal subjects, and will try to place them in many homes where the Brethren's faith and practice is not fully known.—P. R. Keltner, Sterling, Ill.

Killed by Lightning.—On the morning of Aug. 5, while Bro. John Laman, his two sons and Bro. John Ivy were stacking hay in a thunder-storm, Bro. Laman was struck and instantly killed, while on the stack. The body fell to the ground and the stack was burned. Bro. Laman was born Oct. 15, 1829, in Franklin Co., Pa., and died, aged sixty-one years, nine months and twenty days. Bro. Laman moved, with his parents, to Ohio, in 1831, united with the Brethren church in 1859, moved to Kansas in 1887, where he remained until his death. His wife, one daughter and two sons survive him to mourn the loss of a kind husband and father. They have the entire sympathy of the neighbors and church in their sad hour of bereavement. Funeral services by Bro. George Garst from Job 14: 1, in the City of Madison, Kans.—J. M. Quakenbush.

Good Sermons.— Our dear brother and sister J. J. Hoover came to us Aug. 8 and preached three good sermons. He had excellent attention from the people, and they want him to come again. We consider Bro. John a good worker for the Lord. —Amanda Shook, Alexander, Nebr.

Let the Good Work Go On.—I want to say here that I am in full sympathy with the motion that Bro. Sharp made in GOSPEL MESSENGER No. 30, page 471, and want to give it a hearty second. Let the effort be made! We need to do more for the saving of precious souls. Let us all help it in great earnest.—E. D. Kendig, Fishersville, Va.

Proposed Meetings. — The members at State Center, Iowa, intend to commence a series of meetings Aug. 14, to be conducted by Bro. I. J. Rosenberger, of Ohio. Neighboring members are especially invited to be with us, and give their aid in endeavoring to labor for the Master and the salvation of precious souls. A Communion will be held in connection with our meetings, Aug. 29 and 30.—S. Beeghly.

Harmonious Council.—The Brethren of the Fairview congregation, Mo., met in church council at Bro. C. Steffen's house, in Newark. There was no special business on hand, and the meeting passed off in love and union. We also had services at the Presbyterian church recently. Bro. John Tucker addressed the congregation and also extended an invitation. As a result two precious souls came out on the Lord's side to be buried with Christ by baptism, and walk in newness of life.—Christian Lapp.

Quarterly Council. — The Pleasant Hill church, Ind., met in quarterly council on Saturday, Aug 8. We put into the church treasury as the Lord has prospered us, to be used as the church dictates. We also made arrangements to hold our Communion meeting Oct. 22, commencing at 10 o'clock. There was not much business to transact, but what was done, was done in love and harmony. It is pleasant to meet with our people when everything passes off pleasantly. I wish that all churches could say the same. —Phebe A. Bosler Ari, Ind.

Harvest Meeting. —The Lower Deer Creek church, Carroll County, Indiana, met in council Aug. 1. Considerable business came before the meeting, but all seemed to pass off pleasantly. We appointed a harvest-meeting to be held at the Nebo church on Thursday, Aug. 20. We also appointed a love-feast for the "Upper" church, commencing Oct. 17, at 2 o'clock P. M., to which the usual invitation is given. We expect Bro. D. P. Shively, of Peru, Ind., to commence a series of meetings at the same place, beginning Oct. 8.—S. H. Bechtelheimer, Camden, Carroll County, Ind.

Pleasant Council. — The members of the Blue Creek church met in council Aug. 7. As there was no particular business before the meeting, the time was pleasantly spent in singing, prayer and exhortation. A collection was taken up to pay for Minutes of Annual Meeting. Some funds were also gathered for the Missionary Work. The members agreed to hold a love-feast in their meeting-house, which is located eight miles east of Ceylon. The house is to be dedicated on Sunday, Nov. 8. The feast is to be held Nov. 10, commencing at 10: 30. We extend a cordial invitation to all who desire to be with us. Especially do we need ministerial aid, and we sincerely hope that we shall not be forgotten or neglected on this occasion. —Emma Watson, Ceylon, Ind., Aug. 11.

Further Information.—An announcement of the death of sister Jane Nicholson, June 10, was given recently. She passed away near Glendora, but belonged to the Covina church. Sister Nicholson came to California Sept 11, 1890, and made her home with her daughter, Mrs. Worrel. Her maiden name was Allen. She was born in North Carolina, Sept. 6, 1821, and was a member of the Brethren's church for thirty-seven years. She was a good worker for the Master. Twice she was left a widow, and now she leaves five children to mourn their loss. She was afflicted with asthma for many years, and seemed anxiously waiting the call of her Master. Her age was sixty-nine years, nine months and four days. Funeral services by brethren Moore and Overholtzer. — S. A. Worrel, Covina, Cal.

Dedication of the Buena Vista Church.—Having completed our neat little church on the corner of Twenty-ninth Street and Catalpa Avenue, last Sunday, Aug. 9th, was set for the dedication service. Bro. I. M. Gibson preached to a large congregation in the morning on the subject, "Christ, the Foundation." For seventy-five minutes he delivered an entertaining and instructive discourse. In the evening the congregation again assembled to hear Bro. I. N. H. Beahm, who preached an able discourse on the subject of God's love. After the public service a meeting of members was held to consult upon the subject of organization. There are about thirty members living in the town. All present expressed a desire to be organized at once, and the preliminary steps have been taken in that direction. The ministerial work will fall on the writer and Bro. Gibson, who will shortly settle among us. It is our purpose to have preaching twice every Sunday, also Sunday-school and prayer-meeting. We ask the prayers of all God's people for the success of the Buena Vista church. —B. C. Moomaw.

Good News.—The harvest-meeting of the Newton church, Ohio, held July 30, was, as such meetings ever should be made, a practical one. Bro. Wm. C. Teeter delivered a practical sermon from the words " "She hath done what she could. After this a collection of $20 was taken, to be used in the Master's cause. At the close another soul did what she could,—gave her hand to the church, and her heart to God. On the Sabbath following, after a soul-reviving sermon by Bro. Teeter, she was baptized to the joy of all. Yesterday, Aug. 9, another dear sister was willing to unite heart and hand in the good cause, and was received with a welcome. Praise God with us!—Isaac Frantz, Pleasant Hill, Ohio.

ZIMMERMAN. — In the bounds of the "Ten Mile" congregation, Pa., of consumption and hemorrhage of lungs, Bro. John Zimmerman, aged 62 years and 22 days.

N. B. CHRISTNER.

FOX.—In Greenfield, Iowa, July 22, 1891, Mary Ann Fox, aged 66 years, 4 months and 27 days.

The remains of the deceased were brought to Shannon, Ill., and interred by the side of her husband, Samuel Fox, who died about two years ago.

Sister Fox has been afflicted a number of years, but bore her suffering with Christian patience. Only occasionally was she able to get to meeting, yet she was zealous for the cause of her Master and ever ready to give a word of encouragement to those who are walking upon the narrow way. Funeral services were held on Sunday, July 26, and were largely attended. Discourse by the writer
D. ROWLAND.

GHERE.—In the bounds of the Fairview church, Tippecanoe Co., Ind., July 27, 1889, sister Susie, wife of C. C. Ghere, aged 28 years and 26 days. Funeral services by Bro. Frank Fisher.

GHERE.—At the same place and in the same family, Aug. 2, 1889, Eldo Ghere, aged 2 weeks and 5 days.

GHERE.—In the same family, July 15, 1891, Jessie Ghere, aged 5 years and 25 days.

Little Jessie was a bright little girl. She was sick with brain fever for five weeks. When her last moments came, she smiled sweetly and passed away without a struggle. Funeral discourse by Rev. Stockhouse, of the U. B. church.
M. A. SENSENBAUGH.

HECKLER.—In Harleysville, Montgomery County, Pa., July 2, 1891, sister Magdalene, wife of Bro. Abraham Heckler, aged 58 years, 6 months and 20 days.

The cause of her death was very singular. She awoke in the night with great pain in her finger from, what she thought, was a gooseberry thorn sticking there, but nothing could be found. The pain was very severe, swelling up her hand and running along her arm and down her side. This soon brought on pyæmia or blood-poisoning, from which she died in about seven days. Physicians could do nothing.

Deceased was a daughter of Eld. William Price, long since deceased, and was a consistent member of the church for about thirty years. A bereaved husband and an only grandchild survive her. Her funeral occasion was improved by brethren Price and Cassel.

MOYER.—At the same place on July 15, 1891, of scarlet fever, Alice, a daughter of brother and sister Lizzie Ann Moyer, aged 5 years less 6 days.

Bro. John, sister Lizzie Ann and three others of their children all had the scarlet fever. Their home was a house of affliction for several weeks. The funeral occasion was improved by the Brethren.
JAS. Y. HECKLER.

MOHLER.—In the Mineral Creek church, Johnson Co., Mo., Aug. 3, 1891, Eva C., infant daughter of C. M. and Mary A. Mohler, aged 10 months and 6 days.
A. W. VANIMAN.

KINDLE.—In the Painter Creek church, Ohio, Aug 8, 1891, sister Anna Cassie Kindle, aged 27 years, 6 months and 15 days.

Sister Kindle was a daughter of David and Hettie Warner. She was born Jan. 23, 1864, and was united in marriage with J. H. Kindle, Dec. 3, 1882. There were born unto them six children, of whom five are yet living. She was a member of the Brethren church for about fifteen years, and died with consumption. She left father, mother, husband, five children, two brothers and two sisters to mourn their loss. We believe all who have learned to know sister Kindle can say that, since she became a member of the church, she has tried to live a devoted and consistent Christian life. After long suffering, the cold messenger of death called, and she sank peacefully to rest. The burial took place on Monday forenoon, Aug. 10, from the Covington church. The last sad rites were witnessed by a large concourse of friends and neighbors. Funeral services were conducted by brethren I. J. Rosenberger, Isaac Frantz and Tobias Krider. Interment in the Covington cemetery.

An Expert Opinion.

THE "Medical and Surgical Journal" for March 1891, says editorially:

"This pretty little city of Idaho Springs, Colorado, is situated in a beautiful park about 37 miles from Denver, and is about 7,500 feet above sea level. It is thrifty, prosperous, and has become noted for its hot and cold mineral springs, which contain medicinal properties of extraordinary value. Idaho Springs as a health resort cannot be excelled this side of the world-renowned Carlsbad Springs of Germany, whose waters and the waters found at Idaho Springs bear almost an identical chemical analysis.

"In the early stages of consumption these waters, combined with the invigorating air of this beautiful climate, are almost a specific. We take pleasure in recommending these waters to all suffering from coughs and catarrhal affections. It is the best place to go to for the cure of phthisis. Those of our colleagues who have been sending their patients to this grand health resort all join in praising the satisfactory results received from the invigorating waters and climate. We would therefore urge physicians to advise their patients, threatened with consumption, not to procrastinate, but to try, before it is too late, the salutary effects of the waters of Idaho Springs. The Union Pacific are making special efforts to carry the public to and from this famous resort, with all the modern comfort and ease which the tourist seeking health and pleasure can desire." 22-34.

Our Bible Department

This Department received such financial aid in the last year as to give it greater permanency. It is a fixed part of our school work Besides the endowment, a brother and sister lately sent us $300 CASH to be invested in books for that department From the estate of another sister, who died last March, we received as a "Bible Library Fund," the interest of which is annually to be invested in books for the Bible Department. These, together with the religious literature in the Cassel Library, afford excellent helps to Bible students. We are glad to learn that many brethren and sisters begin to see that the most lasting monument they can erect, and one that will do the most good, is to set apart a portion of what the Lord has given them to hold in trust. Besides this there are given the significations of the principal words, by which their true, Scriptural meaning may be known. A full account of Jewish customs and ceremonies is given, as well as a complete concordance of the proper names of the Bible and of the books called Apocrypha. Send all orders for the above work to this office.

Once More

We call attention to the Huntingdon College on the principle that when we have a good thing for the people we ought to let the people know it. Education is not a commodity like coffee and sugar, which we can buy anywhere at a given rate per pound, but it is the development of principles and powers within us And the character of these principles and powers depends largely on the influences which are thrown around us at the time of this development.

What we claim for our school, in addition to the educational advantages, are the safe moral and religious influences thrown around students while attending school To every member of the church this ought to be a consideration above that of dollars and cents. Money cannot measure with the value of the soul. There is a wisdom that is above the price of rubies. And an education without this, is as sounding brass.

Our Advantages, which we offer are, First, good educational facilities in all the Departments.

Second, A pleasant home where you are surrounded with social and religious influences that are desirable and safe, and where you have opportunities of doing practical church work in the prayer-meetings, the Sunday-school and the Bible classes.

Third, The Bible Department where classes in Bible study are open and free to all students.

Feeling that there should be inducements to all who have a love for the church and the system of religion which we believe are strictly in harmony with the Bible, we solicit your patronage,—we invite you to "come and see."

Garfield Beach on Great Salt Lake, Utah.

The famous health resort, Garfield Beach, on Great Salt Lake, 18 miles from Salt Lake City, is reached via the Union Pacific, "The Overland Route," and is now open for the season.

This is the only real sand beach on Great Salt Lake, and is one of the finest bathing and pleasure resorts in the West. Owing to the stimulating effect of the brine on the skin, or the saline air upon the lungs the appetite is stimulated, and after a bath, the bathers are ready for a hearty meal, and feel greatly invigorated.

Fine bath-houses, accommodating 400 people, have been erected at Garfield Beach, in connection with which there is a first-class restaurant and a fine, large pavillion built out over the lake. All of these are run by the Union Pacific, which guarantees a first-class resort in every respect.

For complete description of Garfield Beach and Great Salt Lake, send to E. L. Lomax, Gen'l Pass. and Ticket Agent, Omaha, for copies of "Sights and Scenes in Utah," or "A Glimpse of Great Salt Lake." 22–34.

THE GARMENT THAT WILL NOT SHAKE.

AFTER men make fools of themselves they go out with the silly notion that they have nothing to do but shake themselves, and the result of their folly will all be gone. But to their great disappointment they soon learn that they cannot shake it off.

Samson tried this, only to find that his strength was gone. It is generally said that Samson was the strongest man in the world, and we suppose he was, physically. But he was only a figure of what God has made us all, morally and spiritually. And though we may laugh at the folly of Samson in so unwittingly giving his strength away, do we not do more foolishly than he? How many of us go out in the strength of our manhood and womanhood, only to lay our heads in the lap of Delilah and have our locks shorn! It may be sweet to thus repose in the lap of sin, but soon the announcement is made, "The Philistines come," and we awaken to find that our locks have been shorn, and no matter how hard we may shake, the wonted strength will not come to our rescue. The net has been thrown around, the meshes have been doubled, strengthened and tightened, until every movement has been arrested, and we are left the miserable victims of our own folly.

But how is this? we may ask. A very simple thing it is indeed. It was a very great thing for God to give Samson so much physical strength, but it was a very easy thing for Samson to give it away. Delilah tempted him, but he first placed himself in the way of temptation. Instead of taking to the daughters of his own people he saw a pretty maid among the Philistines, who were heathens and idolaters. She had a pretty face and, no doubt, was a belle of the first water, and his carnality said to him: "How nice it would be to have such a pretty wife!" Yes, the devil throws some very pretty mantles over his most ugly slums. Samson, like many young men of later days, did not investigate deep enough. He saw only the outside of that young woman. Had he known her heart and life, it might have been different. Had he been content to select a wife from his own people, he might have preserved his strength as well as the glory of Israel. Young men, keep your eyes open to these Philistine maids. They may rob you worse than Delilah robbed Samson.

The young man starts out in life with as much moral strength as Samson had physical strength. He feels so strong that he has no need of counsel from either parents or friends. He looks around and sees a great many things that are as enticing as was the appearance of this fair maid. Late hours, cigarettes and cigars give him a passport to the associations of the young Philistines home and home associates are too tame now—and they lead to the street corners, to the clubs and beer houses. It is true he at first feels that such things, places, and associates are not the safest for good morals; but then he is a young Samson, and if things get a little heavy he will just go out and shake himself. Don't you see how easy that is to do? I can smoke or I can let it alone. I can swear or I can refrain. I can drink a glass of beer or wine or I can let it alone. These are loose things and a good shake will rattle them to the ground.

But remember, young man, that while these things are sapping your moral strength, the Philistine maid is growing older and stronger. After awhile she will commence teasing—a craving appetite for these things is beginning to draw on you, and as they draw, you become weary and, to get ease, you pillow your head upon her lap and if you sleep she fastens the cords. You may break a few, only to give her an opportunity to see where your strength lies. Then your moral power takes a last sleep; your locks are shorn, and when you would free yourself you cannot; your eyes are punched out and you are a captive—worse, a slave. The ties of home are severed, friends have forsaken you, your good name is no more, your character has been blackened, and you are not wanted among the good. Shake yourself as you will, the Philistine web clings to you; your strength is all gone, and you can no more do as you would wish, but as you must.

The drunkard will tell you that he can let drink alone if he wants to do so; but why does he not do it? Because he has lost his strength. His will-power is gone and he does not will any more, and could not if he would. All over our land today are such shorn Samsons. And they have all got there by pursuing the same course. Like causes produce like results.

What has been said of young men may be equally true of young women—not exactly in the same line of temptations, but in others equally blasting in their results. It is deviating from the path of right and entering the wrong way. The Philistine young men are as much to be avoided by our young women as the maids are by our young men. They are unregenerate, idolatrous, unchaste, and take their delight in the destruction of virtue; and this is the young woman's strength and glory. Rob her of this, and she has sustained a greater loss, morally, than did Samson physically when his locks were shorn in the lap of Delilah. God has delegated to our mothers and daughters the power of saving the world to virtue and physical purity, and sad will be the time when this power is trailed in the dust by the carnality and deceitfulness of the uncircumcised of heart and conscience.

But, to make a still closer application of this love story of Samson, let us apply it to our young brethren and sisters, who are supposed to possess a greater portion of this power—to those who have received the gift of the Holy Spirit, and who have placed themselves in such a relationship to the Father that he declares: "No man can pluck them out of my hands."

A word to you, dear young brethren and sisters. In choosing your life companions, where do you go, and what is your standard of fitness? Is it among your own people, or are you, too, inclined towards the Philistine men and maids? Do you act more wisely than did Samson? Next to your religion, this is the most important step in your life, and thousands, right here, have allowed to be thrown around them a web which they are never able to shake off. Remember, dear young brethren and sisters, that the matrimonial pledge cannot be shaken off at pleasure, and if you get a Delilah she will get your head on her lap, your locks will be shorn, and your power for being good and doing good will be lost.

Right here a large field for discussion opens up before us; but we cannot enter it at this time. It is of importance to use great wisdom in making this choice, on which so much depends, both in time and eternity. As a warning, we set before you this story of Samson. Study it well, and do nothing that may endanger your peace, affect your religious convictions or imperil your soul. In this matter, above everything else, go to your Heavenly Father and seek that wisdom which alone is safe. Remember, in making your choice, that there are no attractions so attractive as purity, virtue, and the religion of Jesus—a soul fully consecrated to the Lord and his cause.

ESSAYS

"Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth."

TRUST IN JESUS.

He who stilled the foaming breakers,
On the sea of Galilee,
Now can calm the troubled waters,
Of life's raging, sin-tossed sea.

O'er us when the waves are sweeping,
And the night has settled dark,
He will list our bitter weeping,
And will guide our drifting bark.

Safely through the hidden portal,
Into bliss, which angels know;
Streams of joy unknown to mortal,
These, will ever o'er us flow.

"Wait and trust him," is the message
Given unto us in love:
And it is a joyful presage,
Of the rest and peace above.

THE BAPTISM IN THE JORDAN.—Dec. 6, 1889.

THE baptism took place on Dec. 6, 1889, in the presence of two friends and travelling companions of Mr. Houston, and of Dr. Talmage's party, with their dragoman, muleteers, and an Arab sheik, who had been retained to protect the travellers on their journey. Such precautions are necessary now in the neighborhood of Jericho, as they were in the Savior's time, when "a certain man going to Jericho fell among thieves."

THE JOURNEY

commenced at Jericho. This is the third of the cities which have borne that name, and was the city of our Lord's time. The first of the three was that of Rahab, to which the spies went, and which was destroyed by Joshua. The second was built by Hiel, who paid the penalty pronounced by Joshua (Josh. 6:. 26) against the man who should rebuild the city. His eldest son died when the foundations were laid, and his youngest son died when the gates were set up. There it was that Elisha "healed" the spring of water (2 Kings 18–21) and near there Zedekiah the king was defeated, and his eyes put out. (2 Kings 25: 5.) The third city was built under Herod the Great, and improved by Archelaus, who diverted a stream of water from Neera to water the plain, and it became a city of palms. It was located about half an hour's journey from the site of the earlier city. This Jericho still flourished in Christ's time, and there he wrought the cure of the blind man (Matt. 20: 30) and paid his memorable visit to Zaccheus.

From this place, so rich in sacred historical associations, Dr. Talmage and his party set out, mounted on horses, in a southeasterly direction for the north of the Dead Sea and the River Jordan. About half an hour's ride brought them to Riha, or the modern Jericho, a collection of houses built in modern style, and boasting a hotel of some pretensions, whose chief support comes from foreign visitors to the Holy Land. As they passed the hotel three travellers emerged from it whose dress and manner suggested their being

FELLOW COUNTRYMEN.

The suspicion was confirmed when their leader greeted Dr. Talmage in English. It appeared that he was a Bostonian, and he expressed the pleasure it would afford him and his companions, as they also were going to the Dead Sea and the Jordan, to make the trip with the preacher's party. The Bostonian frankly said that he had been concerned in the publication of a hostile criticism on Dr. Talmage's sermons, but he trusted that would not prevent their good-fellowship on such an excursion. In this view Dr. Talmage good-humoredly concurred, and the two parties rode on together in company. In such a scene, and on a road so hallowed by the most wonderful and momentous events of Bible history, merely personal concerns were forgotten in the solemn

ASSOCIATIONS OF THE LOCALITY.

Surrounding them were the mountain-peaks on which Jacob must have looked when with his "staff he crossed this Jordan," and again when he returned, having "become two bands." Over that road the Children of Israel must have passed when, having miraculously crossed the Jordan, they went toward Jericho to make their strange processions around its walls. This was the last earthly scene on which the eyes of Elijah rested when, over against Jericho, beyond Jordan, in a chariot of fire, with horses of fire, he "went up by a whirlwind into heaven." And still more impressive was the thought that he who went about doing good had passed this way, had looked upon the same scene, and had worked miracles in those same surroundings.

Little remains now by that road to please the eye. Everything appeals to the imagination and the associations of the past. Ruins are everywhere, and even the structures which still stand, modern as they are, seem to have been built out of the ruins of more imposing edifices, degenerate descendants of far nobler predecessors. Only nature is beautiful there, and she will put on a more intense loveliness still in that coming time when "the mountains and the hills shall break forth into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands. Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle-tree, and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off."

Conversation on the subject that was uppermost in all minds—the past glory and present decadence of the country—occupied the party as they rode through the scenes whose names and associations had been familiar to them from childhood. The remarks of the new acquaintances proved that they were well read in Bible history, as well as generally intelligent. About an hour's ride brought the party to the shores of about which so many strange stories have been related by travellers. It is an inland sea about forty-six miles long, and ten wide at its greatest width. It receives the waters of the Jordan at its northern end, but has no known outlet. The tradition that its exhalations are so poisonous that birds flying over it are overcome and fall into it dead proves incorrect, as the visitors saw several flocks of them pass over it unharmed. But no fish live in it, and on tasting the water it was found to be much more saline than ordinary sea-water, and to have a peculiar taste not unlike sulphuric acid. Several members of the party laved their hands and faces with the water and found that when dry a perceptible deposit of salt remained on the skin. The region bears marks of natural convulsion, especially the deep ghor or chasm by which the Jordan flows into the sea. The whole aspect gives color to the belief that the sea owes its existence to a sunken depression, and that its placid waters lie over the site of the cities of the plain which were destroyed because of the moral degradation of their inhabitants. It is still a gloomy, desolate scene, shunned by the Arabs and having no village or human habitation on its borders.

THE RIVER JORDAN,

to the Christian the most interesting stream in the whole world, was not far away, and the travellers, after spending half an hour on the shores of the Dead Sea, remounted their horses and rode thitherward. In about three-quarters of an hour their eyes were gladdened by a sight of the river. Not a great river, certainly. Its length from source to mouth is only 200 miles, and only 136 in a straight line. Its width varies from 45 to 180 feet, and its depth from 3 to 12 feet. An insignificant river, truly, but how rich in associations! Its waters have been parted to let the great host pass through dry-shod. (Joshua 3: 15, 17.) They parted again when Elijah and Elisha passed through (2 Kings 2: 8), and they gave the first proof that the spirit of Elijah had fallen upon Elisha. It was in its despised waters that Naaman, the Syrian, dipped seven times and was cleansed of his leprosy. (2 Kings 5: 14.) But still more precious are its New Testament associations. In one of its numerous quiet eddies John baptized when "all Jerusalem and all Judea went out to him and were baptized of him in Jordan, confessing their sins" (Matt. 3: 5, 6), and—crowning glory of all—in its waters the God-man himself was baptized, and as he came up those very banks the heavens opened and the voice of God himself proclaimed his Sonship. (Matt. 3: 16, 17.) It was indeed a privilege to stand upon those banks, and one that was evidently appreciated by every member of the party.

On the way Mr. Houston had fallen into conversation with a member of Dr. Talmage's party, and had delicately broached a request which was evidently a matter of very strong desire on his part. He said that he had often heard Dr. Talmage preach, and had been much blessed under him. He would count it a high privilege to be baptized by him, and a still greater privilege if the rite could take place in the Jordan. His desire was communicated to the Doctor, and he cheerfully consented. Three o'clock was the time set for the ceremony, and meantime the tents were pitched, and one of the servants who could swim tested the bottom of the river for a suitable place for the ceremony, as there are deep places at intervals near the banks, and an accident was possible.

It was a delightful day, and though the month was December, the temperature was that of a summer day. At the hour appointed, Dr. Talmage emerged from his tent clad in a long brown robe borrowed for the occasion from the sheik. It was not unclerical in shape, though somewhat short for the Doctor's tall form. The candidate for baptism had secured a long white robe from the Nubian attendant of his party, and thus clad, came to the bank where Dr. Talmage and the other members of the party waited. It was an interesting group, composed of the American ladies and gentlemen, the sheik, the muleteers and other attendants.

THE SERVICE

was opened by singing. No hymn-books were at hand, but the ladies of the party had provided for that deficiency while the tents were being pitched and the Doctor and Mr. Houston were robing themselves. They had written out from memory the stanzas, so appropriate to the occasion and the scene, which now rose in cadence on the river bank:

"On Jordan's stormy banks I stand,
And cast a wishful eye
To Canaan's fair and happy land,
Where my possessions lie.

"O the transporting rapturous scene
That rises to my sight:
Sweet fields arrayed in living green,
And rivers of delight!

"When shall I reach that happy place,
And be forever blest?
When shall I see my Father's face,
And in His bosom rest?"

It was a solemn scene; even the sheik was affected by it. To the surprise of the Americans he prostrated himself on the earth and prayed to Allah, as if the spirit of worship could not be resisted. As the singing ceased, he rose and closely watched the ceremony. Dr. Talmage then led in prayer, invoking the divine presence and blessing. Opening his Bible, he then read from the third chapter of Matthew the account of the baptism of Jesus. The customary questions to the candidate were asked, and satisfactory answers were given. Dr. Talmage then read his commission in Matt. 28: 19, 20, "Go ye therefore and teach all nations, baptizing them in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," etc. Looking the candidate squarely in the face, Dr. Talmage said: "In this historic river, which parted three times to let God's people pass dry-shod, in which Naaman plunged seven times for healing from dire disease, and from the banks of which Elijah ascended in equipage of fire, and in which Christ was baptized, and which for ages has been the symbol of division between earth and heaven, I baptize thee." Then taking the candidate by the hand, he led him into the water. Reaching the sufficient depth he immersed him three separate times, repeating the usual formula: "In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost," after which he pronounced the benediction. At the close of the ceremony Dr. Talmage said: "As the ordinance was observed under the direction of no particular denomination of Christians, and no particular church could be responsible for it, I feel it my duty to report what I did to the Church universal."

After the ceremony, and when Dr. Talmage and Mr. Houston had resumed their usual attire, the latter went to Dr. Talmage and thanked him for acceding to his request; and said, reverently, that it would be a blessed and hallowing memory with him so long as he lived. Dr. Talmage took out his note-book and wrote a baptismal certificate, stating the time and place of the administration of the rite, which he handed to Mr. Houston.—Christian Herald, New York, March 10, 1890.

"WHEREUNTO" AND WHEREIN."—Col. 1: 29; 1 Pet. 1: 6.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

To Sister Florida J. E. Etter, of Virginia:—

THE holy oracles are full of mighty pivot words, which swing us into the abysms of the divine mysteries, and open the mighty sluices of the exhaustless Reservoir of grace, "filling us with all the fullness of God." Nothing but the influx of very God can sustain the soul in experiences like those recorded in 1 Cor. 4: 11, 12, 13. No one can exhibit Christ faithfully without forms of opposition that amount to crucifixion. To be willing to testify for Jesus at all times as a personal and present Savior, and the Eternal Enemy of all degrees and shades of sin, is itself a painful self-immolation.

When we plant a seed of corn we plant the whole stalk with all that appertains thereto. Leaf and tassel, and the full corn in the ear are all in the single grain we deposit in the soil. So when the Divine Life is implanted by faith, we receive the whole Christ, and with Him "all the fullness of the Godhead," to be harmoniously developed in the life. "Being justified by faith, we have peace with God through our Lord Jesus Christ." Rom. 5: 1. Peace with God brings "the peace of God which passeth all understanding, keeping our hearts and minds through Christ Jesus." Philpp. 4: 7. "The God of all patience" enthroned in the heart will necessarily perfect in us the patience of God.

"The love of God shed abroad in our hearts by the Holy Ghost," will beautify our inner and outer being with all the glory of 1 Cor. 13: 4 7. The faith which the Gospel insists on, which is the synonym of salvation, is not the natural credence which accepts truth in general, and prompts to obedience by the impulse of personal interest in the provisions of the cross, but the absolute and eternal commitment to Him whose person and grace we accept. "The grace of God that bringeth salvation to all men hath appeared." Titus 2: 11. Of this fullness of grace on grace all believers receive. John 1: 16. And this superabounding grace, this glory of the Only Begotten of the Father, is not an impersonal manifestation, but the very incarnation of God. John 1: 14.

We must be saved ourselves before we can be proper "stewards of the mysteries of God" for others. True "faith stands not in the wisdom of man, but in the power of God." 1 Cor. 2: 5. College-wise is not grace-wise, although it "speak with the tongues of men and of angels. Education is our duty, as it prepares capacity and material for the spirits' use. But the devil may know as much as Gabriel, and may hold a high Scripture colloquy with Incarnate God Himself, and remain devil still. An enriched intellect and highly polished morality may wear the mark of religion so naturally and nobly, that, in human judgment, it passes for the king's gold. But flesh is flesh, no matter how it shines with Gospel varnish. "Marvel not that I said unto thee, YE MUST BE BORN AGAIN."

The same indwelling Christ that brings righteousness and peace, and sets us in normal relation with God, also brings love and wisdom and power, to adjust our relations with man, enabling us to preach and work "in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." 1 Cor. 2: 4. The faith that appropriates Jesus, carries with it the consciousness of salvation, and has wonderful "trust through Christ to Godward." 2 Cor. 3: 4.

It comes boldly unto the throne of grace under cover of the blood of Jesus, and asks whatsoever it will, and gains its suit in the name of Jesus. Heb. 4: 16, and 10: 19–22. John 14: 13, 14, and 7: 5. It casts out fear, for its life and impulse and aspiration, and petition, and joy are all divine. "I live, yet not I, but Christ liveth in me." Gal. 2: 20. It is not that we are doing our utmost to meet the divine claims, but it is GOD that worketh in us OF HIS GOOD PLEASURE BOTH TO WILL AND TO DO." Philpp. 2: 13. His name and person are inseparable, and without His name we have no access to the Father. Matt. 1: 21; John 14: 6; Eph. 2: 18. What miserable self-deceptions do we practice in the use of the "Name which is above every Name." How hypocritically and blindly do we say in our prayers, "Our Father who art in heaven," and "for Jesus' sake." "Be not deceived; God is not mocked." Gal. 6: 7.

The "wherein" of our text is all-sufficient inspiration and motive for the "whereunto." "If God be for us, who can be against us." "Kept by the power of God, through faith unto salvation." In such a "wherein" it is safe and rational "greatly to rejoice," though we may be "in heaviness, through manifold temptations." Nothing too strong for Omnipotence. All the batteries of hell can make no dint on the shield of faith. You may die in the contest, but your life and work are of God, and will live on after you have passed within the vail. John 12: 24 is for all true workers.

If we have really died with Christ, and risen with Him, living by and for Him, we will know the double mystery of John 11: 25, 26. Be not discouraged in your lowly, circumscribed field of labor. If you cannot preach from the housetop and compass sea and land, dress the sores of some neglected Lazarus, or hold the cup of cold water to some fevered lips, and put stockings and mittens on the shivering limbs of some orphan. Always plenty to do for Jesus, as he has His claimants every-where waiting our service in His name. The "open face" of 2 Cor. 3: 18, will show us Jesus wherever we turn or gaze.

I eat twice a day, seldom taste meat, touch no pastry, use no dainties, have neither horse nor cow, nor sheep nor pig, nor dog nor cat, because I hear a thousand voices near and far, calling for every cent that I do not need for the pressing necessities of life. The Blood of the Lamb is sprinkled on the believer's purse no less than on his heart. If we fail to baptize our pocket-book, using our money as we list, we put Christ to an open shame. Last year the Christian world spent four billions of dollars in sheer superfluities. In this matter so-called Christendom held even scale with unbelievers; shame, SHAME.

One-tenth of that waste would have put four hundred millions of dollars into the treasury of Jesus Christ. How can our Brethren be so disloyal to their Redeemer as to live like sybarites, grasping for money as if it were on par with Eternal Life; and as if gold and tobacco, and carnal gratifications were sweeter luxuries than self-denial for the salvation of the millions who have never heard the name of Jesus? The life of God in Emmanuel is the law of every believer, wrought out afresh in all its mystery and beauty and glory of the Holy Spirit.

Pray with "strong crying and tears" for such utter self-annihilation that the God of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of glory," may have no hindrance in the fulfillment of Eph. 1: 17, 18, 19. That is not idle closet-rhetoric, but the burning prayer of a man whose soul is aflame with Pentecostal fire for every soul that names the name of Christ. It is the very essence of the "whereunto" of Col. 1: 29. We have grown so formal and conventional in religion, that perhaps not one of us knows what is meant by 1 Cor. 1: 30, and Eph. 3: 16–20, and Col. 3: 1, 2, 3.

Let such passages as the following be as real to you as the fact of your being. 1 Cor. 10: 31; Col. 3: 17, 23, 24; Gal. 5: 14; 2 Cor. 5: 14, 15. Amid all the discords and trials, and sorrows, and disappointments, and suffering incident to the Christian life, train your soul hourly to chant the psalm of peace and rest and victory recorded in 2 Cor. 6: 4–10. Bring the highest, divinest motives into all your little duties, and put the impress of Jesus on all you touch. Nothing is either great or noble if it bear not the blood-prints of the cross.

Pride and selfishness are subtle elements, and spoil many a showy service, ostensibly in the name of Jesus. If our hands are glorified by the nail-marks, your cooking and washing and baking become sacraments. We already sit in heavenly places in Christ, and live on earth the life of the upper realm, and breathe the atmosphere, and speak the language, and exhibit the peculiarities of our Fatherland. There are thousands on thousands of professing Christians who daily belie by their words and works their claim of participation in "the inheritance of the saints in light."

Those who are born of God have their heart and treasure with him, and count all things but loss and filth for the excellency of their joint-heirship with Jesus. Philpp. 3: 8, and Rom. 8: 17. Those who know God by faith and perfect consecration, will not fail to realize Luke 10: 19. A life of faith is a life from God, in God, to God, running freely into all the moulds of its divine-human archetype, rejoicing in sympathy with the whole periscope of the divine purpose, past, current, and prospective, "with joy unspeakable and full of glory." Heb. 12: 2; Philpp. 4: 4; 1 Pet. 1: 8. Open your heart of hearts to 2 Cor. 4: 6, so that you may know and show the glorious beatitude of 1 John 1: 7.

You are eager for something to do for Jesus, and the first absolute essential is to know Him as truly as the air you breathe, the food you eat, and the blood that pulsates in your organism. This gives us His wisdom, eyes, ears, hands, feet, love, tenderness, self-sacrifice. The world will give little heed to our talk, if our walk does not demonstrate our divine lineage. Ponder deeply and constantly John 17: 21, 23. That is God's great argument to win sinners to salvation.

Be of good cheer, my dear sister, Jesus did not live in vain, nor will any one who reincarnates Him. "He is faithful that promised," and if "thou be faithful unto death, he will give thee a crown of life." Rev. 2: 10. The furnace may be hot, but the gold will only be the brighter.

"Christ! I am Christ's! And let the name suffice you,
Lo, for me too He greatly hath sufficed;
With no winning words I would entice you,
We have no pleasure and no goal but Christ."

ISRAEL'S FIRST KING.

BY S. B. MILLER.

SAMUEL becoming aged, could not long remain as judge of Israel. His sons were unfit to succeed him. They had been tried and found to be entirely unworthy. The people were unwilling to have such gross immoral characters to rule over them. They come to Samuel asking for a king. Samuel goes to God for wisdom to direct him in the matter. The Lord yields to their request, and directs Samuel in the choosing of their king. He not only directed Samuel, but he directed Saul to Samuel.

Saul was a son of Kish, of the tribe of Benjamin. While going about his present duties, he is anointed captain over Israel. After his anointing, Samuel communed with Saul. How much he told him we do not know, but doubtless he gave him good counsel concerning the great work which would soon devolve upon him. As Saul goes toward his home, he is especially prepared to assume his kingdom by the visitation of the spirit, which "turned him into another man," and "gave him another heart."

In due time the tribes were convened at Mizpeh for the choice of king by lot. Here Saul was publicly selected as king and Samuel told the people of the principles of the kingdom, and wrote them down in a book. Some of the people,—the roughs, evil-minded men of Belial,—refused to acknowledge Saul as king. He paid no heed to their insulting remarks, but went to his home in Gibeah to wait till his hour was come. He had not long to wait.

The tribes east of Jordan were invaded by Nahash, king of the Ammonites. Saul called together the warriors of the nation, and went over against them. A great victory was gained, which firmly established Saul in his kingdom. He still had the advice and counsel of Samuel.

Two years after he had begun to reign, the Philistines raided the harvest fields of the Israelites. Jonathan, Saul's son, attacked a garrison of Philistines at Geba and conquered it. This daring act aroused the Philistines in all their power. Saul's army was unarmed, and were so terrified by the hosts of the enemy, that many deserted, and hid in caves and thickets.

Neither king nor people dared to act without the sanction of God. Samuel had agreed to come to Gilgal within seven days, and offer and make known the will of God. Six days had gone and the seventh was rapidly passing, and still Samuel came not. Saul feared every moment's delay. He was tempted to be his own priest and offer sacrifices, which was contrary to the law. He did so, and as he had finished the offerings, Samuel appeared on the scene. Saul had openly disobeyed a positive command of God. Samuel announced to him the consequences,—the kingdom could not continue in his family.

The people were not to suffer destruction and God gave them the victory this time; Saul gets one more chance to redeem himself. On the southern border of Israel dwelt a nation of fierce marauders,—the Amalekites. For the peace of Israel God desired them to be destroyed. Samuel brings to Saul the command to go down against them and utterly destroy them and their possessions.

Saul went with a large army and nearly annihilated them, but he spared their king and with the consent of the people brought home the best of the cattle and sheep. Then it repented God that he had made Saul king, because of his disobedience.

Samuel is grieved for Saul and prays that he may be forgiven. He goes down to Gilgal to meet him. Saul makes haste to inform him that he had "obeyed the command of the Lord." But he had not. He had only done what seemed good in his own eyes. He is convicted of his falsehood by the voices of the animals he had spared. Saul sought to improve upon God's plans, and save much for the good of the cause which might have been wasted.

His excuses are utterly in vain. Samuel reminds him that he owes his exaltation and power wholly to the God whom he has disobeyed. Once more he is informed that he shall lose his kingdom. The divine influence was withdrawn from him and an evil spirit entered into him. He grew worse and worse. His faults developed into iniquity and treachery. Saul still held the throne but Samuel is directed to anoint David, the son of Jesse, as his successor. Soon after his anointing David is sent for, to come to the court of Saul and charm away his spells of insanity by his skill in music. He soon returns to his father's flocks in Bethlehem. Some time after his return the Philistines gather in great numbers in the valley of Elah, to battle against Israel. A certain giant challenges the army of Israel for forty days. David went down to the camp to see after the welfare of his brothers, and while there slays this giant with his sling.

His daring conduct won the admiration of Saul, who once more took him to his court. Here David grew into favor with the people, and especially with Saul's son, Jonathan. Saul grew jealous of David because of his popularity. He plots David's destruction in various ways, but all is of no avail. Finally David is compelled to flee for his life. Saul endeavors to find him and slay him. At two different times David had Saul's life in his own hands but would not slay the Lord's anointed.

David flees to the Philistines for protection. They give him the city of Ziklag, and while residing there the Philistines once more go up to battle against Saul's army. The armies meet in battle in the plain of Jezreel and on the slopes of Mt. Gilboa. The battle went sore against Saul, the archers hit him and he was sorely wounded of them. He asked his armor-bearer to slay him but he refused, so Saul took a sword and fell upon it and took his own life. Then the Philistines "slew Jonathan, Abinadab and Melchishua, Saul's sons." "So Saul died and his three sons and all his men, that same day together." The enemy cut off his head and hung his body and the bodies of his sons on the wall of Beth-shan. But the inhabitants of Jabesh-gilead, on hearing of Saul's fate, went the same night and took the bodies from the wall of Beth-shan and brought them to Jabesh and burned them there, and buried their bones under a tree at Jabesh.

Thus ended the life of the first king of Israel, "who ate of the fruit of his own way and was filled with his own devices."

GATES OF BRASS.

BY ELIZABETH H. DELP.

"Thus saith the Lord to his anointed, to Cyrus, whose right hand I have holden, to subdue nations before him; and I will loose the loins of kings, to open before him the two-leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut; I will go before thee, and make the crooked places straight: I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron."—Isa. 45: 1, 2.

THE captivity of Judah, extending through a period of seventy years, was finally terminated by the fall of Babylon, that queen of cities. Volumes have been written, describing this city. Its walls, canals, palaces, and hanging gardens have thus become familiar to us. In these walls were one hundred gates, all made of solid brass; they were over against every street that led to the river. These brazen gates were always open in the day, but carefully closed and secured at night.

Belshazzar was king of the city when Cyrus besieged it. He was king in name, but Nitocris, the queen-mother, exerted her influence and thus, to some extent, governed the kingdom. The city was surrounded by the army of Cyrus. The king,—presuming upon the impregnable strength of the city,—the provisions stored within it, that a ten years' siege could not exhaust, felt secure, and rested at ease in his kingly palace. He loved pleasure and revelry as is shown by the festive scene on that memorable night, when, with a bold impiety that his predecessors would have turned from with horror, wicked and daring as they were, he commanded his servants to profane the drinking vessels of the temple of Jehovah.

But the end was near. Upon the wall before the king all beheld the mysterious hand, tracing in strange symbols, the will of God. Written in Samaritan characters, the Chaldeans could neither understand nor decipher them. Daniel interpreted the message of the Lord. The words literally rendered are, "He hath numbered, he hath numbered, he hath weighed, and they divide."

In the meanwhile Cyrus had marched into the city through the channel of the river. God preceded him to open before him the gates of brass, for if these gates, which closed the avenue leading to the river, were shut, as they always were at night, the soldiers of Cyrus would have found themselves in a veritable death-trap. But on the night of festivity, within the royal palace, by unparalleled negligence, they were left open and thus the troops penetrated to the very heart of the city. In that night was Belshazzar, the king of the Chaldeans, slain.

Great is the Lord! If he wield the sword of justice, a nation is removed in a day, and we must acknowledge, "He doeth all things well." He has only to send forth his word and a thousand instruments are at hand to execute his command.

We have an unchangeable God. In the apostolic age he was still the Helper of his people. When Paul and Silas, after preaching the name of Jesus, were imprisoned, the Comforter filled their hearts with peace, and songs of praise ascended to heaven. It was the fulfillment of the promise, "I am with you alway," and the strong walls of the dungeon were as the gates of brass in the hands of God, and the apostles were set free.

When Christianity had so degenerated that the few, who were faithful and served the Lord according to his will, were ridiculed and called Puritans, they left their native land and braved the dangers that menaced them in the wilds of America. The Lord opened the way for them; he was their strength and now, with thankful hearts, we can praise him for this land of freedom.

Thus it has always been. What seemed mighty hindrances in the way have proved to be as the gates of brass. The doctrine of the Nazarene proved unpopular, yet his disciples performed miracles and taught in his name. The Christians were hated of all men, reviled, imprisoned and tortured, yet the Lord added to the church daily. Persecutions, long and bitter, were waged against them, but to-day there is not a standard, about which there are so many believers as there are around the cross, and the cause will move on, until the kingdoms of this world are become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ, and he shall reign for ever and ever.

THE MISTAKE OF MAN.

BY E. R. YUNDT.

We often hear men say, "I will give you nothing without value received." There seems to be a tendency on the part of nature to degenerate when left to herself. This is true both in the vegetable and animal kingdom,—man not excepted. If there is any difference, man seems to be inclined to go down the scale more rapidly than any other creature. The two kingdoms were pronounced good by their Maker. How much better must man be, since he is formed in the image of the Creator and blessed with the many endowments that are found only in him. He is given the mind with its reason, judgment and intellectual powers, which other creatures do not possess.

Even with these God-given blessings, which are his and his alone, we find him descending the ladder of morality. Take the child. How often do we find that an infant, as it grows older, inclines toward evil and that, too, before it is hardly capable of being taught. This inclination does not vanish with years, but rather increases, not only in childhood and youth, but also in manhood. This happens within the circle of good society and leads us to believe that man lowers himself.

Habits play an important part in this work. The busy scenes of life tend to degrade man in some respects. The question, "Does it pay?" is asked by every one, and it should be asked. The error is made in our judgment. Too frequently we do not judge from a proper stand-point. Not that we do not know any better but we do not want to know, i. e., we pretend that we are doing that which appears right to us. If there is any probability of our receiving interest on our money we do not hesitate to loosen our purse-strings. Unfortunately, man is inclined to want his reward at once, and that, too, in the very way in which he wants it. He never looks for higher blessings, for immortal blessings, but expects all rewards to be given to the mortal being and to it alone. Looking for it to come in this way, but being disappointed even if it comes, he does not see it and so ceases to give.

There is one particular way of aiding those that need it, which generally is considered all right and worthy of imitation at all times and under all circumstances. It is giving an entertainment for the benefit of some unfortunate one. Persons, after going to such a place and being asked about it, and even without being asked, may be heard to say, "I thought I would go that I might do something for that poor man in that way." Is this the object of the audience? I say, No. The very statement which we have quoted expresses something quite differently. If a man gave his money without value received, there could be no doubt as to his really desiring it to aid the needy; but this he does not do. He prefers to attend a concert where he will receive immediate returns for his money. Is that giving to help the poor man and his family, or is it for his own enjoyment? His actions are all the answer that is needed.

This is by no means the worst feature in giving to entertainments for the benefit of the unfortunate. First, we are encouraging those who are already of a disposition to give, not to give to worthy causes. Second, we are training others not to give when it is necessary and beneficial. Paying an admission fee is by no means giving; it is investing for the immediate good of one's self and not for the good of others.

Is there any reason for our being surprised that people do not give readily for missionary and other church work? There cannot be, if we but consider our own conduct and thereby see that we have taught them to pursue the course in which we find them. As long as we adopt plans of our own for raising the necessary means, we cannot expect to succeed, when we ask persons to give freely and without a consideration.

God's plan and our plans will not work harmoniously. No wonder it requires so great an effort to obtain the money for the support of missions! We try to give them value received. This, of course, cannot be done for if we did, there would not be much left. As people come to see this, they think it does not pay to go to church concerts, festivals, etc. Of course the committee finds itself wanting in the required means. The next thing to be done is to visit the residents of the community with a subscription paper, but they do not believe in giving after they have paid admission fees to church entertainments, etc., the proceeds of which are used in church work. Then comes the complaint, "People are becoming so miserly; they will not give to a good cause, whereas the fact is, we have educated them not to give.

If we want to be successful in raising means for our church work, we must accept God's plan and banish ours. If we wish to see this and the following generations on a higher plane in respect to giving without immediate returns, and confidently awaiting God's richer blessings, let us remove the causes that are leading them downward.

WAS HE GAGGED?

At a convention in Florida a few years ago, one of the delegates occupied rather much time airing his views, greatly to the annoyance of the convention. Finally one of the members moved to make the troublesome delegate vice president of the convention, with a seat on the platform. The motion prevailed, and the astonished man was conducted to his seat of honor (?) on the platform. He troubled the convention no more with his speeches That is one way of getting rid of a troublesome speaker. But the editor of the Cynosure tells how the Masons in the M. E. Rock River (Ill.) Conference succeeded in silencing the young and eloquent Barton Cartwright some years ago, while he was making a strong speech against the lodge. Our readers can make their own comment. The editor says:

"An old member of the Rock River M. E. Conference, Illinois, who has seen many years of honorable and honored service in California, remembers the time when that body was as heartily opposed to the secret lodge as it has since been subservient to that great evil and enemy of the church of Christ. The reminiscences he has given us are the more interesting and important because of the commanding influence of this Conference in the Methodist denomination.

"It was the custom, thirty-five years ago, in this Conference, to question candidates for admission to its membership and the ministry, whether they belonged to a secret society or not; and in that early and honorable day Methodist preachers had to clear themselves of this heathenish smirch, before they could have the mark of good standing.

"The father of Rev. Mr. Phelps, of Los Angeles (who is one of the most popular pastors of the M. E. church in California, and grandson of old Father Catterlin of blessed memory), was presiding elder in the Rock River Conference, and was very faithful to the young ministers in this respect. Old Peter Cartwright, the pioneer and hero of early Methodism in Illinois, was also a well-known opposer of the lodge. 'Masonry came from the devil, and will end in the devil,' was his sententious and emphatic answer to the secret order question in that day.

"At one meeting of the Rock River Conference, at Galena, the questioning was sharp, and the judgment against the lodge severe. There had been some lax discipline before this, for members of the Conference were present who objected, and were either inclined to defend the secret orders, or at least to palliate the sin of membership in them. Bishop Hamline was present; he was at that time the Nestor of the church, and wielded his great influence with moderation and meekness. The present generation no more venerates his name, than his saintly character was then esteemed. He was appealed to for a decision of the dispute. 'No Methodist minister ought to belong to a Masonic lodge,' was his reply.

"At Aurora, either the next year, or some proximate session of the Conference, the discussion was renewed, and there was enough friendship for the lodge expressed to draw out some of the ablest members against it. The debate was long, and the interest profound. Among the champions for a pure and undefiled religion was Barton Cartwright, son of the pioneer Peter, and 'a chip of the old block.' He was a man of intense earnestness, and popular in the Conference in spite of his homely features. He was speaking with great power against Freemasonry when the Conference adjourned, and he was permitted to finish his argument next day.

"During the night a dark scheme was hatched in the brain of a Freemason named Hardin, yet, we believe, a member of the Conference. He dreaded the effect of Cartwright's speech and knew of no reply. Masonry could not reply, in fact, to such a vindication of truth and righteousness. The eloquent speaker must be broken down by a trick. Hardin bustled around with a few sympathizers to whom he had entrusted his secret, and a fund was raised to purchase a silver set for Cartwright. They, moreover, persuaded Bishop Simpson, who was present, to aid them in their plot. It is a question whether he knew the whole of it; but he certainly became a willing and successful agent in making the presentation speech. When the discussion was resumed and Barton Cartwright took the floor for his closing argument, Bishop Simpson interrupted him and asked in an apologetic sentence that he wait a moment. He then began to expatiate on the virtues of the speaker, the renown of his father, the popularity of both, and the esteem of the ministerial brethren, which ought justly to have some expression. These remarks were prolonged as much as possible, while the amazed Cartwright stood ready to explode his denunciation of the lodge iniquity, his great mouth agape, and his strong and homely face the playground of puzzled and conflicting emotions. At last the Bishop saw that the end was gained, and that he had put off the dreaded and hated discussion long enough. He uncovered the silver set, and presented it with a careful commendation of the grace of the givers. Cartwright was thunderstruck. His speech was knocked out of him. Only enough of it was left for him to exclaim with such a tone of disappointment and indignation, that it lingers yet in the memory of those that heard it—'Gagged again! Gagg-d again!' It would be an interesting question, how the Rock River Conference became so grievously perverted on the lodge issue, so that fifteen years after this incident a large proportion of its members were Freemasons, denying Christ in the lodge while professing to preach in his name in the churches. But that day of Masonic influence and popularity is, thank God! also past. The young men are no longer going into the lodge. The older men are realizing their folly, and some of them repenting it. The day hastens, let us pray, when it shall again be the rule that members of this great Conference shall openly repudiate a system that has only antagonism for the Christian church, and shall lead the van in separating all who have taken the name of Christ from it."

INTERESTING HISTORY.

BY B. C. MOOMAW.

I SEND for publication the copy of a letter written by the famous "Stonewall Jackson," shortly after the beginning of the war. This letter contains matter of great interest to our Brethren, as it lifts the curtain of thirty years, and gives us a realistic glimpse of those troublous times. If I mistake not, the "eighteen," to whom Gen. Jackson refers in this letter were our Brethren, who, after their arrest, were taken to Richmond and confined in "Castle Thunder," a notorious jail. They were shortly after liberated through the strenuous exertions of Eld. B. F. Moomaw and others, and allowed to return to their homes.

There were some interesting circumstances attending their arrest and incarceration, which the writer has received by tradition, and which he has reason to believe are substantially correct. When they were intercepted and searched, their captors were astonished to find no arms. They all had good horses and a wallet of hard money, but no guns. This was beyond the comprehension of the soldiers. Of course they lost their money and horses.

These brethren were used to well-filled tables at home, and consequently got very hungry on the hard fare of the Richmond jail. But the Lord touched the heart of an honest baker, who sent them plentiful provision, as soon as he learned of their state, and would not receive a cent for it. When brought into court to answer for their conduct in refusing to fight, some friend of the church pleaded their cause, and did it so effectually that the judge became very much affected, and turned away to hide his emotion. Very soon he ordered their dismissal, and they returned home, rejoicing in their providential escape. The history of the Brethren in the South, during the war, is a "romance of Providence," and ought to be written for the instruction and encouragement of future generations.

The incidents related in Gen. Jackson's letter show clearly the Invisible Protecting Hand. When it was written, the Brethren had not yet secured the passage of the exemption act, which shielded them from military service. They were completely at the mercy of the commanders of the military districts. An ungodly tyrant in Jackson's place could have easily oppressed the Brethren grievously. Of all the generals of the Confederacy Stonewall Jackson was, in his way, the most conscientious and religious. He was incapable of an act of tyranny and injustice. Unlike many great men who can be mean toward the weak and helpless, Jackson was in the habit of treating the poorest and humblest man with all the consideration of a gentlemen. Unlike, therefore, a great majority of his companions in arms, he respected the conscientious scruples of the Brethren, before they were legally exempt from military service, and employed them in other ways than fighting.

That T. J. Jackson, and not some other man, was set over the military district which included so many of our people, was clearly the doing of that overruling Providence which spread its sheltering wings over the heads of the Brethren and Mennonites of the Valley.

JACKSON'S LETTER.

MOUNT JACKSON, VA., March 21, 1862.

COLONEL S. BASSET FRENCH,

Colonel:—Please request the Governor to order 3,000 muskets to Staunton at his earliest convenience, for the militia of this district. None of the militia beyond this County, except 500 from Augusta, have yet arrived, but they are turning out encouragingly. There are three religious denominations in this military district, who are opposed to war; eighteen were recently arrested in endeavoring to make their escape through Pendleton to the enemy. Those who do not desert will, to some extent, hire substitutes; others will turn out in obedience to the Governor's call, but I understand some of them say they will not "shoot." They can be made to fire, but they can very easily take bad aim.

So, for the purpose of giving to the command the highest degree of efficiency, and securing loyal feelings and co-operations, I have, as those non-combatants are said to be good teamsters and faithful to their promise, determined to organize them into companies of 100 each, rank and file, and after mustering them with the legal number of company officers into service, assign them to the various staff departments without issuing arms to them. But if at any time they have insufficient labor, to have them drilled, so that, in case circumstances should justify it, arms may be given them.

If these men are, as represented to me, faithful laborers, and careful of property, this arrangement will not only enable many volunteers to return to the ranks, but will also save many valuable horses and other public property, in addition to arms. It may be that officers for these companies would be a useless expense. Please inform me as to the Governor's decision as to whether it is obligatory on me to assign them officers. All I have pledged myself is, that so far as practicable, I will employ them in other ways than fighting, but with the condition that they shall act in good faith with me, and not permit persons to use their names for the purpose of keeping out of the service. Please direct your answer to Woodstock. I send this by express to Orange Courthouse. Lest it should not reach you, a copy will be sent by mail via Staunton.

[Signed.] T. J. JACKSON,
Major General.

THE COMMUNION.

BY J. H. BEER.

AMONG the many things taught in the Holy Scriptures, the one under consideration is of great importance, and deserves the careful consideration of every child of God.

We are frequently censured for not permitting others to commune with us. Communion is based upon union. Union means oneness of mind. There is a principle underlying this important subject, as taught and practiced by the Brethren church. We hope those who look upon us as selfish and narrow-minded in our views, will give us credit for being at least consistent.

Since we are to give to every man a reason for the hope within us (1 Pet. 3: 15), we will notice some of the more prominent reasons for declining to invite others to commune with us.

1. Before each love-feast we have our deacons to visit each member in the congregation, to inquire whether all are in the true faith and in peace one with the other. If they are not, we see that all the difficulties in the way of a Communion are properly removed. The church has not that privilege with the members of other churches, and some of them may practice things we are convinced are not right. Now, to admit all others claiming faith in Christ, would be to admit some who are unworthy of the Communion, and we would virtually endorse in our actions their practice. The church has no control over those not members of her body. Paul says (1 Cor. 5: 12, 13), "What have I to do to judge them that are without? Do not ye judge them that are within? But them that are without God judgeth. Therefore put away from among yourselves that wicked person."

2. We have no control over others going to war and uniting with secret societies, which are contrary to the teachings of the Gospel. Admit them and we surrender the principles of the church.

We feel thankful to God that there is a church that upholds the principles of the Gospel to-day. It is not because we are narrow-minded, but it is for principle that we stand. We have the Mormons and others. If we admit them, we are partakers of their evil deeds. 2 John 1: 10, 11. We would then have no regulations at all. This is just the condition of a large majority of the professors to-day. They claim that anything is right, but they have no foundation for their faith. We do not want to insinuate against those who do differently, but if they do not want to obey the Gospel, they have that liberty. Every one has the act of volition in his own hand. John 12: 26. "If any man serve me, let him follow me."

3. The different modes of baptism have an important bearing on this question. If we invite oth[illegible] to commune with us, we must thereby endo[illegible] single immersion,—a practice we do not believe in. "Whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Other people do not believe in feet-washing; hence, to invite them to wash feet with us, would be to ask them to sin, for they would have no faith in it. Let us labor for that union that is taught in God's Word; that will make us one in Christ, that the world may know that he has sent him.

"A LOVING word is always a safe word. It may, or it may not be a helpful word to the one who hears it; but it is sure to be a pleasant memory to the one who speaks it. Many a word spoken by us is afterwards regretted; but no word of affectionate appreciation, to which we have given utterance, finds a place among our sadly remembered expressions. Looking back over our intercourse with a dead friend or fellow-worker, we may, indeed, regret that we were ever betrayed into a harsh, or hasty, or unloving, word of censure or criticism in that intercourse; and we may wish vainly that we had now the privilege of saying all the loving words that we might honestly have spoken while yet he was with us. But there will never come into our hearts at such a time a single pang of regret over any word of impulsive or deliberate affection which passed our lips at any time. We have reason to be on our guard in our speech in most directions; but we can be fearlessly free in our loving utterances. Apart from any question of the good we do to others by our words of love, we are personally the gainers, for now and for hereafter, by every such word which we speak out explicitly; and we are sure to be the losers, now and by and by, from every such word which we ought to have spoken and failed to speak."

"SOME men enjoy work as work, and are glad to have a part in it. But more men enjoy watching others work, and will even endure hardship for the sake of seeing a job of work completed. If a heavy stone column is being raised in front of a new building, or an iron safe is being lifted to the upper window of a warehouse, men will gather to watch it; and there are those who will swelter under a burning sun by the hour, or will stand in a drizzling rain, to see the busy workers finish that undertaking, when it would be difficult to get one in five of those watchers to do an honest job of work for a reasonable amount of wages. And so it is in duty-doing generally. Not all of us are ready to do our own share of service, at the wages God proffers; but most of us are glad to watch others do their share of service, even though we have no part in the profits."

A VOICE OUT OF THE CLOUD.

BY C. H. BALSBAUGH.

How blessed to die unto life more abundant! How blessed to speak and testify for Jesus after our voice is hushed in death! Pre-eminently this applies to our sainted brother James Quinter, of precious memory. "He being dead, yet speaketh." His "Life and Sermons," edited by his daughter, will bring him to fresh resurrection in the minds and hearts of thousands who listened to his eloquent expositions of divine truth while in his earthly tabernacle.

His life was a rare outshining of incarnate Deity. There is no Christian life that is not very God in the flesh; and brother Quinter might have said without presumption, "Be ye followers of me, even as I also am of Christ." 1 Cor. 11: 1. But he would have been the last man to make such an appeal. Grand as was his intellect, his modesty and meekness were grander. Personally I had but few opportunities to test his higher qualities, but our correspondence extended over a period of thirty years, and all his letters were running over with love to God and man, profound humility, and a loftiness of conception, relative to "the high calling of God in Christ Jesus," which was exceedingly inspiring and self-annihilating. Not the shadow of egotism could I ever discover in any of his words or ways. A beautiful, God-configured soul was that of James Quinter, and "His Life and Sermons" now offered to the public will be to many readers like "a voice out of the excellent glory." The calm, sublime exodus in the midst of "the great congregation," surrounded by weeping thousands on whose prayers his soul was wafted from this terrestrial scene will thrill every reader. Many hearts will melt, and many eyes overflow when they read the record of his passage dry of foot across the Christ-cleft Jordan. Philpp. 1: 21 is his biography and obituary.

His sermons are granitic. They are void of polish save the native brightness of "the truth as it is in Jesus, and the inseparable rhetoric of good grammar. They deal with God and the soul, with righteousness and sin, with judgment and reconciliation, with faith that appropriates its object, and issues in holiness like God's. His words are gold from the mine and mint of Golgotha, gold like that which paves the streets of the New Jerusalem.

If we had a God-taught, God-moulded, God-reflecting saint among us, it was Elder James Quinter. Environments had their influence, but a more nobly individual man, living in the mystery and power and glory of 2 Cor. 3: 18, it would not be easy to find. The book that is to represent him is well worth studying and exemplifying. The "savor of life" still lingers around his burning heart utterances.

WHY IS IT?

BY J. W. KEISER.

WHY is it that there are so few earnest workers to be found? Why are there so few who will spend and be spent for the cause of our Blessed Master? We look around on all sides, and we see the adversary of souls busily engaged in his work of deceiving the human family. He has his agents at work all over this broad land of ours, using every means possible to accomplish his work of leading men and women in the broad road that leads to woe and misery. Then, why is it that church members will sit down on the stool of do-nothing, and fold their arms and say, "There is nothing that I can do," when souls are perishing on almost every hand, for the want of the Bread of Life? Dear brother and sister, if this is our condition, let us, with renewed energy, unite our forces and march out against the enemy of our souls, wielding the Sword to the right and left, until Satan, with his mighty host, will be conquered by the powerful influence of the children of God.

Why is it that the brethren and sisters of our Fraternity will send their children to schools, conducted and controlled by members of other Fraternities, and then wonder, and ofttimes weep, because they do not unite with the church of their choice? The wise man says, "Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it." Then, how can we expect them to go with us, if they have never been taught the principles of the Gospel in their purity and simplicity?

Why is it that some brethren claim they are too poor to take our church paper, and when you visit them at their homes, you find two or three secular papers lying on the stand? Remember, dear reader, that the young and rising generation will, to a greater or lesser extent, pattern after us; and if we do not place good and pure literature before our children, they will read something worse,—something that may lead them astray, and finally be the means of their destruction.

Why is it that men and women will work and toil from early on Monday morning until late on Saturday night, and when Sunday morning comes, not even go to the meeting or Sunday-school because it is too warm or too cold, or the weather is too inclement, or they are too tired, or have some other as frivolous excuse? Do we not read in the Sacred Scripture that we are not to neglect the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is? Do we not also learn that we are to bear one another's burdens, and so fulfill the law of Christ? Are we helping our brother to bear his burden, if we absent ourselves from the house of worship and let our brother go there to sing and pray alone, and then get up and talk to a few only, while we are at home, either sleeping, or reading the secular news, or passing our time in some other way?

Why is it that parents, on a Sabbath morning, will call the children, dress them and get them ready for Sunday-school, while they themselves stay at home? Remember, dear parents, some one has to take charge of those little ones and teach them, and who knows the wants of the children better than those who have the care of them, and if all would remain at home, who shall teach them?

Then, dear reader, let us, one and all, be more earnest in the work of our Master, that, as we fall, —one here, another there, we can have the assurance that we have done what we could in warning those around us to flee the wrath to come!

LIFE OF JEPHTHAH.

BY MARY E. GARBER.

As the names of great men of to-day are recorded in the history of the world, so is the name of Jephthah, a ruler of Israel, recorded in the Bible.

Jephthah was a Gileadite and a man of great strength. His father's children expelled him from the family, and he went down to the land of Tob. Some time afterward he became a famous military man. Then the Ammonites declared war against Israel, and the elders went to bring him home out of the land of Tob. They asked him to come and be their leader, as they had heard of his great genius as a warrior, and expected him to fight with judgment, courage and success.

In answer to the request, Jephthah asked, "And did ye not hate me and expel me from my father's house; and why are ye come unto me now when ye are in distress?" After repeated entreaties, he offered to be their leader, if they would allow him to be their chief after the war was ended. This they agreed to do.

Jephthah seems to be doubtful if they really would allow him to be their leader, perhaps because he had experienced their ill-will towards him before. But the elders of Gilead told him that the Lord would be their witness. This should remind us of the fact that whatever we say, God is a listener. Jephthah presents to us a fine picture of justice, fair reasoning and unwillingness to proceed to the dreadful cruelties of war, and to defend the rights of his country in sending these messages.

Being now declared chief of the tribes on the east side of the Jordan, he sent messengers to the king of the Ammonites to know the reason of invading the lands that belonged to Israel. He was desirous of disposing things in a fair way, and at the same time to prevent the shedding of blood.

Just before the war began, Jephthah vowed a vow that he would offer as a sacrifice whatsoever first came from the doors of his house when he went home. The battle was fought, and the Lord delivered the Ammonites into Jephthah's hands. On his return home, his only daughter, with timbrel and with dance, was the first to come from his house to meet him. But, how sad, when he told her his story! She, however, seemed willing to be offered as a sacrifice, but only begged him to allow her to go up and down the mountains, to bewail her virginity. After she was done mourning, she returned to her father, who did with her according as his vow but whether he offered her as a sacrifice, or devoted her life to the service of the Lord is not agreed.

Four days in each year, the daughters of Israel went to weep for the daughter of Jephthah. He judged Israel seven years, and was buried in one of the cities of Gilead. In his life we see some admirable traits of character, and yet his vow seems to have been a rash one.

The Gospel Messenger

Is the recognized organ of the German Baptist or Brethren's church, and advocates the form of doctrine taught in the New Testament and pleads for a return to apostolic and primitive Christianity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and maintains that Faith toward God, Repentance from dead works, Regeneration of the heart and mind, baptism by Trine Immersion for remission of sins unto the reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, are the means of adoption into the household of God, the church militant.

It also maintains that Feet-washing, as taught in John 13, both by example and command of Jesus, should be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper, instituted by Christ and as universally observed by the apostles and the early Christians, is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening or after the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ.

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That the principle of Plain Dressing and of Non conformity to the world, as taught in the New Testament, should be observed by the followers of Christ.

That the Scriptural duty of Anointing the Sick with Oil, in the Name of the Lord, James 5. 14, is binding upon all Christians.

It also advocates the church's duty to support Missionary and Tract Work, thus giving to the Lord for the spread of the Gospel and for the conversion of sinners.

In short, it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discords of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe.

BRO. G. B. ROYER has just returned from Cedar County, Iowa, where he held a week's meetings.

ALL orders for tracts should be sent to the address of the Brethren's Tract Work, Dayton, Ohio.

BRO. I. J. ROSENBERGER is now at Melbourne, Iowa, intending to spend the month in that State.

BRO. D. L. MILLER'S address is now, Augustegade No. 22, 1 Sal, Amager, Copenhagen, Denmark.

BRO. HENRY BRUBAKER, of Texas, has been chosen a member of the Standing Committee for next year.

A CONGREGATION has been fully organized at Esterly, La., where there is a small band of members.

CONSIDERABLE correspondence reached us just a little too late for this issue. It will appear next week.

THE District Meeting of Middle Iowa, to be held in Dallas County, Sept. 24, is to settle on a location for the Annual Meeting of 1892.

A CONGREGATION was recently organized in Oklahoma Territory, to be known as the "Paradise Prairie church." A very pretty name indeed!

BRO. LEMUEL HILLERY, who is now in Indiana, is expected to hold some meetings in the Woodland church, Michigan, sometime during the fall.

SISTER DE MOND, of the Woodland church, Mich., is supposed to be the oldest sister in the Brotherhood. She is 103 years old.

WE learn that Bro. R. H. Miller is expected to deliver a series of doctrinal discourses in Ray County, Mo., sometime this season, if health will permit.

IF even we could see ourselves as others see us, many would not believe their own eyes. Others would not stop to look at themselves if they had a chance.

A GENUINE case of leprosy was discovered at the County Hospital of Chicago, a few days ago, and also one in New York a week previous. The latter is a Chinaman, but nothing is known of his ancestors.

THOSE who send letters in an unsealed envelope, bearing only a one-cent stamp, should bear in mind that they violate the postal law. All written letters, going out of your town, sealed or unsealed, require two cents postage.

BRO. C. C. ROOT, of the Ozawkie church, Kans., says: "Our love-feast is to be held Oct. 10, after which we intend to continue meetings for some weeks. Eld. D. B. Gibson, of Cerro Gordo, Ill., is expected to do the preaching."

A CERTAIN church proposes to let certain spaces on the walls to enterprising advertisers to defray church expenses. What is it that the Christian (?) conscience will not do for money! Still, that is no worse than a church lottery.

A CONGREGATION has just been organized near Dayton, Washington. Bro. Ernest Hopkins was elected to the ministry at the same place. He will be remembered as the author of a pamphlet entitled, "The Law and Sabbath" and also other tracts.

WHILE from home attending prayer-meeting, Sunday, Aug. 16, Bro. A. B. Fisher's residence, in Fort Scott, Kans., was burned. This was indeed unfortunate for himself as well as the church, for the love-feast was to have been held there. But we are glad for one expression at the close of his letter in this issue. He says, "Where there is a will, the Lord will prepare the way." That is the way to take misfortune. It is the will that makes the man. The Lord can and will help those people and churches that try to help themselves.

YOU are discouraged. You have met with obstacles in the way, and now cease to push your work because of these hinderances. That is just what Satan wants you to do. If he can discourage you, he will do it. It is now a question for you to decide, who is going to conquer, you or Satan? If you sit still, Satan will conquer. If you push your work to the utmost of your ability, you will succeed. Satan is strong, but the firm will of a Christian, backed up by the power of God, is stronger; and God will help all those who try to help themselves.

YOU will find good and evil, more or less, in everybody. Very few persons are so bad but that there is something good about them. Then, on the other hand, there are few indeed so good but that there is some evil about them. Hence it may truthfully be said: "There is none good, no not one." And yet nearly all are good, but not good enough to be entirely free from evil in some form.

IN the mission field we need hard-working men more than great learning. Scholarship, other things considered, is an important help in any department of life, but there is nothing that counts on mission fields like hard, earnest work. The hardest work is not in the pulpit, but outside of it, among the people, from house to house. The man who goes out on missionary work, certainly should not be a lazy man.

WE are all walking or living epistles, known and read of all men. The question is, Do we, as such, speak for Christ or against him? Our actions tell the story. We need not tell it in words. People read with their eyes. It is hard for a living epistle to deceive the eye. People may forget your long prayers and smooth words, but they will never forget your actions. Remember, actions speak louder than words.

THE right way in life is often the most difficult, especially in the beginning. But it will pay to follow after the right. The reward in the end will more than pay for all the hardships in the beginning. God stands ready to bless all those who struggle for the right. The road to sin is easy in the start, but the end thereof is death. It leads to where Satan stands ready to curse, for he has no blessings to offer.

IN this issue will be found Bro. Miller's first letter. It was mailed at Southampton, a seaport in England, near which the ships pass on their way to Bremen, which is about 600 miles to the north-east. It will be read by our readers with intense interest. The description of a midnight storm on the ocean is graphic. We expect another letter shortly, in which we will be informed of the safe arrival of the party in Denmark. Should any of our readers wish to know more concerning the vessel Aller, on which Bro. Miller sailed, or any other vessel of the same line, or wish to take a voyage across the ocean, or inquire after rates of passage, etc., they will address L. A. Plate & Co., of Mt. Morris, Ill., and full particulars will be furnished with pleasure. Since writing the above we have received word from Bro. Miller, stating that they had reached Hamburg, Germany, and were in good health.

IT is best not to spend time trying to find out the day the millennium will commence. Hundreds of men have tried it, and failed every time. It is far better to concern ourselves about the practical things of life, and let others spend their time over dates that not even the angels pretend to understand. Let us so live that when Jesus does come, we will be ready to meet him. If we are doing our duty, he may want us to keep right on at our post, for this will not be an idle world during the one thousand years that Christ shall reign on earth. We would like Jesus to find us right at our desk, hard at work, when he does come, and we can see no reason why every Christian might not have a similar feeling respecting himself and his work. When Moses was informed of the day that he should die, he kept right on at his work. Why may we not have the same disposition? It will certainly be well for all of us if we can feel that we are ready for the coming of the Lord at any time. If we are his, he will be sure to find us.

THE Brethren in Northern Indiana are having some glorious harvest meetings this season. They not only thank the Lord for their great abundance of crops, but give to the missionary cause as the Lord hath prospered them. Our people all over the Brotherhood would liberally contribute to the missionary fund if an opportunity were afforded them.

A SEVENTH Day Adventist in Tennessee conscientiously rested on Saturday, and then hitched up his horse and went to plowing on Sunday. He was brought into court and convicted of Sabbath breaking. He appealed to the Supreme Court of the State, where the decision of the lower court was sustained. So it is now settled in Tennessee that a man must not work on Sunday, even if he does rest on Saturday.

WE know of a congregation whose members were determined to have a successful series of meetings. They gave their time right up to the work, and hauled their neighbors to meeting, and then returned them to their homes. This was kept up night after night. The effort resulted in a glorious meeting and a number of conversions. This might be repeated in many congregations in the country. Try it. Let everybody work, and something will be done.

THE Pope of Rome is greatly in need of money, and, in order to replenish his purse, proposes to place the "Holy Coat," as it is called, on exhibition at the cathedral in Treves for six weeks. Treves is an ancient city on the Moselle River in Germany. The Catholics claim that this is the seamless coat worn by the Savior, and they now and then show it for gain, charging people so much for seeing it. Thousands are just foolish enough to pay money in support of such superstition.

THE Jews have bought a large part of the beautiful rich plain of Esdraelon, and will colonize there. Says a recent traveler: "This is one of the most fruitful localities upon the earth. A few years ago nothing could be raised here but an enormous growth of weeds. If an attempt was made to raise cereals or vegetables, the crops would be carried off by marauding hordes from the east. This is all changed now; and this fertile plain is yielding its bountiful harvests to God's chosen people, the children of Israel."

WE can sin with our imaginations as certainly as with our hands. We can, and perhaps do, permit our imaginations to revel in sin that we would never think of committing in reality. True, it is all in the imagination, and hid from all mankind, but may it not be sin in the eyes of God who can see the actions in the heart as plainly as our fellowmen can see our real actions? Realizing the fact that God should be the constant companion of our imaginations, the necessity of keeping our minds in perfect accord with his, must indeed seem a special duty.

WHAT is the use of our sisters, or brethren either, trying to imitate the world in so many of its foolish and uncalled-for fashions? Why not adhere to our plain, neat and becoming attire? If the world wants to worship Madam Fashion, let it do so, but as for us, let us worship the God of heaven, and do only that which becometh men and women professing godliness. The vain and foolish fashions of the age do not become people who are seeking a higher life in Christ Jesus. He who rightly adorns the hidden man of the heart, needs no worldly display to attract attention. Do what is right, live right, dress plainly and neatly, but do not spoil a plain, Christian garb by hanging a lot of worldly nonsense on it.

THE General Missionary Board will hold its next meeting in Mt Morris, Oct. 6. All business intended for that meeting should be sent to G. B. Royer, of this place.

BRO. E. K. MCKEEHAN, Jonesborough, Tenn., Treasurer of Tennessee District, instructs us to say that 540 copies of the Minutes have been sent to that District, and that all the churches receiving the Minutes should at once remit to him two cents per copy for the same, in order that he may settle with the publishers for the Minutes. This has reference to the churches in Tennessee, North and South Carolina and Florida.

EVERY congregation ought to have a good and convenient place for baptizing, especially where there are frequent accessions to the church. It may require an effort, and some expense, but it certainly ought to be attended to. It is very unpleasant to baptize in water not at all suitable, and to some it is repulsive. If possible, the water should be clean and the place suitable for work of that kind.

WE notice that several of the State Districts will hold their District Meetings this fall. We hope to receive the Minutes of each, as well as a report of all the Meetings. These Meetings may be made quite useful to the church in many ways. In addition to queries generally considered, much attention ought to be given to missionary work. This is a growing feature in our District assemblies, and ought to be encouraged and enlarged. We feel that it might well become the leading object of these meetings. On such occasions well-prepared sermons on important questions might also serve an excellent purpose. Then we should not use too much form. Come together with a view of enjoying the meeting, and make it an occasion of social as well as religious enjoyment.

TALMAGE AND TRINE IMMERSION.

ON another page of this issue will be found the interesting report of the baptism of Mr. Houston, in the river Jordan, by Rev. T. De Witt Talmage. In next to the last paragraph it will be noticed that the candidate was immersed three separate times. People who maintain that trine immersion is used only by a few who happen to be unpopular, may do well to consider that the most popular preacher in America passed by all the popular modes of modern churches, and gave his preference for the very baptism that has long since been discarded by many churches. Trine immersion was the common mode in the river Jordan, for the Greeks still come to the sacred stream to baptize, and they have used trine immersion from the time Christianity was introduced among them in the days of the apostles until the present. Furthermore, it is altogether likely that not one case of single immersion was ever known within five hundred miles of Jerusalem until more than 500 years after the death of Christ. If there is such a case on record it has never been pointed out by the advocates of single immersion. We presume the reading of the article will be of some encouragement to our people. Mr. Talmage is himself a staunch pedo-baptist, hence his example is considered of more than ordinary force. Mention of this was made in the MESSENGER before, but we now give the entire report complete, so our readers can preserve and use it. It is copied from Talmage's own paper, and may therefore be considered reliable. Other papers have referred to it but omitted the trine immersion part. Some have even put it in tract form, by omitting what is said of the three acts. But we give it all complete.

EDITORIAL WANDERINGS.

Number Two.

On board the Aller,
1870 miles from New York.

ON Friday, July 31, we reached New York and at once set about making the necessary financial arrangements for our trip. Through the courtesy of Major Chas. Newcomer, our Mt. Morris banker, we carried a letter of introduction to Kountze Brothers, bankers of New York City, from whom we obtained a circular letter of credit, available in all the foreign countries we shall visit. By means of this very convenient arrangement we can go to a bank in almost any of the large cities of Europe, Asia Minor, or Eastern Africa, present our letter of credit and secure money up to the amount of our deposit in such sums as we may have use for. Should the letter be lost or stolen, the money is safe as no one can draw it from the banks except wife and myself.

In the afternoon we had the pleasure of meeting Bro. Hope, who is to be our traveling companion to Denmark, Sweden and Norway. Only those who know what it means to take such a long journey can fully realize how glad we were to meet our dear brother ready to accompany us.

On Saturday, Aug. 1, at 10 A. M., we go aboard the Aller and take possession of our little room which is to be our ocean home for the next ten or twelve days. We find the ship elegantly and even luxuriantly fitted up. Everything that will conduce to the comfort and safety of the passengers is to be found on board the staunch ships of the Norddeutscher Lloyd Line of steamships. The great size of the ship gives us a sense of security as soon as we come aboard. Friend Geo. Miller, wife and son, of Wichita, Kans., wife's maternal aunt, Mrs. Lydia Hawkins, sisters Mary Geiger and Lizzie Snyder, and brethren T. T. Myers and E. J. Zern, all of Philadelphia, meet us on the ship and see us off from port.

Promptly at 1 P. M. the great ship begins to move from her moorings, and amid strains of music, the cheering of the multitudes on the wharf, the waving of handkerchiefs and the tears of parting friends, we move slowly out into the river and at last are off on our long journey. Long after the faces of our friends were lost sight of to the naked eye we watched them through our marine glass and caught a last glance of Bro. Zern, as the wharf, by a turn in the river, disappeared from our view. We shall not soon forget the kindness and consideration of these dear friends who came so far to see us off and wish us Godspeed upon our voyage. Our steamer moves rapidly out of the river into New York Bay, then passing Sandy Hook we are out upon the restless ocean, and even before darkness of the first night at sea comes down upon the world of waters we have had our last look at our dear native land. The dim coast line fades away and our glass reveals westward only the line where the dark waters of the ocean and the blue sky blend into one.

The day we sailed was bright and clear, a harbinger, we thought, of a pleasant voyage. Sunday, Aug. 2, was one of the most delightful days we ever spent at sea. The ocean was as calm and smooth as an inland lake. One seldom sees the waters of the Atlantic so quiet. The day was spent in conversation, reading and meditation, and we enjoyed it to the full. We thought of the church service at home and felt that we were being remembered in the prayers of God's people.

We shall miss more than all else on our journey, the sanctuary privileges. The day passed quickly away and it proved to be the only pleasant day of the voyage across the Atlantic. At noon, having been twenty and three-fourths hours on the high sea, we had made 320 sea miles.

Monday morning the fog-horn sounded and we entered upon a period of storm, rain, and fog which continues up to this writing, Saturday, Aug. 8. The storm was at no time as heavy as we experienced on the Werra on our home voyage in 1884, but its long continuance made the voyage rather unpleasant. A gentleman on board who had crossed the ocean a number of times said it was the roughest voyage he had ever made. Many of the passengers were very seasick and some suffered terribly. Wife had her share of this distressing malady but the writer escaped with but few of the incipient symptoms. It is singular that the medical fraternity have discovered no remedy for seasickness. The enterprising physician who will find a preventative or a remedy will not only prove to be a public benefactor, but will at once find himself in the possession of a large fortune. Wife's remedy is a sure one but it don't meet all the emergencies. It is expressed in four words, "Stay off the sea."

We read over and over again the Psalmist's description of a storm at sea and we are sure that it was written in the light of personal experience. David, doubtless, had gone down to the sea in ships and passed through an experience something like we have had for the last six days, when he wrote: "They that go down to the sea in ships, that do business in great waters; these see the works of the Lord, and his wonders in the deep. For he commandeth, and raiseth the stormy wind, which lifteth up the waves thereof. They mount up to the heavens, they go down again to the depths: their soul is melted because of trouble. They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man and are at their wits' end. Then they cry unto the Lord in their trouble, and he bringeth them out of their distresses. He maketh the storm a calm, so that the waves thereof are still. Then are they glad because they be quiet; so he bringeth them into their desired haven. Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men."

During these days of cloud and storm we have had an occasional rift in the dark storm-cloud, letting through the blessed sunlight, and we know that behind the blackness and darkness shines the glorious sun. So in this life the child of God may meet with dark and gloomy seasons, but be they ever so dark, through some rift in the clouds comes a ray of light and hope from the dear Father above, and we know that God's goodness lines with silver the darkest and gloomiest clouds.

On Thursday evening, Aug. 6, the storm culminated in a heavy rainfall. A little before midnight we went out on the upper deck. The darkness of the midnight storm enshrouded the ship and the sea as with a huge black veil. The rain came down in torrents. The wind howled and shrieked through the ship's rigging, driving the rain and spray in blinding sheets across the deck. The sea roared, and the great waves broke against the staunch iron sides of the Aller with the roar of muffled thunder, throwing the spray high over the deck. An occasional ray of light from the ship's lantern and electric lamp revealed the high, crested, angry waves tossed to and fro by the fury of the storm. The shadowy form of a watchman half hidden, half revealed by the ship's uncertain light gave proof that our faithful captain was at his post, and true to the trust reposed in him. The ship plunged resistlessly onward into the wall of thick darkness. Sheltered by a portion of the upper deck and a spread of canvas, clinging to the ship's rail, we stood alone on the deserted deck, in the midnight darkness, with the roaring tempest all about us. Alone, and yet not alone. Our thoughts go back to the loved ones at home, and then to him who said to the angry sea, "Peace be still;" to him who holds the winds and the waves in his hands. And then, from the fullness of the heart, we sung, "Nearer, my God, to thee." We are at best but a poor singer, but that song was not for human ears, and the words seemed to swell out and rise above the mighty tempest, and as the song went up there came into the soul a great calm, the calm of a peaceful, restful trust in God, and heaven seemed nearer that night on the storm-tossed sea than ever before. We went below and laid down on our narrow berth and slept as sweetly and as soundly as if we had been in our own bed chamber in Mount Morris.

This letter must close at this point, as the ocean mail is being made up for Southampton. It was written under the difficulties of a rough sea. On Tuesday, the 11th inst., if all is well, we expect to land at Bremen and then our first care will be to hunt for a hat store. On Monday before the storm grew severe, while standing on the deck, we made an unwilling contribution to the sea. The lively breeze lifted our hat gradually and carried it just beyond our grasp. It seemed so near and yet so far away. It disappeared over the side of the ship and we saw it no more. Judge James G. Jenkins, one of the passengers, very kindly loaned us a traveling cap.

After landing at Bremen, if the Lord will, we go directly to Copenhagen; thence to Malmo, Sweden. From this point we go northward, through Sweden and Norway, to Trondhjem, Hammerfest and North Cape. Bro. Hope has translated the historical sketch on the way over into the Danish, and by order of the Tract Committee we will have a number printed in the Scandinavian. This, with Bro. Vaniman's tract, "The House we Live in" will be generally distributed on our journey, and Bro. Hope will hold meetings as opportunity is found. Those who care to do so may trace our course North on the map. We hope to reach Hammerfest by the 20th inst., from whence, if all is well our readers may expect another letter.

D. L. M.

BEFORE we go too far following our inclinations we should first examine them and see whether the bent of the mind is in the right direction. To follow one's inclination is the proper thing to do, provided the inclination is right. The bent of the mind is just as apt to be wrong as right, hence the necessity of examination.

WE have many real earnest working sisters in the Brotherhood. The public knows but little of them. They are best known to the Lord. Just now we are reminded of one, a young sister, who works out by the week. Each year she sends to this office five dollars to have the MESSENGER sent to herself and others. Not long ago she gave fifty dollars to one of our public institutions. She also gives one dollar each month to the Missionary cause, and is laying up money besides. How does this compare with those who object to giving to the Lord's cause one cent a week?

CORRESPONDENCE.

"Write what thou seest, and send it unto the churches."

☞Church News solicited for this Department. If you have had a good meeting, send a report of it, so that others may rejoice with you. In writing give name of church, County and State. Be brief. Notes of Travel should be as short as possible. Land Advertisements are not solicited for this Department. We have an advertising page, and, if necessary, will issue supplements.

From Denver, Colo.

WE learn that Bro. and sister D. L. Miller have embarked for their visit to the Holy Land. We look with interest to their future correspondence in the MESSENGER.

August has come in with showers, but yet it is very hot. Each day seems to increase the heat. It would seem that just now a person would appreciate, very much, a visit to the mountains, which appear in sight of our dwelling, and yet the nearest point is Golden (the former capital), ten miles distant. But to see a peak here, and another there, covered with snow, in all this heat, certainly would seem to be a cool and inviting resort. We gaze on them in amazement and wonder even from here, and say, "Great and marvelous are thy works, O Lord."

Along the foot-hills lie the rolling prairie lands, outstretched as far as the eye can see and farther, east, north and south, richly adorned with a green carpet of nature, and the many varieties of wild flowers that are native here. But to a Hoosier it would seem that one more pleasant feature in nature's finishing touch is lacking here,—the verdant, shady woodlands.

While traveling from Wabash to Denver, I formed a short but pleasant acquaintance with brethren D. Troxel and S. Miller, of Decatur, Ill. To one traveling alone and among strangers, their kind words and looks will long be remembered.

In the depot at Kansas City, we met, for the first time, our dear old brother and sister J. D. Trostle, of Hope, Kansas. How glad we were to meet and see their friendly faces! We remember our interview with them with pleasure, and also the kind and fatherly admonition which the dear old brother gave us before leaving the train. Please accept our thanks.

At last we reached our destination in safety and were met by our dear and only brother living, and once more we renewed family ties. My membership at present, through the kindness of Eld. Fesler, is in the Longmont church.

KITTIE HURSH.

Notes from the Second District of West Virginia.

IT has been some months since I have given any news from here. We have two Sunday-schools in our congregation. At this place, near Thornton, Bro. G. W. Annon is Superintendent, and under his care, assisted by other officers, I think the school is progressing finely. There is a singing-school, also, every Sunday, and quite an improvement has been made in singing. The other school is also doing a good work.

I see in GOSPEL MESSENGER of Aug. 11, the advertisement of a book, known as "Selections from the Brethren's Hymnal," containing one hundred and one pieces of music. (I presume it is ready for mailing by this time.) It is just the thing we need. I shall try and have the work introduced in our congregation. There is nothing more soul-cheering to me than good singing, and I hope that each housekeeper will try to have this book introduced into the churches.

We expect, the Lord willing, to have children's meeting at Ross' Chapel near Nuzum's Mill, Sept. 13. We hope that some of our brethren, from the adjoining congregations, will come to our help, so that we may have an interesting meeting for the children.

I feel that we have much to be thankful for. Brethren, let us redouble our diligence and more fully consecrate ourselves to the service of our Master. We have been holding some meetings outside of our regular appointments during the summer, but what the result will be we are not able to tell. One thing we do know, "Paul may plant and Apollos may water, but the increase comes from God." Oh, for more planting and watering! Then we may rest assured that God will give the increase! Z. ANNON.

In explanation of the above report we would say that we had concluded to publish an itemized list of all individual recipients in a pamphlet form, and gave notice through the GOSPEL MESSENGER that all who wished it might notify the Treasurer of the Committee, accompanied by a two-cent stamp, but having received very few orders, and finding that the publishing of such a report will incur a great deal of labor and expense, we hope the Brethren will be satisfied with the general statement given above. However, we have the receipts in our possession for all the money that was sent. We have the receipts of the different committees who made the final distribution, as well as those of the individuals to whom money was sent.

As to the use we shall make of the surplus funds on hand, the Committee has decided that it would be best to devote the entire amount to the preaching of the Word in the localities where help was given. Several brethren will, accordingly, be sent, and kept in the field wherever the respective State Districts may deem it best for them to labor. While the blessing of the Lord was with us in our giving of temporal aid, may we not hope that it will likewise be with us in our spiritual work, so that the name of God may be honored and souls be brought to a knowledge of the Truth?

A report of these evangelistic efforts will be given from time to time.

JACOB D. LINE, Foreman,

A Distressing Accident.

JULY 14 Dorsey Diehl, a fifteen year old son of Bro. B. F. and sister Amanda Kittinger, of the Marsh Creek congregation, near Gettysburg, Pa., met with a sad and fatal accident, which resulted in his death the following day.

In the afternoon he took a team of horses, hitched to the mower, and went to a distant part of his father's farm to mow grass. He had made one round when he stopped the horses, and walked forward on the tongue to re-adjust a coupling strap. Whilst so engaged, one of the horses kicked over the tongue and commenced struggling, which threw Dorsey into the knives. Then, what a struggle,—what a fight for life! From the track the mower made, it would appear the horses headed for home, but the lines became entangled in such a manner as to draw them in a circle. They ran round and round, stopping but once for an instant, then starting on again, dragging Dorsey all the while. When finally the team became so tightened by the tangled lines, it stopped.

Two children of neighbor Tawney saw the accident from an adjacent field, but were too badly frightened to go to the boy's assistance. One of them ran home and told their father who was the first to reach the scene of accident. He found Dorsey sitting in the driver's seat with his left leg dreadfully cut and mangled from the knee to the ankle, and the right arm terribly lacerated and almost severed at the wrist; also otherwise cut and bruised.

He was carried home, the best surgical skill summoned, and everything possible was done for the poor boy, but of no avail,—reaction did not take place, and Dorsey died on Wednesday evening, July 15. He was conscious and in the full possession of his mental faculties, until within a few hours of his death, when, at times, his mind began to wander. He told how the accident happened, and conversed with his parents and those around him. He was calm and composed, did not fret or complain, and seemed to realize his precarious condition.

The funeral took place on Saturday, July 18. Bro. Albert Hollinger, of Cumberland County, Pa., preached a very feeling sermon to a large congregation. Many tears were shed, and we think, perhaps, some good resolutions were made, for surely this was a loud call to all, especially to those who have not yet chosen that "good part."

Truly this was a fiery trial for our dear brother and sister Kittinger. The hand of affliction has rested very heavily upon their household indeed, for June 1 Bro. Kittinger met with a painful and serious accident while out riding with some Brethren from Indiana, who were on their way to the Annual Meeting. In descending a hill, his horse commenced kicking and running, throwing the occupants out and completely demolishing the vehicle. No one was hurt very seriously, excepting Bro. Benjamin, who had his right leg broken, and was badly bruised. He had not yet recovered from the shock his nerves sustained, when this catastrophe came upon him and his family.

Notes by the Way.

AUG. 7 brought around the time when the writer must bid adieu to the little family, and go forth to try to tell the story of redemption to the children of men. And you, who have an abundance of the good things of earth must not think that it is a source of pleasure to leave home, just because we are not surrounded with abundance. Home is home, and the family as dear, though the house is small, and the supply meager, and the number few.

The first place of work was in Platte County, Mo., which is one of the outposts of the Clinton County Brethren's field of work. The only preaching at this point, by our people, is comprised in discourses by Bro. J. E. Ellenberger, prior to the time of our visit now.

The effort during these meetings was to place before our hearers the Scriptural reasons for our faith and practice. Bro. Ellenberger was present, and took charge of the song service, and otherwise assisted in the work. There are but two members living here,—brethren S. B. and George Stuckey.

In the discourses delivered here, the effort was to make the Word of God its own interpreter.

One position is, that if we take a course that does not produce harmony, when all the factors are brought out, we may know that the position is faulty. If we have to leave out any part of God's Word to secure harmony, we may again know that there is a failure. In order to teach the way of life, we must allow the Lord to furnish the proof texts, and we must not expect him to hand them down to us just as we may think we need them. We must search the Scriptures and find out what the Lord has placed therein for our instruction and benefit.

The Lord will not fill the barn with the productions of the earth, unless the plow, drill, reaper and thresher are used in their relation to each other. We ought to know that, while the Lord has placed much good, pure water in the earth, he will not dig a well for us, and even after we have opened up an avenue to the water, the Lord will not put up the pump. And while we may dig the well and put in the pump, the Lord will not even operate the lever to raise the water for us, unless we will attach such machinery as will operate it by means of the wind.

In our preaching in the Christian life, or whatsoever we may give our attention to, we must place ourselves and our efforts in proper relation to God, before we can make a success of it. We should ask him to give us the proper conception of his will to us, and to guide us in our efforts to obtain the necessary information, and also to give us wisdom to make the proper application of the truths of the Bible when we have learned them. When we pray, "Thy will be done," we ought to be sure that we mean to let that will be done in us, even at a sacrifice of our own choice and interest.

While laboring at the above-named place, we were assured that our audience was ready to say, that the Word of the Lord reads that way, though, so far as a church was concerned, their training had been different from ours. We have long since learned to know that human nature is the same now as in Eden's garden. Too often, when God commands us to stop, we want to pass the point at which he bids us stop. Then, again, when he says, "Do a certain thing," we want to omit some of it, or do it in a way a little different from the instruction given by the Lord. It is one of the clearly-defined features of man's nature, to do less than he is commanded, or to put in a little of his own ideas of the case. Almost anything, rather than to make a full and unconditional surrender to the will of God, and yet the will of God is, that we all be saved. All that we have to do, to be saved, is, to comply with God's will.

Aug. 17 Bro. Ellenberger and I came to this (the Clinton County, or Smith Fork church.) Here Bro. Ellenberger is at home. One thing arrested our attention by the way. While the train was stopping at one of the stations on the way, we heard some person set up a loud out-cry, and the first impression was, that it emanated from one who had been bereaved of a friend, and was giving vent to his feelings of sadness. The voice seemed to be that of a woman in a great agony. But while my thoughts were running at a rapid rate, trying to determine the true condition of things, Bro. E., who was so situated as to have a view of the inner workings of the case, turned his head toward me and said, "That man is whipping his boy." Presently the boy (about twelve years of age, or perhaps more), came out of the house in a sullen mood, and a woman (I suppose his mother) took him through a lively course of tongue treatment. All this occurred before a number of the town people, and within a few steps of the car on which we were seated. The boy went to his work again, but not as though he enjoyed it, but because he felt that he could not help himself just then.

Who will weep next over a wayward son! I think such parents have a low idea or conception of Solomon's idea of the use of the rod. That boy will feel that he is greatly disgraced by being made a public spectacle before so many people. His self-respect is gone as well as his affection for his parents. He feels that he is a kind of an outcast. Home has lost all its attractions, and the prison awaits such persons, not because the child was worse than other children, but because of the faulty training. Parents often wonder why their children are so bad, not suspecting that they are at fault themselves. I have to pity such children, and feel sad to think that parents do not do their duty toward their children in mild firmness, when they are small. Then, too, parents should not be scolding and whipping for every little misstep the child may make.

At this writing we are working in the Smith Fork church, near Plattsburg, Mo. Aug. 29th I aim to commence the work in the Falls City, Nebr., church. A. HUTCHISON.

"On the Way."

AUG. 8 the Brethren of the Yellow Creek district, Ind., held their harvest meeting. Bro. Lemuel Hillery did the preaching in the forenoon. In the afternoon a missionary sermon was preached, after which a collection was held, and $20.00 were appropriated for that noble cause. The Yellow Creek church has a territory of only five miles square, and a membership of 125. Aug. 14 the Brethren of Nappanee, Ind., held their harvest meeting. Bro. J. G. Royer, of Mt. Morris, was present, and delivered three discourses for the benefit of all present. At this meeting something over $16.00 was donated for missionary purposes.

Aug. 16 the Brethren of the Whitehead church held their harvest meeting. In the forenoon Bro. W. R. Deeter occupied the stand. Only about one-half of the people could gain admittance. In the afternoon the meeting was held in a grove near by, where all could have the benefit of hearing. Bro. L. Hillery addressed the audience, and gave us a talk on missionary work. At the close of the meeting a collection was taken for the missionary cause, and over $14.00 was donated.

There seem to be more harvest meetings held in Northern Indiana this season than ever before. The cause of this may be found in the abundant harvest we have just gathered. Indeed the Lord should be praised for his tender care over us.

I am made to wonder why our congregations do not wait until all crops are gathered, and then bless the Good Lord for his abundant mercy over us! The day set apart by the President as a national thanksgiving day would suit me best. By that time all crops will be gathered, and then we could have those meetings all on the same day, and no one would feel as though our Sundays were given us for so much feasting.

The weather, at present, is warm and dry. In some localities the drouth has cut the corn crop short. Some fields will yield but a light crop.

J. H. MILLER.

From the Highways and Hedges.

As many desired to hear from us, I would say to all who are interested in our welfare and the work in which we are engaged, that we left our home in Arkansas July 30, on the Cotton Belt Road, for Louisiana. Our first stop and change was at Louisville, about twenty miles South-east of Texarkana, where we changed for Shreveport, La. After a lay-over of about twelve hours we arrived at Shreveport about noon, where we had the pleasure of another delay of about seventeen hours. During our enforced stay at this place we took a look around the city, and after a night's rest, morning came, and with it the 5: 05 train on the Texas Pacific Road.

This brought us to Cheneyville, where we arrived about 11: 30. Here we soon learned that we were doomed for another lay-over of about twenty-three hours, but having to submit to the inevitable, we tried to make the best of it. This stop brought us to Sunday, Aug, 2, 10: 30 A. M. We had expected to be at the meeting, at Jennings, La., at that time.

We next took the train for Lafayette, where we had only to stop about two hours, and finally arrived at Jennings about 3 P. M.

Here we were met by brethren and sisters, and conveyed to the home of Bro. Adam and sister Anna Esterly. It being late in the day, we had no meeting until Monday evening, Aug. 3. Then we had meetings each evening up to Saturday evening. The meetings were held in a schoolhouse, and the regular meeting of the band boys being on Saturday evening, we had to give way, and so our meetings were broken.

On Sunday, Aug. 9, we again met at the schoolhouse for preaching. After meeting one man was baptized, who had made application previous to that time. This closed the meetings at Jennings.

The attendance at these meetings was rather small, but the attention was good, giving us some hope that the seed sown may yet bring fruit to the glory of God.

Monday, Aug. 10, we commenced meetings in the village of Esterly, near where Bro. S. A. Honberger has his home. Here we continued meetings each evening up to Friday evening, Aug. 14.

On Saturday, Aug. 15, at 10 A. M., we met at the house of Bro. Simon Sutter, about two and one half miles from Esterly, for the organization of the church and Communion services. We had preaching at 10 A. M. After dinner we met for organization. All the members present who were in possession of their letters handed them in. They were read and accepted. Then the official members were received in their respective offices, —Bro. S. A. Honbarger as elder, and brethren Simon Sutter and Jacob Silwise as deacons. Other matters were also attended to, and all seemed to pass off pleasantly and to the apparent satisfaction of all present.

We again met at 6: 30 P. M., for examination services. After a short intermission we assembled for the Communion season. About twenty-four members were at the tables. A few were hindered by sickness, and others had not received their letters, which was regretted. All the members present seemed to enjoy the services, which closed about 9 P. M., with a fair attendance, good attention and good order.

On Sunday, Aug. 16, we moved our meeting back to Esterly, where it is still being continued each evening with fair attendance, considering the thinly-settled country. When our work is done here, if the Lord will, we want to visit the churches in Texas. Remember us in your prayers! JAS. R. GISH.

Life of Eld. Jas. Quinter.

I HAVE just received and carefully read the "Life and Sermons of Eld. James Quinter," and must confess that my prejudice against the character of such a work has been greatly diminished. If I were asked which one of the forty sermons is the best, I would be unable to answer.

In reading, I was not only enraptured with the clear, logical reasoning on the respective subjects, but in my imagination I had the enthusiasm and the eloquence of the author so vividly before my mind that unconsciously I was bordering on imitation. Surely, though dead, he yet speaketh! I hope the work will meet with a circulation in proportion to its merits. No one can read it thoughtfully without being impressed more with God and his goodness, and our duty to him as well as to our fellow-beings!

I notice in his biography, that he and I were received into the church, and elected to the ministry at the same age. "O let me die the death of the righteous!" ENOCH EBY.

From Ladoga, Ind.

ON Thursday, Aug. 13, a love-feast was held at Little Walnut. This is a point of meeting in Putnam County, and a branch of the Raccoon Creek congregation.

Bro. Charlie Campbell, of the White church, brethren George Goshorn and Dave Culler, of the Lick Creek church, and our home ministers were present. Bro. Campbell officiated.

Just after the afternoon services two young sisters were received into the church by baptism. Let us all pray for them that they may prove faithful in time of trouble, and look to Jesus for peace and guidance.

On the afternoon of the 15th a council-meeting was held. The brethren are preparing to repair the church house at that place. At the harvest meeting on the 16th, at 10: 30 A. M., Bro. William Harshbarger preached a very able discourse, after which a collection of $11.10 was taken up for missionary purposes. At the children's meeting at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, Bro. Campbell presented precious truths to the children. May they ever remember them and early be found doing such deeds as Jesus will look upon with gladness.

CHARITY HIMES.

From the Yellow River Church, Marshall Co, Ind.

AUG. 1 the members of the Yellow River congregation met in council at their church house. Everything passed off quietly and in order.

In the evening Bro. J. G. Royer, of Mt. Morris, Ill., preached for us. The next day (Aug. 2) had been appointed for our harvest meeting, and Bro. Royer again addressed us. In the forenoon he gave us an interesting talk from Gen. 12: 1, 2, calling particular attention to the last clause of the second verse. He referred to several passages that compare the Christian to corn, wheat, salt, etc. He showed how the corn may well be compared to the Christian, for outside of the church can be found nothing better than good husks.

In the afternoon the assembly was again called together, and Bro. Royer gave the children a very interesting talk, closing with a few remarks to the parents.

In the evening we again listened to our brother. The next morning he took the train for his home, leaving many new acquaintances to remember him as a brother and friend.

May the Lord bless us all in our Christian warfare, and finally receive us as valiant soldiers of his army! MILO F. HALE.

Mission Board Organized.

AT the District Meeting of Texas, Oklahoma and Indian Territory, the following brethren were chosen as a Mission Board to systematize and further the work of the Gospel in this District. Bro. David Berkman, Nocona, Texas, Chairman; Bro. A. W. Austin, Muenster, Texas, Secretary; Bro. Joseph Brubaker, Nocona, Texas, Treasurer.

We take this plan to notify the brethren that we are ready for business, and need first the co-operation of the District, your sympathy and prayers, as well as your money to carry on the work. We want to hear from all of the isolated members in the District, their wants, prospects, etc. Send money to the Treasurer, and your wants, in regard to the preaching, etc., to the Secretary.

Now, brethren, let there be a forward move in the Master's work! Some of us are deprived of many comforts and blessings, and many of us have not the privilege of schools for our children. Do not let us waste the time, while making such sacrifices, but come up to the help of the Lord, and do all we can! Dear brethren, please remember us in your prayers. You know but little of our trials, and the opposition, and its nature. We ask you, from the depth of our hearts, Wrestle nightily with God for the work on the frontier, and the salvation of precious souls. Let every church in the District appoint a solicitor, if there be any that have not done so before. Let your liberality be known, as it has been heretofore, and God will bless and provide the means to carry on the work, after we fail. Let us do our part and trust God for the rest! A. W. AUSTIN,

Secretary of Mission Board.

Muenster, Texas.

From the Union Church, Marshall Co., Ind.

THE brethren and sisters of the Union church, Marshall Co., Ind., decided to have a harvest meeting on Saturday, August 8, commencing at 10 A. M., and to last all day.

Bro. J. C. Murray, of Nappanee, Ind., was with us and, after a short season of song service, preached a very interesting discourse from Psalm 103.

The good sisters had prepared a very bountiful supply of refreshments which were served in the church. After a blessing was asked, they were partaken of with joyful hearts.

After a short intermission, we met again at 2 P. M. for song service. Bro. Murray then preached a missionary sermon, after which a collection was held for the mission with good results.

On Sunday morning a children's meeting was conducted by Bro. Murray in place of the usual Sunday-school exercises, which were interesting to all present. Then we had preaching at 10: 30, and thus ended a season of enjoyment, long to be remembered by all present.

May God bless us all to such an extent that we may become better men and women, and be more devoted to his cause.

Our love-feast is to be held Oct. 9 at 4 P. M., in the Union church, 5½ miles west of Plymouth, Ind. An invitation is extended to all that can, to be with us. LAURA APPLEMAN.

Plymouth, Ind.

From Center View, Mo.

THE brethren and sisters of the Center View church met Aug. 13, to work in the vineyard of the Lord. Considerable business came before the meeting, but all was disposed of in harmony with the Gospel. Some of our little flock who have taken hold of the Gospel plough, are becoming weary. They are longing to have their fellowship discontinued with the church. May it not be said of them, they are not fit for the kingdom of heaven, Luke 9: 62, but let them renew their covenant, double their diligence, and live closer to the Savior's bleeding side. Without a Savior in this world, we cannot reign with Christ in the world above.

The members here are alive to the mission work. During the last quarter we raised over $10. One dear sister (somewhat isolated from the church came to me with $5 and said, "Here is missionary money." It was at once given to our solicitor, to be distributed as she directed. She can not go and preach the Gospel but she can and does give of her means to send and have it preached. How many more could do likewise until this glorious Gospel could be carried to every one from sea to sea, "for God loveth a cheerful giver." We decided to have a love-feast Oct. 3, at 10 A. M., to which a hearty invitation is given.

AMANDA WITMORE.

Notes from Our Correspondents.

"As cold water to a thirsty soul, so is good news from a far country."

One Added to the Fold.—July 30 one precious soul united with the fold in the New Haven church, Michigan. Oh what joy to see sinners turn to God! Others were shedding tears while the solemn ordinances were engaged in. Daniel Chambers, Carson City, Mich., Aug. 20.

Location of Next Annual Meeting.—The Committee on Location for Annual Meeting for 1892 visited the places applying for Annual Meeting,—Des-Moines, Iowa City and Cedar Rapids,—but failed to agree on location, and hence submit the matter to the District Meeting of Middle Iowa, to convene in Dallas County, Sept. 24.—J. D. Haughtelin, Foreman.

One Baptized.—The thanksgiving meeting in the Pleasant Valley church occurred Aug. 8. Eld. Tobias Krider and E. B. Bagwell were with us and remained over Sunday, giving us four meetings with excellent interest and attendance. They also gave our Sabbath-school much encouragement. Our school is in a prosperous condition. One dear soul has united with us since our organization. Our Communion will be held Sept. 8 at 2 P. M.—Silas Gilbert, Lightsville, Ohio.

Church Organized.— I have just returned from the Dayton country, Washington, where we had some meetings. We met in council to consider the propriety of organizing and getting into working shape. It was decided unanimously to organize in the general order of the Brethren, and to be known as the "Highland" church. We proceeded to elect one minister and one deacon. The lot for minister fell on Ernest Hopkins: for deacon on Wilbur Hopkins. Both are brethren of fine talent, and both were duly installed with much solemnity. The Brethren at this point seem to be very hopeful for the prospects of the future. Isolated as they are, they have no meetings unless some ministering brother stops with them. We agreed to meet with them once a month until they get fairly started in the work. We expect to have a Communion at this point sometime during the coming fall.—S. Hodgden, Moscow, Idaho, Aug. 18.

Proposed Meetings.—Aug. 8 was the regular council in the Wakendah church. The attendance was not as large as we would like to have seen. It is always desirable, that a goodly majority of the members be present at our councils. There are sometimes cases of considerable importance to all, the decision of which is a matter of deep concern to all. Some unpleasant business came before the council, but all was disposed of in the right spirit and, we trust, satisfactorily. Bro. George Clemens, on account of weak eyes, resigned the clerkship of the congregation, and Bro. J. H. Shirkey was elected to fill the vacancy. Our Communion meeting will occur Oct. 15 at 2 P. M. At that time we expect Bro. Michael Flory to commence a series of meetings. We also expect Bro. R. H. Miller to preach a series of discourses at the Rockingham meeting-house, towards the close of the year, if health will permit. Definite information will be furnished later on.—Louis Macey, Millville, Mo.

Harmonious Council.—The members of the Loramie church, Ohio, met in council Aug. 15. Though the meeting was not as fully attended as might have been desirable, yet the spirit that pervaded all was a most excellent one. The Missionary and Tract Work received due attention. Four were added to the church by letter at this meeting.— Jonathan Hoover, Dawson, Ohio, Aug. 18.

Proposed Meetings. — The council-meeting in the Olathe church, Kans., occurred Aug. 15, and was a pleasant one. The annual visit was paid to the members a few days previous. Admonitions and queries were presented, which, we trust, will tend to the welfare of the church. Bro. Wm. Holsinger was advanced to the full degree of the ministry. We expect to commence a series of meetings Oct. 31, and to hold a Communion Nov. 7, at the Liberty church, commencing at 10 A. M. Albert Sharp, Gardner, Kans., Aug. 17.

Notice.— The District Meeting of North-eastern Ohio will be held, the Lord willing, Oct. 1, 1891, commencing at 8 o'clock A. M., in the Canton church, Mt. Pleasant meeting-house, four miles North-east of Canton. Those coming from the north or south on the C. C. & S. R. W. will stop off at North Canton, Ohio. Those coming from the West, will change in Canton, take the evening train on the C. C. & S. Road, leaving Canton at 4: 18 P. M., and stop off at North Canton. Those coming from the East will stop off at Louisville and will be met by giving notice to John F. Kahler, Louisville, Ohio. Missionary Meeting next day, commencing at 9 A. M.—Jacob Mishler, Clerk, Mogadore, Ohio, Aug. 17.

Severe Hail-storm.—The bright prospects of our wheat have been recently blasted by a very severe hail-storm. Hundreds, yea thousands of acres have been beaten flat to the ground. Many of the hail-stones measured ten inches in circumference, and were larger than we ever saw before. At some places cattle were killed. In one instance a chunk of ice went through the roof of a house into the garret. Much grain was partially destroyed; some will get grain enough for seed and bread; some more, and some will get very good crops, where the hail did not strike. While this is saddening, we have great reasons for rejoicing in our congregation. Since my return from California, near the last of May, we have had the pleasure of baptizing seven precious souls, three aged mothers of families, (not descendants of the Brethren), Bro. M. Mansfield's oldest son and daughter, and two of my granddaughters. I hope they may be bright and shining lights, and a great help to the furtherance of the Gospel. The harvest is great but the laborers are few. May the Lord send more laborers into the field!—Eld. W. W. Horning, Frederick, Brown Co., South Dak.

Delegates Elected. The Hurricane Creek church, Bond County, held its regular quarterly council Aug. 15. The annual visit seems to show that peace and union is the desire of all the members. We decided to hold our Communion Sept. 12. There will be preaching at 10 A. M. Our elder, Henry Liligh, was present with us at the council. The writer was chosen as delegate to District Meeting for the Southern District of Illinois, and Bro. Ira Beanblossom as alternate. Cornelius Kessler, Smithborough, Bond Co., Ill., Aug. 16.

Holding up the Prophet's Hand. — I often wonder if we, as brethren, and especially laymembers, understand the full meaning of those words. In this little town, Luray, of 1800 inhabitants, in old Virginia, the Brethren have preached only one sermon to my knowledge. Who is to blame? The preacher? No! The word is, "Go." Again, how can they go except they be sent? That means the church must send them, and hold up their hands. One will say, "We have no house of our own, and it won't do to preach in other denominations' houses. Brethren, hold up their hands by giving as the Lord has prospered you! Remember our money and our bodies belong to the Lord, and I think we could not use it any better than to build a house here, and to build up the cause of Christ. Brethren, think on these things! Who knows the worth of one soul? Remember we shall have our reward by helping to save others. D. W. Strickler.

MATRIMONIAL.

"Blessed are the dead which die in the Lord."

MILLER.— In the State Center church, Marshall Co., Iowa, May 1, 1891, of consumption, sister Elizabeth, wife of Bro. A. H. Miller, aged 49 years 4 months and 10 days.

Sister Lizzie was a faithful member of the Brethren church for a number of years. She was deeply interested in the Sunday-school and missionary work of the church. She endured the sufferings in her last illness with Christian patience, and died with a bright hope of the promised rest beyond. She leaves an affectionate husband, four daughters and one son to mourn their loss. Funeral services by the writer from Numbers 23: 10.

A. M. DICKEY.

BOLLINGER.—At Goshen Ind., July 30, 1891, Sarah (Osborn) Bollinger, aged 70 years, 8 months and 11 days.

Deceased was born in Columbiana County, Ohio, Nov. 19, 1820. She was married to Henry Bollinger in Portage County, Ohio, April 27, 1843. She united with the German Baptist church in November, 1848. She came to Indiana, May 12, 1849, and settled in Elkhart County, six miles north of Goshen. Since May, 1881, she has resided in Goshen. Funeral services by Bro. A. L. Neff at her residence.

HAUGH.—In the Chapman Creek church, Dickinson County, Kans., Aug. 8, 1891, sister Sarah Elizabeth Haugh, aged 40 years, 3 months and 2 days.

Deceased was born May 6, 1851. Her maiden name was Sarah E. Sheely. She was born in Franklin Co, Pa. Oct. 29, 1869, she was united in marriage to Samuel Haugh of the same place. Both united with the German Baptist church near Greencastle, Pa. She was the mother of fourteen children, six of whom preceded her to the spirit land. She leaves a husband and eight children to mourn their loss, but we trust that their loss here is her eternal gain, for we believe that she was a true mother in Israel.

The funeral occasion was improved by Bro. P. R. Wightsman, of the Abilene church, assisted by Eld. John Forney of the home church, from Rev. 14: 13, to a very large concourse of sympathizing friends and neighbors Interment in the Pleasant View burying ground. J. S. BAUMBAUGH.

HOYLE.—In the North Beatrice church, May 28, 1891, at the home of his parents, Zacharias, son of Bro. William and sister Hoyle, aged 39 years, 9 months and 3 days.

HOYLE.—At the same place, June 3, 1891, of heart disease, Bro. William Hoyle, aged 62 years, 2 months and 19 days.

He leaves a sorrowing widow, four sons, and four daughters. This should be a warning to all, but especially to those of them who have not made their peace with God.

May they speedily turn their feet to the testimony of the Lord, and may they make haste and delay not to keep his commandments

Funeral services conducted by the Brethren. ESTHER VANDYKE.

WELTMER.—In the Walnut Valley congregation, Barton Co, Kans, Aug. 8, 1891, Moses E. Weltmer, son of friend John Weltmer, aged 15 years, 4 months and 25 days.

MICHAEL KELLER.

WEYANT.— Near Berlin, Ohio, Aug. 10, 1891, Samuel Alexander Weyant, only child of friend Isaac and Lizzie Weyant, aged 7 years, 11 months and 7 days.

Little Sammy, as he was called, was more than an ordinary child. It seems as though he had the spirit of Samuel of old. May his death be a warning for his parents to give their heart to the Lord, so that they may meet their Sammy where pain is unknown. Services by Bro. Josiah Hochstetler from Matt. 18. SARAH MIDDAUGH.

STONER — Within the bounds of the Quinter church, Gove Co., Kans., Aug. 9, 1891, Ephraim Edgar, son of A. L. and Jane Stoner, aged 13 years, 11 months and 26 days.

Deceased was playing in the barn with some neighbor's children. His last words were: "O, I am so dizzy." He started for the house but dropped dead before reaching it. The cause of his death is unknown.

Funeral services, Aug. 10, 1891, by Eld. John Ikenberry, assisted by Bro. B. B Whitmer, from Matt. 24: 44. WM. C. ZOOK.

CLEMENT.—In the Sandy church, Stark and Columbiana Counties, Ohio, Bro. Geo. Francis Clement, aged 25 years, 6 months and 15 days.

Deceased united with the Brethren church at the early age of twelve years.

George was much respected as a student of Mt. Union College. Memorial services were held at the college. The President attended his funeral and took an active part in the services. Several, intimately associated with the institution, were present and manifested much respect and sympathy. The young brother was quite a successful teacher, much loved by the Brethren and highly appreciated for the timely and good help afforded in all church work.

The dear sister, Ella Clement, of this sorely bereft home, merits especial sympathy, four deaths having occurred since she entered this home. First the husband (an elder) was taken away, and then came the apparently untimely death of the three dear children, but, we trust, she has grace to say, "The Lord gave and the Lord has taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." Funeral text, John 16: 33, latter part. Services by the writer, assisted by the Brethren.

LONG.—In the Mt. Zion church, Tuscarawas County, Ohio, Aug. 12, 1891, Sarah Long, aged 70 years, 4 months and 28 days.

The sister was very zealous, devoted and faithful, and on this occasion death appears to have been very unkind to Bro. Long. Her departure renders the home lonely and desolate, but we hope that the bereft brother will be consoled with the reflection that she whom he loved as self, is now with Christ which is far better. A kind and sympathetic congregation listened to the discourse, based on John 14: 1. Services by the writer, assisted by Eld. Geo. S. Kollar.

MINARD.—Within the bounds of the Mt. Zion congregation, Tuscarawas County, Ohio, Aug. 11, 1891, Mary L. Minard, aged 59 years, 7 months and 16 days.

Mary was quite an active worker in the church of her choice (the M. E.).

She selected her own funeral text, Luke 10: 42. A kind and appreciative congregation met on the occasion of her funeral, to weep with those who wept and to listen to the sermon based upon this expressive language, and to pay the last tribute of respect to the departed.

Services conducted by the writer, assisted by the local minister of the Methodist church, Adam Rainsberger. EDWARD LOOMIS.

GILLASPIE.—In the Deep River church, Iowa, Aug. 9, 1891, Velma Pearl, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Gillaspie, aged 5 months and 16 days.

Pearl was only sick about three hours. Spinal affection and heart failure caused her death.

Funeral services by J. Barnhiser and the writer. G. W. HOPWOOD.

PITZER.—At Eglon, W. Va., April 7, 1891, Elizabeth Pitzer, aged 71 years, 7 months and 17 days.

Aunt Betsey, as she was commonly called, was a member of the Brethren church for many years, and lived an exemplary life. She died in the triumphs of a living faith. Her funeral services were preached in the Brethren's meeting-house at Maple Springs by the writer and Eld. S. A. Fike on the first Sunday in August. JONAS FIKE.

SWITZER.—In the Panther Creek church, Woodford County, Ill., Aug. 5, 1891, sister Emma Switzer, aged 32 years and 27 days.

Sister Switzer was a very exemplary and consistent member of the church,—one who believed in a full compliance with all the requirements of the Gospel. When nearing the shore of the Jordan of death, she called for the faithful, who engaged at her request in a last prayer on earth with and for her.

She was born near Mount Sidney, Augusta County, Va., July 9, 1859.

The funeral services were held by the writer from 1 Thess. 4: 13, to a large concourse of sympathizing friends.

THOS. D. LYON.

STICKLER.—At Hartville, Stark Co., Ohio, Aug. 6, 1891, Bro. George Stickler, aged 65 years and 5 months.

Shortly before his death he called for the elders of the church and was anointed with oil in the name of the Lord. His remains were interred in the Brethren's cemetery in the East Nimishillen church. Funeral services by the writer in English and by Eld. John Kurts in the German. J. J. HOOVER.

Bible Lessons
FOR YOUNG CHILDREN.

Schools who are not using the International System of Lessons,—such as are found in our Quarterly,—often lack a good help in the instruction of the smaller classes. To supply such a need we have prepared the "Bible Lessons." We have put them within the reach of all,—only five cents per copy, or fifty cents a dozen. Address this office.

An Expert Opinion.

THE "Medical and Surgical Journal" for March 1891, says editorially:

"This pretty little city of Idaho Springs, Colorado, is situated in a beautiful park about 37 miles from Denver, and is about 7,500 feet above sea level. It is thrifty, prosperous, and has become noted for its hot and cold mineral springs, which contain medicinal properties of extraordinary value. Idaho Springs as a health resort cannot be excelled this side of the world-renowned Carlsbad Springs of Germany, whose waters and the waters found at Idaho Springs bear almost an identical chemical analysis.

"In the early stages of consumption these waters, combined with the invigorating air of this beautiful climate, are almost a specific. We take pleasure in recommending these waters to all suffering from coughs and catarrhal affections. It is the best place to go to for the cure of phthisis. Those of our colleagues who have been sending their patients to this grand health resort all join in praising the satisfactory results received from the invigorating waters and climate. We would therefore urge physicians to advise their patients, threatened with consumption, not to procrastinate, but to try, before it is too late, the salutary effects of the waters of Idaho Springs. The Union Pacific are making special efforts to carry the public to and from this famous resort, with all the modern comfort and ease which the tourist seeking health and pleasure can desire." 22–34.

LIFE AND SERMONS

—: OF :—

ELD. JAMES QUINTER.

THIS is a neatly-printed and well-bound volume of 426 pages, containing a well-written biographical sketch of Eld. James Quinter and forty of his sermons.

The biographical part will be found quite interesting, instructive and impressive. No one can read an account of Bro. Quinter's life without feeling deeply and favorably impressed. The work shows how a poor orphan boy, by hard work, and faithfulness to his religious convictions, rose step by step, until he reached a field of usefulness and honor as broad as the Nation itself. Though dead, his good deeds and the impressive examples in piety, learning and simplicity will follow him for generations to come.

The Sermon Department contains many of his choice sermons, which will prove exceedingly interesting and profitable reading to all, and especially to our ministers and isolated members. We feel that this book will fill a long-felt want in our Brotherhood. Price, post-paid, $1 25.

QUITE a number of students have come to attend the "Musicale," now in session in the Normal building, and will be continued until the opening of the Normal Fall Term.

BRO. SETH MYERS, of Shirleysburg, Pa., was with the James' Creek Brethren over last Sunday. He preached in the Coffee Run house in the morning, and at James' Creek in the evening.

BY request of Eld. George Hanawalt we left our home on last Saturday afternoon to make a short call with the church in the village of Garfield, near Bolivar Station. There is a band of about fifty members living in this vicinity, and a few years ago, at a considerable sacrifice, they built for themselves a house of worship. For the last several years Bro. R. B. Bowser had been preaching for them, under whose ministry they had quite a number of accessions, some of whom have left for other places and others have severed their relation with the church, so that the present membership is considerably weakened. The church is under the care of Eld. Hanawalt, who is laboring to keep the membership together, and get them to be more fully identified with the general Brotherhood. To this end a church meeting was called and some difficulties, which had arisen among them, were adjusted, and we hope that their future may be more peaceful and prosperous. It will be if all parties live up to the profession which they have made. Ministering brethren passing should stop off and preach for them.

FUNERALS.

THE funeral service of the Christian church is one which is surrounded by many peculiarities, showing forth human character and the forces of human sympathy. It is a service with which we all become more or less familiar, because none of us are exempt from death.

Last week we attended two funerals, and in the two we had the representatives of the different classes of funerals which are met in our life experience. The one was of the poorer class, a class to which custom has made the occasion a double affliction. The one call comes from the Lord, and therefore calls for a heavenly resignation; the other is self-made, to meet the demand of exacting custom, and is endured. It is what may be justly termed a financial scourge, and sometimes proves the greater affliction of the two.

Very often this is encouraged and brought about by well-meaning but injudicious friends of the deceased. They meet at the house of mourning and institute a regular order of preparation, often on a large scale, far beyond the needs and the ability of the otherwise afflicted family. An expensive coffin is engaged, mourning apparel is bought and a large meal is provided. This all seems to be very kind and acceptable at the time, as there is no time when people and families feel so liberal and indifferent to money as on occasions of this kind. Bereavement, sympathy for the dead, and good will for the friends all seem to call forth a willingness, for the time being, to sacrifice. It is the day of the funeral and the great thought is for the things of the day, without much reference to what will follow.

But the funeral is over, and now follow its results. Bills from the undertaker, the store, the grocery, and all around, come in, and there is no money to meet them. Thus a finanical crash is brought upon the family, just because indiscreet friends felt it their duty to assist in keeping up a custom that has nothing to recommend it, either on the part of the wealthy or of the poor—and especially on the part of the poor.

But, as said, there are many peculiarities that cluster around funeral occasions. The hearts of everybody seem to be liberalized; sectarian bars, for the time being, are laid down, church-houses are opened that would not be opened on any other occasion, and the clergy of the different sects meet and exchange greetings, their charges fall in line and a Christian unity is manifested that causes the "ironclad" disciple to doubt the evidence of his own eyes and ears.

Indeed, there is something peculiar about it, and we are sometimes made to wonder and ask: What are these things which our eyes see and ears hear? Is there any way to account for it? If it is all the outgrowth of custom or common courtesy, would it be a good thing to practice outside of funeral days? Or is it a feeling, a condition of mind, that the presence of death naturally produces? And if so, are they a better class of feelings than we have in the absence of the grim monster? The presence of death may intensify our feelings or sharpen our convictions of right or wrong, but does not necessarily change our judgments. It is true, funerals bring to us occasions and opportunities for the exercising of these fraternal manifestations that no others do. This fact, however, is no excuse for us to do indiscreet things or to violate a principle of truth and right.

Again, funeral sermons form a strange conglomeration of theological beliefs. The belief of the deceased or their immediate friends and surrounding circumstances often tinge the theology of the discourse. In some cases repentance affords an all-sufficient passport into the other and better kingdom; in others, faith is the great essential; again, others say that unless a man be baptized he cannot be saved; while still others hold that all the conditions named are essential to the salvation of the soul. Then there are those who have lived a good moral life, others who have made no pretensions whatever to a goodly life, but are wealthy or hold honorable positions in life. Their friends want them put into heaven or, at least, it is expected to give them a good chance for getting there. In all such cases the minister is expected to properly arrange his sermon,—find a few good things in the subject's life-history, with a strong supposition that, in the last moments, faith in Christ came and all was well. The circumstance of the thief on the cross has been lacerated into shreds to find a hope for the unrepentant sinner who has given his whole life to the devil. Yes; some most audacious and outrageous things have been said by the clergy on these occasions, which have been greatly to the hindrance of the cause of pure and undefiled religion in the world.

While our God is merciful, he is also just, and to presume on his mercy at the expense of justice is extremely dangerous.

Now, we believe it right to afford all the consolation possible to the bereaved friends, but to encourage them in a false hope is both dangerous and sinful. If a minister can preach a dead sinner into heaven, he might as well encourage the living sinner to go on in the broad way. It is inconsistent to preach to the living sinner that unless he repents and accepts salvation he will be lost, and then, on a funeral occasion, give the same kind of a sinner a clear title to a mansion in the skies.

But this is funeral day theology, and is not expected to hold good for any other time. Such seems to be the feeling, and it is time that we learn that though men may make such distinctions, God will not. It is not what we do and say when we die that will save us; but as we live, so shall we come to the judgment.

Michael Zug 1892

Bro. Seth Myers, of Shirleysburg, Pa., attended the James Creek harvest-meeting over last Sunday. They had a very interesting meeting.

Bro. J. E. Keeney and family, and sister Laura started for Monroeville, La., on Aug. 20. He has been elected principal of the schools there, and will make his home at that place during the coming year.

"Not every soul can extend its influence right and left, but every soul can extend its progress upward. 'It's a small piece of ground,' said a house-holder of his building lot, 'but I own all the way up.'"

We congratulate our Mt. Morris Brethren in securing the location for the "Old Folks' Home." Why should not Middle Pennsylvania locate an Old Folks' Home at Huntingdon? A more central location cannot be found anywhere.

From last information we were sorry to learn that Eld. J. W. Brumbaugh, of Clover Creek, Pa., is not improving in physical strength, as we hoped he would, but is still unwell, with but little, if any improvement. Let the prayers of the church ascend in his behalf, and may whatever is best follow.

Bro. J. B. Brumbaugh attended harvest-meetings in the Aughwick and Newry churches. Both meetings were largely attended, and a real thanksgiving spirit seemed to be manifested by the people. This year is one that should give cause for much thanksgiving on the part of God's people, as his blessings are abundant every-where.

One of the most fatal things to pear culture is the "blight." We have a tree outside of our window on which one limb after another has been blighted, until the tree is almost dead. It reminds us that many human trees are blighted in the same way. One sin after another strikes them until the whole body is blighted, and a miserable death ensues.

A brother writes us that is he poor and has no money, yet he was anxious to get the "Life and Sermons" of Bro. Quinter. To get the book he picked blackberries, sold them and sent for the book. We hope that in reading the book, he may realize a rich reward for his labor. This book should be in every family of the Brotherhood, and we are sure that many can get it at a much less sacrifice than was made by this poor brother.

For the satisfaction of the many who are anxious to know about the condition of our dear brother, Eld. J. W. Brumbaugh, of Clover Creek, Pa., we are sorry to say that he is not at all well—was quite ill last week and confined to his bed. The last report we had from him he was some better and slowly improving. He asks to be remembered in the prayers of the Lord's people. Brethren and sisters, you know what is said about the efficacy of prayer. Let us use this power for each other's good!

Bro. W. J. Swigart spent last Saturday and Sunday with the Brethren of Roaring Springs, Pa. He reports very pleasant meetings with good attendance. While he was there they had their harvest-meeting, and also a children's meeting. The members are said to be zealous and active, and are anxious to have ministering brethren stop off and preach for them. By writing to Bro. J. R. Stayer you will be met and cared for. Bro. Stayer is the home minister there, and will be pleased to meet and receive ministering brethren who can make it suit to call.

ESSAYS.

"Study to show thyself approved unto God; a workman that needeth not be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of Truth."

THE MONEYLESS MAN.

Is there no place on the face of the earth
Where charity dwelleth, where virtue hath birth,
Where bosoms in kindness and mercy will heave!
And the poor and the wretched shall ask and receive?
Is there no place no earth where a knock from the poor
Will bring a kind angel to open the door?
Ah! search the wide world wherever you can,
There is no open door for the moneyless man.

Go look in the hall where the chandelier light
Drives off in its splendor the darkness of night;
Where the rich hanging velvet, in shadowy fold,
Sweeps gracefully down, with its trimmings of gold,
And mirrors of silver take up and renew
In long-lighted vistas the 'wildering view;
Go there in your patches, and find if you can
A welcoming smile for the moneyless man.

Go look in your church, the cloud-reaching spire,
Which gives back to the sun his same look of fire,
Where the arches and columns are gorgeous within,
And the walls seem as pure as a soul without sin;
Go down the aisle—see the rich and the great,
In the pomp and the pride of their worldly estate,
Walk down in your patches, and find if you can,
Who opens a pew for the moneyless man.

Go look to your judges, in dark flowing gown,
With the scales wherein law weigheth quietly down;
Where he frowns on the weak and smiles on the strong,
And punishes right while he justifies wrong;
Where jurors their lips on the Bible have laid,
To render a verdict they've already made;
Go there in the court-room, and find if you can,
Any law for the case of a moneyless man.

Go look in the banks, where Mammon has told
His hundreds and thousands of silver and gold;
Where, safe from the hands of the starving and poor,
Lies pile upon pile of the glittering ore;
Walk up to the counter—ah, there you may stay
Till your limbs have grown old and your hair turns gray,
And you'll find at the bank not one of the clan
With money to lend to the moneyless man.

Then go to your hovel—no raven has fed,
The wife who has suffered so long for her bread;
Kneel down by her pallet and kiss the death frost
From the lips of the angel your poverty lost—
Then turn in your agony upward to God,
And bless while it smites you, the chastening rod;
And you'll find at the end of your life's little span
There's a welcome above for the moneyless man.

SPEAKING THE TRUTH.

A Sermon Preached at the Light Street Presbyterian Church, Baltimore, Md., Sunday, Aug. 2, 1891, at 11 A. M., by E. M. Smith.

"Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbour."—Zech. 8: 16.

What we at once take to be the meaning of these words is their very meaning. Our duty is to speak to our neighbors what is reliable, what is trustworthy, what is according to fact. The Word of God uses, we might say, no circumlocution in speaking of this duty or in describing the failure to do it. We have the expression truth, which is, so far as I have learned, the equivalent in Anglo-Saxon for the Hebrew word from which is derived the word meaning truth. We have the expressions lies, lie, liars, falsehood, with very clear statements, showing us what God thinks of these things.

We cannot very easily think of a time when this will be a useless statute. We feel at least that it is in no way a useless statute for us. There are so many temptations to compromise the truth, to color it, to take a tangent from it, that we feel continually the need to remember God's commandment.

In very many cases the danger is not that we will in our conduct make an exact cross with this precept. The danger is that we may take an oblique course,—a course more or less deviating from that direct rectitude that God asks. The danger is that, in our statements, which may have every appearance of truth, there may lurk the germs of falsehood, which will in time provoke trouble.

So late as the Civil War, surgeons thought that the surgical fever must necessarily attend the amputation of a limb. They did not think that that fever arose because they had not done all they could do. The advance of science has led surgeons to become acquainted with a strange kind of life called bacteria, that is not visible to the naked eye. The surgeon knows that although his hands and his sponges and his instruments may look clean, that they are not surgically clean unless they have been so washed that none of this invisible life is clinging to them. It is this invisible life that breeds fever and corruption.

Thus in our statements, which we think are clear and fair, there may be a measure of untruthfulness. It is a part of Christian duty to endeavor to speak so that what is stated will bear any test to which it is put. The uniform utterance of truth can be accomplished only by one who is true in heart. If there is a lack of faithfulness, of truth within, the attempt to make the utterance appear truthful and consistent will sooner or later fail.

Let us notice at this time some of the things which will endanger truth in our lives.

1. Speaking without Sufficient Conscientiousness.—This idea is included in all the points I wish to make; but there is a special view of the question that I wish to take. Many lament the difficulty with which they acquire ease in the use of language. I believe that it is in general easier to handle words with facility and with an apparent appropriateness, than it is to do this with regard for strict truth as each word is uttered. The amount of reading done now-a-days enables many persons to acquire a rather wide range of expression. It is just here where the danger lies. If we make a sort of general average of expression, that expression may, in a sort of ready-made way, fit your mood and feeling and mine as well. It can't do it with strict truth, any more than the suit of clothing that you buy, that has been made to fit that composite figure that represents the average shape of men, will fit like one made from measurements accurately made from your own person. There is a lesson in morality for us to learn from the fact that we would rather use ready-made language or expressions than ready-made clothing.

It may be true that the apparel oft proclaims the man; I am inclined to think that the care taken in utterance oftener proclaims the man. The danger of using this conventional speech is that of using a book showing one how to write letters. It may be followed too closely, and thus expressions either too lax or too intense, for the person that uses them, are used.

One cannot but be impressed with the carelessness about truth, that has reigned when business letters are written. It is not at all uncharitable to say that there are expressions that indicate esteem and regard and faithfulness and obedience and happiness, that have been put out in a machine-like way without a particle of conscientious regard for truth.

There is this great fact that certainly should not be lost sight of, that the conventional use of courtesy, expression of good will, shows that men feel, to some extent, that these things are due to each other. They see the appropriateness of them. The most unconscionable user of them would, at his best, wish that he could use them with his whole soul as well as with his pen or lips. But to whatever extent these expressions are hollow, to that extent has a man's moral nature suffered. Let this be understood. There is no trifling in the matter. If a man felt once that it was wrong to do these things, and now does them with no scruple, he is a worse man now than formerly. He is ready now to be led into what he then thought he never would do.

In our common intercourse there is danger of using what is according to etiquette, and not according to conscience. How many times has a man said, "Pardon me," when treading upon another, when a fitter voicing of his feeling would have been, "Why don't you keep yourself out of the way?" It is farthest from my desire to find fault with these conventionalities. They represent very often the very best thing. "Pardon me," with a flash of soul after injury has been done, is beautiful. "Pardon me," said by an individual as impassive as a phonograph, makes the one to whom it is said feel like saying, "As far as you are concerned, it doesn't make any difference whether I do or not." One is often struck, after being out among acquaintances, with the number of these little ready-made remarks he has used, some of them expressing promises of much to be done, much feeling, and, with regard to the conscientiousness with which they were uttered, were nothing less than falsehoods.

One has reason to fear as he goes out, that he will be surprised into conscienceless expressions. It should be our aim not to put away what is conventional, but to fill what is conventional with truth. It should be our aim though, to put on no expression that does not fit us. It is better to be right before God, even if to do so we should be regarded as boors. We need not fear this, however. Much that is beautiful, in speech, in letter writing, in courtesy, is attained by being true before God.

2. Another thing that will endanger truth in our lives is speaking with too much regard for temporary gain or advantage.

It is improbable that Christians, without compunction, buy a half-fare ticket for a child several months over twelve years of age, or, perhaps, several years beyond that period. It may not be improbable that they buy no ticket at all for a child something over five years of age. Thus, for the sake of a few dimes or a few dollars, they will sit in a railway car with a complacency that compromises all their Christian dignity. They may justify it by saying that the railway is an unconscionable corporation, and that it has no business to make such restrictions. But that does not alter the fact that they have entered into a bona fide contract with the railway company and that they, Christians as they are, have falsified. I fear that it would be a disheartening record, if we had it, of all the littleness of those who profess better. It is sometimes said that corporations have no souls. If this were even so, it would not have the influence upon those who deal with them of making these soulless too. A farmer doesn't lose his soul because he works with his soulless plow, and if those with whom we deal do wrong, this does not nullify our wrong doing. If we travel under false pretenses, it is forsaking the truth, no matter by what means we are transported. I think with regret, of the degree of elasticity my conscience has had in times past in dealing with railways.

In dealing with those who assess us for taxes, or with those who insure us, there is the same opportunity to gain a temporary advantage by stepping aside from the strict truth. It is not necessary at all times for us to tell all that we know. A man may be a very foolish man, and yet never speak anything but the truth. But in dealing with those who have their own interests to look after, we have no right to be silent in any case that they have apparently overlooked. Christ demands that we look to our neighbor's interest, as well as to our own, and this means that we are not to take advantage of his ignorance.

A man who loves God, and therefore truth, as he ought, would rather lose $500 than make five cents by speaking or acting an untruth.

3. Another thing that will endanger truth in our lives is speaking without sufficient knowledge.

There are a good many things of which we may talk, of which we haven't very much knowledge, without being guilty of untruthfulness. There are a good many things of which we should speak only when we feel that our knowledge is full and reliable. In censuring men and measures and systems it is easy to take up and perpetuate what is simply false. A man may excuse himself by saying, "O well, I merely said what others said. They were to blame for their lack of knowledge." These are not becoming excuses for God's people. The worst feature of this is that it is an indication of an individual's willingness to spread the besmirching words and report. Let every Christian know that this kind of talk is simply carrion, and he who feeds upon it can never thrive spiritually.

We need more of a scientific spirit in these matters. It is good for me, when something censurable of another comes to my ears, to say within myself: "The thing for me to do now is not to become excited, as if this that I have heard is an exact statement of things as they are. I will let this rest a while. I will see how much fact there is about this. It is probable that the thing is not as it began. There's probably something on the other side." If we submit the censuring matters that come to us, to some such rest and examination, a good deal of its acrimoniousness will disappear afterwhile. When we repeat hearsay, we may count upon it that the information is not accurate. If it is something damaging to some one else, the thought of spreading damaging information, which is most likely inaccurate, ought to deter us. It is the passage of falsehood through our lips.

4. Another thing that will endanger truth in our lives is speaking without making allowances for mistakes in our own perceptions by our different senses.

What we see when looking at a horse trotting, and what the instantaneous shutter on a photographer's camera allows the dry plate to see when the lens is pointed at a horse trotting, are two different things. Our sight which is slow, sees a somewhat graceful motion. The plate catches an image lacking considerably in grace. You can't always believe your eyes.

It is related that one day in prison, while Sir Walter Raleigh was meditating upon the second volume of his universal history, his attention was attracted to something in the court yard below. He saw an officer in uniform step into the court. Another man in the court struck the officer a blow. The officer drew his sword and thrust the man, who struck him, through. The wounded man, before falling, struck the officer with a club he had picked up.

The next day Sir Walter was visited by a friend. He told his friend what he had seen. His friend, after listening through, told him that he was wrong in every particular; that it was the officer that struck the first blow; that it was the man who was struck, that thrust the officer through with a sword which he had snatched from the officer's side; and that it was some one else who had knocked down the man who gave the sword thrust. Sir Walter begged his friend's pardon, but told him that he had seen it just as he had related it. His friend then told him that he had been sitting just at the very stone that Sir Walter had pointed out. When he had gone, Sir Walter fell to thinking. He thought to this effect: I am writing of things that occurred many years ago. How can I believe the accuracy of these things, when I can't believe my own eyes? And he threw his manuscript into the fire.

How many times have we seen things as they have not been! We have been ready to justify our own senses, and yet there have intruded those modifying circumstances that have changed what we have seen. In view of this it may be seen how easily we may declare what is not the truth, if we declare what we have seen or heard,— that which is unfavorable to another. Something else may have occurred, not included in our vision, and yet the whole was necessary to make out the truth.

5. Another thing that will endanger the truth in our lives is speaking without sufficient love.

When we speak of those we love, we are careful to give full particulars about their goodness. We are careful to justify them of evil that has been imputed to them. We do not feel the same conscientious care in statement about those we do not love. I feel that we may go to great lengths in charging the careless statement that may properly be called falsehood to a lack of interest in those of whom we speak.

There is a little circle in which we move, to whose feelings we think we should defer. We are able to sympathize with the sensitiveness of a few, or perhaps we might say we are able to realize that a certain circle has hearts that feel. Then there is the wide outside into which we feel that we may dash, using hearsay statements, being only half careful to say what we know. We haven't much scruple about this wide circle. We do not care whether it is hurt or not. We never think of being called to account for our statements about it. So it comes about that, with utter indifference, we speak of certain men and classes in a careless way that we would be horrified to think we would ever use about the members of our own families.

If we do not love people, we are likely to think that it doesn't make any difference if we speak only half the truth about them; we think it does n't make any difference if we do repeat what is very hurtful. How widely shall we apply the words of Christ, "Inasmuch as ye did it to one of the least of these my brethren, ye did it unto me?" Does any one think that he will be in danger of having gone too far in well doing, if he applies these words in the case of every human being? Will we not be more truly noble, if we try to think of talking about Christ as we talk about anyone?

We are anxious to deal fairly with Christ. He will take it as honor done to himself if we talk of those, whom we may be least inclined to love, with as much care for truth as we can. Feeling kindly toward all will cut out from our lives, all quarters into which we may feel an inclination to enter and talk without knowledge, talk without care, talk without conscience. If we watch ourselves carefully, we will find that we allow ourselves such quarters. It hurts us very much when we find that some one has been quoting us in a negligent way; when some one has been simply denouncing without all the facts before them. It looks very much to us as though some one was simply glad to get a chance to oppose, and in his gladness, was willing to sacrifice a careful statement of fact. This is the way it feels to us. It feels just the same way to others when unlovingly, unsympathetically, we have made careless statements about them.

I feel deeply that the remedy for much of the heartache in society, arising from fierce, untruthful words, is the cultivation of a Christ-like spirit of kindly regard for all men. This spirit would destroy many an utterance that has in it enough untruth to do wide-spread damage.

I feel that all our homes would be ennobled if we were to rise to the spirit of Wordsworth, when he says:

"I am not one who much or oft delight
To season my fireside with personal talk,
Of friends who live within an easy walk,
Or neighbors, daily, weekly, in my sight;

"Nor can I not believe but that hereby Great gains are mine; for thus I live remote
From evil-speaking; rancour never sought
Comes to me not; malignant truth or lie."

NEW TESTAMENT CHURCH GOVERNMENT.

BY B. C. MOOMAW.

WE would not write a line for the sake of argument, or simply to defend our own notions, or as a controversial reply to Bro. Moore. These would all be unworthy motives in the discussion of a question of such grave importance as the one we have under consideration. To arrive at the truth, to know what was the mind of the Spirit, and what was the practice of the apostles in the matter of church government, is the question of prime importance, the investigation of which should be marked with the greatest deliberation and sincerity. In this respect it is very nearly parallel with questions concerning our personal salvation, and every honest man feels that he cannot afford to be mistaken about it. Moreover, if he discover that he is mistaken, he will very cheerfully allow himself to be corrected. It is with this kind of spirit we have undertaken to discuss the subject in review, hoping to bring out some light ourselves, and to get some from others.

Up to this point, we have endeavored to develop the fundamental principles upon which all true church government must rest. We have not discussed our theory in the light of results; we have not followed it out, in our imagination, to conceive how it would work, feeling that it is always safe, when we are doing God's will, to trust God with the consequences. That is to say, if this is God's plan of church government, we may safely trust God with results.

To point to other denominations as a refutation of our theory is very unfair, since Bro. Moore himself would not admit that any of them are God's true church. We are discussing the government of the church, and not of the popular denominations. If the other denominations preached and practiced the whole Gospel, and furthermore made a faithful application of the principles of church government which we advocate (which they do not), then, in that case, they might consistently be pointed to as a fair illustration of the workings of our theory, otherwise they fall entirely out of the argument.

Passing over all the discussion concerning the exercise of a legislative function, and what is done in heaven regarding the Constitution, "not in human language," we are frank to confess that Bro. Moore has the advantage of us. We do not know what is in heaven, or what is going on there, or whether the "Constitution of heaven is written in human language," or not. "Secret things belong to the Lord, but the things which are revealed belong to us, and to our children." It is to the latter that we are obliged to confine our investigations.

Bro. Moore states that he gave the chapter and verse wherein judicial authority was delegated to the church. This fact escaped my attention. We suppose he means the Scripture concerning "binding" and "loosing." But how can he claim this so confidently when we have shown that it admits of another construction far more in harmony with the spirit and tenor of the New Testament? (See Note 1.)

I was never more astonished in my life than when I read Bro. Moore's emphatic statement that the Gospel had no moral or spiritual power over the hearts and lives of men. I can scarcely believe that he, or any other man who ever saw a Bible, or heard a sermon, could write the following words. We quote them in full because they are certainly the most remarkable statements that ever fell from a Christian pen: "In regard to binding sin on a man's conscience, that would amount to nothing in the way of removing it." Is it possible, then, that the Holy Spirit, a part of whose office is to "convince of sin," John the Baptist, Jesus Christ, the apostles and evangelists, and all Gospel preachers since, including multitudes in our own church, who labored, and labor, night and day to convince men of sin, were, and are, all mistaken? Surely, this is much labor lost if it does no good to bind sin on men's consciences. There can be no such thing as conviction, and consequently there can be no such thing as conversion. There can be no change of character, and consequently no change of life on that basis. Is this sound doctrine? In the same paragraph the same statement is repeated twice; but surely Bro. Moore did not weigh the full meaning of his words. We have dwelt upon this point because just here lies the kernel of the whole question. Bro. Moore utterly fails to take into account the power of conversion. He entirely leaves out of the calculation the influence of regeneration upon character and conduct. (See Note 2.) He proceeds upon the principle that, but for the church rules, the members would play cards and billiards, and do any other naughty thing. He does not seem to think that any higher principle or motive has anything to do in deterring them from sinful indulgences.

Here is his error, and we can prove it in his own case. Bro. Moore doesn't refrain from gambling simply because it is against the church rules, but primarily because it is wrong. Take away the church rule against gambling to-morrow, and he will not be any nearer playing cards than he was before. Why? Because, as a converted man, he knows it is a sin, and he would have no desire or disposition to do it. (See Note 3.) Is not this what we said, that a church government, based on conversion, is far more effectual in gaining the desired end, than church government based on legislation, or judicial power?

Bro. Moore's prognostications, applied to a community of unconverted people, would be entirely correct; the result would be exactly as he states; but in reference to the church of God his premises being entirely wrong, his conclusions fall to the ground. I believe in the old-fashioned notion that God, and the Lord Jesus, and the Holy Spirit are in the church, and that makes it quite a different body from any worldly society which has to be governed on the worldly principles set forth in the article under review. (See Note 4.)

Our readers will distinctly remember that in both of my former articles, I stated that the church had the authority, in extreme cases, to enforce rules of reformation and expulsion, but that this was the exception and not the rule in apostolic church government. Is not this strictly true? And does it not concede enough for all the legitimate ends of church government? Why does Bro. Moore ignore this admission in his wholesale and vigorous assault upon my position. The exercise of judicial power was rare and exceptional in the practice of the inspired apostles; is there not good reason that we should be more guarded than they? And may we not trace many of our church troubles to an excessive use of this judicial power in the atttempt to enforce a great number of tests of church fellowship? Would it not be infinitely better to make conduct in the church a matter of conviction, instead of constraint? (See Note 5.) And would not a church government, based on that principle, produce fruits of sincerity and integrity far more acceptable to God?

In our limited observation we have seen the two systems of church government, under review, very fairly tested in the Brotherhood. We can recall several churches where a strong judicial authority continually held the rod of discipline over the members, resulting, it is true, in a rigid, external order, where not even the boldest and most rebellious dared to "wear their hair and beards as the lawyers and city clergy do," (see Note 6), else they were weeded out; but there was neither love, nor joy, nor growth in those churches. On the other hand we know a church where the government is administered upon the New Testament plan of love, admonition, patience, forbearance, and the result is that in the great majority of cases, the most refractory are brought to a willing and cheerful compliance with all wholesome discipline. If Bro. A. went wrong, the first church of which we spoke would immediately examine him by committees, try him in council, and either make him acknowledge, or turn him out. The second church would send a godly man to the erring brother, or, as in most cases, the elder, or one of the ministers, or some pious brother, hearing of the case first, would quietly go in search of the wandering sheep, and finding him, would gently expostulate with him, pray with him, and before the matter spread any further, in most cases the trouble would be swept away in penitence and reformation.

This is New Testament church government, and not the iron-clad system which Bro. Moore has set forth. (See Note 7.) The apostles practiced it, relied upon it, so much so that in the whole course and range of New Testament history, covering nearly the whole known world, embracing all nations, in all stages of civilization or uncivilization, and lasting for the space of the natural life of all the apostles, we have the account of but one single expulsion, and that for extreme wickedness, and only for a short time. (See Note 8.) This testimony is simply overwhelming, and confirms, in the most conclusive manner, the principle of church government we have set forth; not a system of license, or loose principles, but a system where a faithful application of Gospel principles, brotherly love, patience, forbearance, gentleness, discreet admonition, are made effectual in the reformation of the erring,—far more effectual than all the Sinaitic thunders and lightnings of judicial authority.

Ecclesiastical power has always been the Juggernaut under which brotherly love bleeds out its life, or, rather, in justice, we should say, the abuse of that power. Paul was inspired, and therefore could have used it infallibly, but he distinctly says that this authority was given him "for edification, and not for destruction." 2 Cor. 10: 8; 13: 10. "FOR EDIFICATION, and NOT FOR DESTRUCTION." This is all that we have claimed. Here we will rest our case. (See Note 9.)

REMARKS.

It will not be necessary for us to answer the above, for every point in it is answered and met in our former articles. We content ourself with a few brief notes.

NOTE 1.—To show that the church possessed judicial power, we referred to the council at Jerusalem. Acts 15. "Binding" and "loosing" we classed under executive. These points were made too plain to need repeating.

NOTE 2.—We wrote deliberately. To bind sin on the conscience of a man, and then let him remain in the church, committing the same sin, amounts to nothing in the way of removing the sin. Christ, the Holy Spirit and the apostles bound sin on the conscience with the distinct understanding that if the sinner did not depart from the error of his way, the church could not fellowship him. And any man who preaches the whole Gospel will preach it just that way. Justice and mercy walk side by side under the Gospel rulings.

NOTE 3.—The church rules may not keep us from playing cards, but they certainly keep card players out of the church, and we thank God for it. If the wheat and tares are left grow together in the church, the pious would have to commune with the card-players and other evil-doers. We commend the church rules in this respect.

NOTE 4.—True, God and the Holy Spirit are in the church, but they do not choose to dwell in churches that deliberately hold in their communion those who are evil-doers. See an account of the Seven Churches of Asia in Revelation.

NOTE 5.—Certainly conviction is better than constraint. But when conviction is not possible, constraint becomes a necessity.

NOTE 6.—We regret that any one should reflect upon our general plainness in this direction.

NOTE 7.—All that is said about the model church we endorse and practice in our own work, and have for years, but not to the extent of leaving the tares stand in the church. We regret that our carefully-stated Gospel system should be called "iron-clad."

NOTE 8.—We read of but a few cases of feet-washing in the New Testament church history. Must we therefore conclude that in the hundreds of congregations that existed in the apostolic age, feet-washing was practiced only a few times? That is just as reasonable as to conclude that the churches expelled only those named in the New Testament. We study the New Testament, not to learn how many were expelled, but to learn on what principle they were expelled. We have a right to apply the same principles to-day.

NOTE 9.—The same apostle who says authority was given him for edification, also says, "Withdraw yourselves from every brother that walketh disorderly." 2 Thess. 3: 6. Put both of these together, and you have mercy and justice united in the Gospel work.

Our readers have now read what we have to say on the New Testament form of church government. Our aim has been to maintain our form of church government. We see no necessity whatever for departing from it. We are confident that the form of church government, set forth by Bro. Moomaw, to leave the wheat and tares grow together in the church, would prove the ruination of the church. No church could remain even moral, let alone religious, with such a loose form of government. To expel only for grave offenses will not preserve the church, for you must remember that it is the little foxes that destroy the vines. It is the little sins that contaminate the church.

We have inserted these articles, not for controversy, but for the purpose of bringing out our form of church government more clearly. This ends all we have to say on the subject for the time being.

Our editorial on "Admonishing," in this issue, was written before receiving the above article, hence we insert these remarks here. J. H. M.

SIMPLE TRUTHS ABOUT FAITH.

SELECTED BY ELIZA J. M'GAUGHEY.

IT was a lovely morning in the month of April. I was permitted to take a walk through one of the streets of B——. We were drawn on and on, to see what views might surprise us at each new turn in the road. We spoke of the unseen way that opens to us with each new revelation of the love of Jesus. My friend remarked that she had many difficulties that blocked her way towards making progress in spiritual life. She said, "The greatest of all is my lack of faith, for I know faith removes mountains of difficulties; but what can one do if one has no faith? I try to exercise it all I can, but I seem to get into greater difficulties."

"Looking at your faith is not doing as you would in natural life. How would you do if you wished to put confidence in an individual? Would you look into your heart to see if you could trust him?"

"Why, no," she replied in the most natural way; "of course I would look at the character of the person I wished to trust, and learn all I possibly could of him; I should take no end of pains."

"Yes, that's what we all do in the affairs of life, and yet, what a different course we pursue when seeking faith in the Lord! Do you not see that the very same way, to ascertain the real character of Jesus, would result in the utmost confidence being exercised in him? Would not acquaintance with his character lead you to put confidence in his word, so that you could venture on his love for you, even when you did not feel that you loved him? It seems to me that the greatest difficulty in the way of trusting Jesus fully is, that we become intellectually enlightened, while the heart is unmoved, and God's Word says it is 'with the heart man believeth.' 'My heart,' says the Psalmist, 'trusteth in him, therefore my heart greatly rejoiceth.' When our heart is in the world, we go after that which pleases us, and thus find it easy to follow the heart's inclinations. So, when our heart is filled with the object of our faith, and satisfied with Jesus, it becomes as natural to trust him, as to trust a husband whose whole life shows him to be fully worthy of all confidence. We cease to think of our faith by being absorbed in the object of faith. We find ourselves so occupied with the love, the beauty, the sympathy and tender care of Jesus, and with what he is, as to forget all about exercising faith."

"I see now that I have made a great mistake in waiting for faith to be given. It must be my seeing the object of faith which leads to trusting, but there is a difficulty in seeing; I have tried many a time. Then what is the hinderance to my seeing Jesus?"

"Just that which you have mentioned,—TRYING to see, instead of believing that the person of Jesus is really present with you. The Holy Spirit cannot afford self the least space in which to work. He will have no partnership with the human; therefore all within must be still, and every activity of self must cease. It is in the utter surrender of all our thoughts to God, that the way is cleared from all obstacles, so that the gentle, quiet spirit can work. If in earthly things the way must be cleared that the king or queen may pass on rapidly, without hinderance, how much greater must be the need in the spiritual life that the way be cleared for the King of Glory, the Prince of Peace, to move on his own kingdom, which is within us!"

"But I should be afraid of becoming indifferent by such quietness of soul."

"Yes, that is just what Satan always says; and this fear serves to keep the children of the King from clearing the way for him to move on in the heart. But we must come to an utter end of our own notions of things. Our ideas must be put aside, that God's thoughts may have place. Faith is always restful. We cannot exercise faith in Jesus without being peaceful and quiet in spirit. While we trust in God, he deals with all our foes, external as well as internal. We rest from pride, from impatience, from anxieties, doubts and fears. We learn to look away from circumstances, away from the little annoying, every-day frictions of life, away from all these things that are constantly occurring, which go against the grain, and this rest of faith is anything but indifference; it is repose in activity, the repose of confidential trust in one who is able to do all he has promised; and that is to keep 'him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed upon him.'"

"I cannot see how we live constantly in this restful state of mind when our faith, or confidence is tried by everything in household matters going wrong. Can it be the will of the Lord that the servants should be dishonest and unfaithful? I asked the Lord to send me a maid, and she proved to be dishonest. Could that have been the Lord's sending?"

"Yes, it surely was; for God's way of strengthening faith, is by trying it; we must be tested to see whether we walk by sight or by faith. Real faith believes God is in everything, believes that all his dealings are in love, and that he is really in those things which go against the grain, overruling what is in itself sinful. Faith is to teach us something that God sees we need to learn; and in learning the lesson we are advancing in the knowledge of our Lord's love. Failing in this, we have hard and uncomfortable thoughts and feelings towards our loving Father; for it is only when our wills blend with God's will, that we see his love for us in all his dealings with us."

It seems contrary to the love of God that the poor widow of old should come into such straits as to be obliged to sell her sons for bondmen. Surely it looked as if the Lord dealt hardly with her; but was it so? Did she not learn, through this trial of her faith, how great was God's watchful care over her, and was she not brought nearer to him by this very trial? God has pledged his word over and over again, that our faith in him shall be met.

I once knew a mother, who kept no servant, and who was greatly tried by her eldest daughter, upon whom devolved a great share of the household duties. All she could do or say proved unavailing. This mother had learned to keep her own soul in peace, and in spite of this and many other trials of her patience, she was kept restful and quiet in spirit, but she thought within herself, "The Lord can correct this; he can turn my child's mind, and he will if I trust him, for he has promised to meet our faith, not our worrying." She put the matter into God's hands and trusted him to correct that which she could not reach. What a surprise awaited her when, on going into the kitchen next morning, she found her daughter had the breakfast already prepared and was looking very happy! "It is in answer to my prayer," replied the mother; "I knew it would be brought about, because God always answers our faith, but I never dreamed it would be done so quickly." From that day the mother said she had no difficulty on that point.

"One more thing occurs to me," said my friend. "How is it that faith should so often be disappointed? I know one who said she had strong faith that the Lord would heal her of spinal difficulty, from which she had been suffering for years. She was anointed in the name of the Lord, and expected to be healed, but was sadly disappointed at finding herself no better. She said, 'What can it mean, when I had such strong faith; why was I not healed?' The answer is very easily given. She had expectation, but not faith in God. Faith accepts: and when we really accept a thing, we have that which we take, but, in order to accept, we must know it to be God's will to grant that which we ask. We know it is his will to heal all who have faith to be healed, because he has said, 'The prayer of faith shall save the sick.' If, then, we rest on his word of promise, we know that we have what we ask; we shall not EXPECT to have it, but accept and have.

One difficulty arises on this point. We may think we have faith, because we expect a thing. That very expectation of future blessings is our greatest hinderance to our present acceptance."

TRADITIONS OF MEN vs. THE COMMANDMENTS OF GOD.

BY ENOCH EBY.

"Why do thy disciples transgress the tradition of the elders? for they wash not their hands when they eat bread. But he answered and said unto them, Why do ye also transgress the commandment of God by your tradition?"—Matt. 15. 2, 3.

In the above text, together with the contexts, we have a very important lesson given by the Savior, under different heads.

1. Tradition may be true or false, good or bad (Webster), hence cannot be relied upon; yet the fault-finding, self-righteous scribe and Pharisee upheld that very thing. They considered it very wrong to eat with unwashed hands, especially when they come from the market. They respected that custom more than the commandment of God. Verses 5 and 6. The Savior answered their question of astonishment by asking them why they are putting more stress upon a tradition than on the written law of God. He shows them that they are only making themselves subject to some of the denunciations of prophecy by so doing. He then teaches them the important truth that it is not that which enters into the mouth, but that which comes out of the mouth that defileth the man, and that, to eat with unwashed hands, does not defile.

Hearing this they become offended,—something rather common when you preach the Truth, and the hearer is following tradition. Perhaps he is following something that his parents or some preacher told him.

It is a very important factor in the make-up of a Christian minister to have humble boldness enough to preach the Truth, even though he may give offense by so doing. This was a very prominent characteristic of the Savior in his method of teaching. We find some people traditionary in sentiment, having been honestly educated to a line of religious sentiment not in harmony with the teaching of the Gospel, and the Truth will naturally condemn the practice of such. So it was with the Savior and the Jews. When Christ could not get their eyes open, he says to his disciples, "Let them alone. They be blind leaders of the blind." Alas, both shall fall into the ditch!

Another startling fact we may learn from our lesson: we, in this age, are liable to worship God in vain, teaching for doctrine the commandments of men. People in this age of the world are as they were in the Savior's days, perhaps more so, for the different doctrines have greatly multiplied since. A vain worship always brings condemnation in all ages, though it may not always be discovered till at the judgment, when the Savior will say, "I know you not."

How important, dear reader, that we search the Scriptures, and know beyond a doubt that our premises are Scriptural! Unless we forsake all and follow Christ, we can not be his disciples.

Again, we find a large percentage of people similar to the class, alluded to in our text, who believed in Christ, but would not confess him lest they be cast out of the synagogue, "loving the praise of men more than the praise of God." John 12: 42, 43. It is important that we ask ourselves why we prefer some other way to the way which Jesus traveled. He truthfully says, "I am the way, and no man cometh to the Father, but by me." To miss eternal life is of too much importance to be indifferent about it. God should be glorified, heaven obtained, hell shunned, and the soul saved, and this can only be done by following Jesus, as taught in the Gospel, and not by tradition.

A TRUE LOVE.

BY SOLOMON SCHUBERT.

A true love is not contingent on its return, or on its appreciation. It goes out unfailingly and unswervingly towards its object, whether it be understoood, or be misapprehended. It may, indeed, long for recognition and response, and rejoice in it when secured; but it does not depend upon them for its life and strength. He who loves truly, loves unselfishly; he loves apart from the question of his being loved, or of his being valued. Only this love is worthy of the name, or of the friendship, which is love at its purest and its best.

Love of this nature is never lost; for he who loves thus either advantages another by his love, or is benefiting his own character by thus loving.

LITTLE THORNS.

BY ANNIE EBY.

As the delicate tendrils of the vine are agitated by the faintest zephyr that stirs in summer, so the sweetest, the most clinging affection is often shaken by the lightest breath of unkindness. An unkind word from one beloved, may often draw the blood from many a heart which would defy the battle-axe of hatred, or the keenest edge of satire. The hopes of many a one, so bright and beautiful but a short time ago, may be blasted in a moment.

We are not all constituted alike, and what to some of us would appear like a beneficial rebuke, would be to others an unkind remark, or, in other words, a thorn whose piercing sharpness is so penetrating, as to call forth blushes of the deepest dye which would gladly have been hidden, had the power to do so been given. Many a struggling, earnest, sensitive soul may say,

"Mine is a daily cross of petty care,
Of little duties pressing on my heart,
Of little troubles hard to reconcile,
Of inward troubles overcome in part."

Shall we, by harshness, press the thorns deeper into the quivering flesh, or shall we, faithfully, help the sufferer into the path of prayer in which the thorns shall turn to flowers of Paradise?

The most beautiful rose has its thorns; and no matter how placid our lives may be, or how flowery our pathway, we must encounter a few little thorns hidden beneath the roses. Better, by far, it should be so; for if we had nothing but sunshine, we would never appreciate its value nor understand its worth. Kind words, fitly spoken, and in due season, send many a weary traveler on his way rejoicing, and heal the wounds which, in time past, seemed so deep that no balm could effect a cure.

Fortunately there never was a poison so deadly, that an antidote could not be found to counteract it. This should be a relief to us; for I sometimes think that we, in our daily lives, have thoughtlessly done many a careless act, that may have pierced our kind advisers, teachers, or parents, and displayed too plainly the thorns we would rather have hidden, whilst, in return, we were reaping sheaves of golden grain from their bountiful store.

As we,—brothers and sisters,—are gliding over the roses in our pathway, we cannot help but come in contact with a few little thorns, the sting of which we should learn to bear with patience. In the new field opening before us, young followers of Christ, we willingly step to the plough, but will we willingly follow it? The rich, cultivated soil will gently move before us, but the rocks, hard and immovable, will withstand us.

"He who looketh back must die." Will we bravely push on through thorns or briers, sand or marsh, rock or clay, and gain the fair, bright world beyond? Will we win a record pure and white by conquering the little thorns of selfishness and self-will? Then must we "Follow our Master humbly step by step

Thro' clouds and darknesss unto perfect day.
So must we drop the roses from our hand,
And let the thorn-pricks heal and take our way
Down hill across a fair and peaceful land,
Lapped in the golden calm of dying day—
Glad that the night is near, and glad to feel
That, rough or smooth the way, God's with us still,
And holding in our sight a heavenly crown."

"A sense of fear is a necessary element in the character of a dependent being. The man who never knows what fear is, knows not what dependence is; and the man who knows not what dependence is, has no appreciation of the right relations between himself and God. When in the middle of a summer night a child is suddenly awakened by a crash of thunder overhead, and clings with spasmodic grasp to its father, and hides its head close under his shoulder, the child shows its sense of absolute dependence. It is really no more dependent upon its father then, than at other times, so far as outward protection from danger is concerned. But its fear and terror have given it a new and quickened sense of its dependent relations to its father. And it is the expression of that dependence that comes with grateful sense to the father, even while he suffers in sympathy with the mental agony of his child. Is it not so in our relations to God? The "Fear not," and the "Be not afraid,"—are they not invitations to show our dependence upon God? It may be right to fear, in order that we may not do wrong in forgetting our dependent relations as earthly children of a Heavenly Father."

"We cannot know ourselves. Our inconsistencies are a riddle to others; but we are so unconscious of what we are, and how we appear, that we do not even recognize what a riddle we are. One does not know the quality of his own voice, or the peculiarities of his gait. A man of philosophical turn of mind was for a long time baffled to know why he always wore out the sole of the right shoe before the left. He was unconscious of treading more heavily on one foot than on the other, of resting unevenly, of turning more often one way than another. Who could know, if not he? Almost any one that chose to observe him. And so it is of character, and of our personality all through. The one subject that we must be content to be inexpert in, is ourselves. And the one consolation we have is, that that subject is the one that we can best afford to know least about."

"In God's kingdom there are a great many spiritual cripples. All their lives some Christians are mournfully looking downward at their own infirmities; doubting, fearing, despairing, when if they only had faith they might stand erect and gaze up into the glory of God's heaven and God's love. We are children of a king, heirs of God. 'All things are ours.' Why, then, go mourning all our days? Let us claim the glorious privileges of our spiritual birthright. His will is that we should not only have life, but have it 'more abundantly.' Let us seek to-day for a fuller, deeper, and healthier spiritual life. Let us look upward, onward, heavenward, 'Look off unto Jesus,' and no longer languish through life, but live in the fullness of faith."

"Faith draws the poison from every grief, takes the sting from every loss, and quenches the fire of every pain; and only faith can do it."

THE BIBLE, A SCHOOL-BOOK OF HEAVEN.

BY LANDON WEST.

IT is a common rule for strangers, in going to a new place and amongst a strange people, to fit themselves somewhat with a knowledge of the customs and language of said people, thus saving their time and also aiding in their enjoyment. They are thus fitted for a new life in the new place.

How can the people of this world of ours expect to enjoy the service and society of heaven, when they did not take interest enough in the only book we have from heaven, to learn its laws, its sentiment, its worship or of its people? The Bible is heaven's book and its only book. From it we now learn all we can learn of its laws or of its people.

The German language comes to us from Germany, and to learn that language fits us for a life and society with the German people; all that we could not have without that language. Such is the case with France or any other nation or country. To get their language is to learn the sentiments, the habits and the laws of that people, and we are thus introduced among them, and aided greatly in our work and enjoyment with them.

So it is with the Bible. It gives us the language of heaven, and to study the Bible is to study the will of God, the teachings of our Savior, and from these we may learn the way to heaven with its service and the sentiments of its people. It is thus our school-book to prepare us for life and society in heaven. To make it our study cannot be otherwise than to enlighten, improve and elevate all who give it their time and attention.

To hear and learn our Heavenly Father's will is to form an acquaintance with him. To study the words and life of Jesus, his Son, the Holy One of Israel, is to learn to know him and to be like him, and that is to be like the people of heaven. We are thus fitted for a life in heaven.

To study the character and office of the spirit of God as given by our Savior in his farewell at the supper, also by Paul and by John and others, is to learn all the while the sentiments of heaven,—the one element in all its people. To know this office and to be led by this Spirit, would it not give all its followers a preparation for an introduction into the society of the world above? Not to know these would leave all without its possession, and hence all unfit for a home in the world of glory. Is it reasonable to suppose that those, of our world of sin, could at all enjoy or be fitted for a life in glory, of eternal life, and light, and peace, and holiness, who did not enjoy it, or wish it here,—those who delighted more in sin, in darkness and rebellion against God, than in acquaintance with, and in submission to his will?

The Bible is our teacher, if we will receive it, to aid us and fit us not only for the life that now is, but for a life yet to come. If all men on earth would shape their lives in accordance with the Word of the Lord, it would bring heaven down to earth, and peace and love would prevail with all men. No wonder our Master bade us pray: "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as in heaven." This is to spread the Bible in all the world and to have all men love and keep it. It is to aid the coming of that kingdom, and for it let us all work and pray.

WATCHING.

BY ALICE GARBER.

"Therefore be ye also ready: for in such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh. Who then is a faithful and wise servant, whom his lord had made ruler over his household, to give them meat in due season? Blessed is that servant, whom his lord when he cometh shall find so doing."—Matt. 24: 44-46.

BLESSED is he whom the Lord finds watching when he comes to claim his own, but what will be the fate of those who are not watching, those who are not ready to meet their Blessed Lord and Master? They will hear these AWFUL words: Depart from me; I never knew you." Then, how can we be so careless, so unconcerned!

"In such an hour as ye think not the Son of man cometh." How often do we see this Scripture fulfilled! People are hurled from time into eternity without one moment's warning. If they are watching, they will be blessed, but if not, sad, sad the doom!

The young men and women, when they arrive at the years of maturity, often say, "O, I expect to be watching by and by but there is plenty of time yet. Don't you see I am healthy and strong? Many years are yet allotted unto me. I expect to be a Christian some time." Ah, false delusion! Death is no respecter of persons. The young have just as much need of watching as the older ones. Do we, as Christians, watch as much as we should? Do we live EACH day and each hour that if the sentence comes we will be ready to say, like good old Paul, "I have fought a good fight?" These are very important things to remember. Only he that watcheth to the end will receive the crown. We are not commanded to watch for a time and then quit, but to be also ready at any time.

"When Jesus comes to reward his servants,
Whether it be noon or night,
Faithful to him will he find us watching
With our lamps all trimmed and bright.
Oh, can we say we are ready, brother?
Ready for the soul's bright home.
Say will he find you and me still watching?
Waiting, waiting when the Lord shall come."

OUR APPEARANCE.

BY FLORIDA ETTER.

As we look over the world our hearts are made sad to see what innovations poor sinful man is trying to introduce into our churches. Instead of reviving the spirit in the church he is killing it as fast as he can. Christians are to be a separate and distinct people, not conformed to this world. Instead of this, vanity is chasing the spirit of life away, until now we can hardly tell our own members from the world.

While we must remember that all of our religion does not lie in dress, yet it speaks for the heart, showing there must be some vanity somewhere. If we have an humble heart, clothed in humility, our dress will surely be right.

I sometimes think we are too careless about these important things. We put on useless ornaments little by little, so gradually that the church does not seem to take cognizance of it, but finally these innovations have such a hold that nothing can be done against them.

Take pride in its infancy,—nip in it the bud, extirpate it at once. Then there will be no trouble. Instead of trying to keep down this, the worst enemy to the church, some rather encourage it.

I think, sometimes, that we, the sisters, are rather too careless about the prayer-covering. It seems that we are somewhat ashamed of it, and only wear it when we are compelled to. There are a number of us who do not wear it at the table when the blessing is being asked. What is asking a blessing but prayer? I cannot see it in any other light. If we only do a thing because we are obliged to and take no pleasure in it, I do not think it will benefit us either in this world or the next. I think we should try to please our Heavenly Father more than poor, sinful man.

Satan seems to accomplish more with some these days, than the Lord. I heard a brother say he attended a love-feast some years ago and one member stood at the door, and as the people came in he would ask each one if he were a member. Those who were, went to the table and the others were sent up into a little gallery. Now if we are true followers of Christ, this question need not to be asked. All will know us not only by our walk and conduct, but by our appearance. Woe to us when our outward appearance is plain and within there is hyprocrisy. "Whosoever is ashamed of me and my words, of him will I be ashamed." Luke 9: 26.

LOSING BOTH WORLDS.

IT is not worth while being religious unless you are altogether religious. It won't do to be merely playing at religion, or having religion on us as a bit of veneer. It must saturate us. Some seek first the kingdom of God; others put it in a second place. Then prayer-meetings are dull, and fellowship gatherings are uninteresting, but the moment a man begins to seek the kingdom of God and his righteousness, all things are right. To any man who has not thrown himself into the kingdom of God, but who is seeking secondly the kingdom of God, he may be religious: but there is something he loves more, and both worlds are spoiled to him. He has neither the cream of the one nor of the other. The great desideratum of the present day is not more Christians, but a better brand of Christians.

"IF you would please another, or if you would help another, you must know how he feels and what he wants. That which would be pleasant or helpful to you, may or may not be so to him. Unless you understand his tastes, his way of looking at things, his needs, and his longings, you are not fitted to minister to him accordingly. Without this measure of knowledge, your best intentions and efforts in any one's behalf may prove unwise and ill-directed. A sympathetic study of the peculiarities of those with whom you have to deal is quite as essential as a loving and generous spirit to kindly and judicious ways and words on your part."

The Gospel Messenger

Is the recognized organ of the German Baptist or Brethren's church, and advocates the form of doctrine taught in the New Testament and pleads for a return to apostolic and primitive Christianity.

It recognizes the New Testament as the only infallible rule of faith and practice, and maintains that Faith toward God, Repentance from dead works, Regeneration of the heart and mind, baptism by Trine Immersion for remission of sins unto the reception of the Holy Ghost by the laying on of hands, are the means of adoption into the household of God,—the church militant.

It also maintains that Feet-washing, as taught in John 13, both by example and command of Jesus, should be observed in the church.

That the Lord's Supper, instituted by Christ and as universally observed by the apostles and the early Christians, is a full meal, and, in connection with the Communion, should be taken in the evening or after the close of the day.

That the Salutation of the Holy Kiss, or Kiss of Charity, is binding upon the followers of Christ.

That War and Retaliation are contrary to the spirit and self-denying principles of the religion of Jesus Christ.

That the principle of Plain Dressing and of Non-conformity to the world, as taught in the New Testament, should be observed by the followers of Christ.

That the Scriptural duty of Anointing the Sick with Oil, in the Name of the Lord, James 5: 14, is binding upon all Christians.

It also advocates the church's duty to support Missionary and Tract Work, thus giving to the Lord for the spread of the Gospel and for the conversion of sinners.

In short, it is a vindicator of all that Christ and the apostles have enjoined upon us, and aims, amid the conflicting theories and discords of modern Christendom, to point out ground that all must concede to be infallibly safe.

Mount Morris, Ill., - - - - Sept. 8, 1891.

BRO. J. S. FLORY, we learn, is making his home at Lordsburg, Cal., for the present.

BRO. LEWIS W. TEETER is to hold a series of meetings at Cerro Gordo, Illinois, commencing the 10th of this month.

A NEW congregation has been organized in Southern California, making now four congregations in that part of the State.

BRO. M. M. BASHOR, of Oregon, who has been spending some months in the East, stopped several days with the Brethren at McPherson, Kans., recently.

THE smallest church in the world is said to be at St. Lawrence, near Ventnor, Isle of Wight. It has a seating capacity of twelve people. Some may think that would be a small place to work in, but in small congregations the very best of work may often be done.

WE are not standing so much in need of large meeting-houses, as we are in need of small houses well-filled. It is a pleasure to preach in a well-filled little house.

A PARTY of about twenty persons, including ex-Senator Ingalls, recently sailed from New York for a visit to Athens, Egypt and Jerusalem, expecting to return in November.

BRO. AMICK spent the last Sunday in August with the Brethren in Chicago. The Brethren are very much interested about the work in the City and desire to see it prosper.

BRO. C. S. HOLSINGER, of Central Illinois, is preparing to enter the mission field. Much of his work will be in Southern Illinois. He goes to Macoupin County, the 12th of this month.

BRO. L. H. EBY, of Summerfield, Kans., has decided to take a more thorough course in Bible study before entering the mission field, and for that purpose will spend the fall and winter months here.

IT is not bad preaching that damages Christianity in the estimation of the people, but it is bad practice. We can stand a good deal of poor preaching if the members of the church will only do what is right.

BRO. T. T. MYERS' address is now 1610 N. Eighth Street, Philadelphia, Pa. He says the work is moving along encouragingly in the city. There have been thirteen additions by letter and baptism since last spring.

TOO late for this issue we received an interesting article from Bro. Miller. It will appear next week. He reports that they had reached their destination in safety; were with the Brethren in Denmark, and having some interesting meetings.

A NUMBER of the congregations in the Brotherhood do not have solicitors for the purpose of collecting funds for the Missionary and Tract Work, and yet they contribute liberally. They raise their funds by taking up public collections once or twice a year; generally at the Thanksgiving meeting, or at their love-feast,—sometimes at both. This is probably as good a way of raising money for that purpose as we are likely to find.

ELSEWHERE in this issue will be found a communication from Bro. Luther Petry, who located at Tallapoosa, Ga., nearly one year ago. We are pleased to learn that he is interested and hopeful in his work. There are many good openings in the South, but whoever undertakes to build up the cause in the Southern States must know no surrender. If Bro. Petry, and others, will cling to their work, they will succeed by and by. Opposition will finally yield. We trust to hear of other ministers entering the South and opening up new fields. There is room for many, and God will certainly bless them in the work.

WE have just printed the Minutes of the District Meeting of Texas, Oklahoma, and Indian Territory. Not many queries were before the Meeting, but a good deal of real practical business was transacted. Six congregations were represented by delegates, and one by letter. The District has started its work on the right plan, and we hope to see the work prosper. A resolution was passed, requiring that each congregation furnish and present to the District Meeting a report of the condition of the church, number of ministers, deacons and lay-members, how many received and dismissed by letter; number received by baptism, number of deaths, and how many excluded. The report of their Ministerial Meeting is both interesting and instructive.

HAD the Savior been born in a palace, the poor might have looked at him from afar and said, "This is the rich man's Savior." But being born in a stable, they can feel that he is truly the friend of the poor.

MT. MORRIS COLLEGE opened last Wednesday with bright prospects, having the largest enrollment for the first day known in the history of the institution for ten years. We are glad to welcome a number of the old students back, together with many new ones. We trust that their sojourn in our midst will be a mutual benefit.

ON the second page of this issue will be found a sermon sent us for publication. It contains some telling declarations that will cause many of our readers to pause and think seriously. One brother has ordered one hundred copies of this issue in order to distribute the sermon as widely as possible. It will do good wherever read.

THERE is a power in secret prayer. He who can quietly kneel at his bedside and give his heart to God just before giving his body and mind to repose, will be blessed with a feeling akin to the restful spirit of the infant that falls to sleep in its mother's arms. Remember, if we pray to God in secret, he will answer and bless us openly.

KANSAS prospects seem to be excellent this season. The secular papers estimate that the crops this year will bring to the people of that State $100,000,000. While this vast sum may not relieve all, it will, nevertheless, have a beneficial influence in every part of the State, and make times much easier than they have heretofore been.

WHEN looking at themselves most people look all the while at the good and never at the evil, but on looking at others they look for the defects. A little reversing would serve a good purpose. Look at others for good to imitate, and at ourselves for the evil, so we can remedy it. If we discover defects in others, let us look at ourselves immediately and see whether we do not have the same defect in another form.

ONE of our exchanges says that Dr. Cyrus Edson, Chief Inspector of the New York Health Department, finds leprosy to be such a growing evil as to call for a leper's hospital on the Atlantic coast. After much experience with it, he pronounces leprosy a contagious disease. Since the opening up of easy communication with the Orient, lepers have been landed in all our ports, and of late accounts of such cases are becoming alarmingly frequent.

WRITING from Keuka, Fla., August 23, Bro. J. I. Miller says, "Bro. E. J. Neher gave us an excellent discourse to-day. His subject was 'Walking with God.' It seems that he is improving so much in his ministerial work. We still have the best of meetings. I have never lived in a more quiet and peaceable locality than here. The members all seem to be full of zeal, and at peace with each other, which makes it still more pleasant.'" We hope to always have such good reports from the church at Keuka.

SIMON PETER, the apostle, was a remarkable man in many ways, but we are apt to allow our judgment concerning him to be more or less influenced by the spots upon him. He received three of these spots the night that Jesus was betrayed, and we may possibly spend more time looking at these spots than at the real man with all his noble traits. But these spots were all washed away by the blood of Jesus, so we need not look at them any more. When we look at Simon Peter aright we will see a noble Christian man, worthy of imitation.

We would like to get a few copies of "Trine Immersion Traced to the Apostles." Parties who can spare copies will please inform us. We will replace them when the new edition is published.

The religion of the land will go down with the family altars. As long as the fire is kept alive on the family altars there is hope, but when fathers and mothers cease to be sufficiently interested to keep the flame alive on these altars, there is little prospect of converting their sons and daughters. Fathers and mothers, do take time to pray. Set apart an hour each day, morning or evening, in which to have a special season of devotion with your family. Read a few verses of Scripture—not too many, for a long chapter may not be remembered. If you feel so inclined, sing some familiar hymn. Let your prayer be short, but in deep earnest, always praying for what you need. Pray for your children, as well as yourselves. Let them see that you are concerned for them. This will not be time wasted. It will bring better returns than any other portion of your time, however employed. If there is coldness in your congregation, keep the fire on your home altar the more carefully. A warm heart can endure much cold when out in the world. A daily service at the altar will save many sons and daughters from going to ruin.

ADMONISHING THE ERRING.

There is one point in Bro. Moomaw's article of two weeks ago that we desire to earnestly commend. We did not have space to notice it in last issue. We refer to moral suasion,—the guidance of conduct by conversion, persuasion, pastoral admonition, bringing to bear upon the heart and soul the powerful influence of moral and spiritual motives. It is a thought that we desire to commend and impress upon the minds of all our readers as being worthy of their most serious consideration. These earnest and well-guided pastoral admonitions, aided by the prayers and examples of all the faithful, in connection with our present form of church government, would give us a wonderful influence for good in the religious world.

We have often felt that, as officials, we do not manifest sufficient concern for the erring, and often permit them to pass from one little step to another in wrong doing, until they are brought before the church and tried for offenses that might have been averted with a little care. A member may now and then do something not just right in our sight, as well as in the sight of others, and we, instead of kindly admonishing him concerning it, often talk very injudiciously about the fault until it becomes a matter of common gossip, resulting in a church trial, and often ill feelings. A young member may wear that which is unbecoming a Christian. More than likely a kind admonition from one of the members might remove the objectionable article and save both the erring member and others.

Occasionally, when the weak make a misstep, they are so injudiciously rebuked as to greatly discourage them, whereas they ought to be kindly admonished and have their error plainly pointed out to them. There is nothing like love and forbearance in correcting the erring. Any one who will carefully study the history of Jesus cannot help seeing how gentle he was towards those who stumbled in life. He was ever willing to help the erring. Not that he tolerated error in the least, but while he condemned sin, he also pointed out the way of reform. In some cases it may require months to get the erring to see their mistakes. We have seen cases where it required a year of careful admonition and Christian instruction before the erring one was fully reformed. The matter was never brought before the church, only it was known that the officials were giving the cases all due attention.

One time a young brother, who had been in the church only a short time, attended the Fourth of July celebration with his wife, and sister. After looking around and seeing many things unbecoming the people of God, his wife said, "I do not believe this is the right place for Christians to be." The young brother replied, "That is just what I was thinking." So they both went home, resolved to stay away from such places. A month after that they told their housekeeper about it. He told them that was just the right way to do. When they got into a place not becoming Christians, leave at once, and then stay away. Being sorry for our mistakes and then departing from them is genuine repentance. That was the end of attending unbecoming places with that brother and sister, and the manner of their seeing and departing from the evil was far better than making further trouble about it. We have often wondered why more cannot be done in the way of wisely admonishing privately. It is so much easier to approach members in that way, and then it leaves much better feelings. We do not refer to grave public charges, but rather to minor errors of inexpediency, and to such errors and mistakes as the young and weaker ones will now and then be led into. Now and then we will meet a case which cannot be reached by admonition, forbearance or any mild treatment. But when these methods prove to be of no avail, then the church must of necessity withdraw fellowship.

As elders, we may do very much by kindly and intelligently admonishing the members at our quarterly council-meetings. It is necessary to rebuke only in cases demanding firm talk, but kind, well-directed admonition will always be found in order, and greatly appreciated by the members, both old and young. Let everything be done with a view of saving the erring. Much depends upon the elder, and other officials, acting consistently. Sometimes officials are very firm on some points of church government or doctrine, which they labor to enforce, and yet absolutely unconcerned about other points of equal importance. Such officials are not good housekeepers, and cannot be with such policy. They ought to be in perfect accord with the general Brotherhood, and labor to intelligently maintain all of her principles, so that the members may have reasons to place confidence in them.

We believe that our system of church government is a good one, and there is no necessity whatever for departing from it, but it might be wisely supplemented with a more vigorous and far-reaching system of pastoral visits and fatherly admonitions, that would win many from the error of their way without the painful duty of citing them to church councils. We have had experience enough in this line, and a range of observation sufficiently extensive to convince us that at least one-half of our church trials might be avoided by doing more careful private work among the erring.

As we said, there is no necessity for departing from our system of church government, but we ought to study it well and apply it with wisdom, so as to render unquestionable justice. The erring ones should be given room to repent. Even a heretic is to be gained by admonishing if possible. And though one is expelled from the church, he is yet to be treated kindly, and admonished as a brother. While we should stand firm for all that is right, we should nevertheless show great kindness towards the erring, not for the purpose of endorsing their error, but with a view of winning them to Christ. Sometimes it requires a good deal of earnest work to win an erring one from the sin into which he has fallen, but it should be remembered that one soul is of great value, and James says, "Brethren, if any of you do err from the Truth, and one convert him; let him know, that he which converteth the sinner from the error of his way, shall save a soul from death, and hide a multitude of sin." Jas. 5: 19, 20. It will, therefore, pay to use every lawful means to win back those who are inclined to err from the Truth. Much of this, we hold, can be done in a private way.

What we stand greatly in need of just now, is more activity upon the part of those who are strong in the faith to save those who may be weak. Go to the weak member, admonish him kindly, pray for him and with him; let him see that you love him; possibly you can gain him. If you do, you save a soul from death, and God will bless you for it. Now and then he may not clearly see his error, and yet he promises to do so no more. Well, that is encouraging. Perhaps he will see it afterwhile, when he gets more light. If he will only turn from the error, there is a chance to save him. So work earnestly and wisely, and trust God to help and bless you both. If kind admonitions cannot win, cannot improve, cannot enlighten, then the church can take action and withdraw from that person who walks so disorderly, and will not appreciate what the church is doing for him.

We believe that there are hundreds of cases that could be completely adjusted privately to the entire restoration of the erring, and would therefore advise our brethren to give it their serious and prayerful attention, in order that good may grow out of it. One time an elder met a newly-baptized sister on the street, wearing a very unbecoming, fashionable head-dress. He pretended not to notice it, but treated her with the utmost kindness. He told a good sister about it, who was strong in the faith, and requested her to kindly instruct the sister concerning her duty. She did so, and that was the end of it. Both sisters are still living, sound in the faith, and zealous in the cause.

We wish to add, with emphasis, that there is no need whatever of departing from our long-established rules in order to apply the above suggestions. There is no need of speaking unbecomingly of these rules. There is no need of calling them iron-clad. They are intended only for those who will not be moved by mild means. People who will do what is right will never be disturbed by their wise use. They are good in their place, have done a good work in the past, and may serve a grand purpose in the future if judiciously applied. But while we adhere with wisdom and fidelity to our well-established principles, let us, with equal zeal and wisdom, see what we can do in the way of restoring the erring to their first love. Here is work for every member in the church.

The above suggestions, in connection with the form of church government set forth in our two former articles, will prove of great value whenever wisely applied. J. H. M.

PALESTINE ITEMS.

A LADY who has been living in Jerusalem for ten years, writes thus to the Age to Come Herald concerning the contemplated railroad from Jaffa to Jerusalem:

"The railroad, I suppose, will be finished this year. They have sent for three more engines, and they will bring Pullman cars likewise for the road. The world moves, and the new growth of Palestine will be more than a restitution.

"If the Lord wills, I expect to go to Jaffa when the railroad is finished. I have never been away from Jerusalem and its suburbs since I came here ten years ago, except once when I went to Hebron."

She further adds: "The markets are now, May 27, full. Eggs are plenty—seven for four cents. Fine cucumbers and apricots are very cheap. Plenty of everything good, and large quantities for a little money.

Benjamin has done well with his garden this year. He sold all his beans for a good price, and is selling off his onions. The people like to buy of him. We are all blessed with an abundance of work. This is no place for lazy people, unless they have a good purse of money, and then they can live cheap and well.

Real estate is in good demand yet. House rent is especially high. They tell us that every steamer brings thirty or forty families of Jews. Many have money and will buy land.

The Turks love money, and they see this is their time, and they are selling and giving up their houses. The present boom in land will not last always. There will be changes; ups and downs; and there is land enough around the city to swell its proportions to any size. The growth of the city is encouraging.

The best way for new-comers is to buy land and build. That will keep down the price of land, houses and rent. Buy land and build. That is just what the Jews are doing, and they are right; it is just what should be encouraged."

TWO PLAIN SISTERS.

ONE of our young sisters, who has spent a good deal of time and means adorning her mind and soul with gems of truth and usefulness, has been canvassing in some of our cities. We had the opportunity of reading a letter she wrote to one of her friends at this place. For the benefit of those who think they might as well be out of the world, as to be out of fashion, we quote the following from her letter:

"Well, I wondered and wondered, before I started out, what people would think of me for dressing the way I did. I have been convinced since I am here, that I have had as much respect, yes, more shown me on account of my plain dressing than I would have received otherwise.

"One lady, after looking at my articles, said, 'Yes, I like them very much, but I like your bonnet better.' She said it was so neat and pretty. I asked her if she knew why I wore that kind of a bonnet? and she said 'No.' I said, 'The church to which I belong, believes in plainness and uniformity, and we all wear that kind of bonnets and dress plainly. The lady said, 'I get so tired of fashionable dressing and other things that society demands of people these days, and wish I could get away from it somewhere.' I talked with her a few moments, and she said she felt she had had a good little visit with me and thanked me for it.

"At another house, one of the finest in this town, the lady told me before I left, that she didn't usually admit agents, but my personal appearance was so different from most agents that she thought she would invite me in. She gave me her order too.

"Sometimes silly young girls, who think themselves 'some' but who are far from real ladies, will stare and chew gum and snicker. Such things are not pleasant, of course, but I don't care, for I think the poor things do not know any better. I tell you I believe if we stick to plainness, with neatness and cleanliness along with it, we are going to gain in the end. I think our church is the one church destined to carry out the truth of the Bible till the end of time. I hope I may always be an humble and faithful member of our church."

This reminds us of an intelligent young sister who, some years ago, received an invitation to a very fashionable wedding in an aristocratic family. At first thought it occurred to her that it would never do to attend the wedding in her plain attire, and she resolved not to go. But she finally decided that she would go, attired neatly and plainly, as becometh women professing godliness, and take her religion with her. She was kindly received and pleasantly entertained. The well-cultured guests—though in the hight of fashion themselves—tried not to embarrass the young sister by staring at her, but labored to make her feel welcome. When the hour came for the vote of "honor," this sister was surprised to hear her name announced as the one elected. She was then led to the table, and occupied the seat of honor in harmony with Luke 14: 10, which says: "But when thou art bidden, go and sit down in the lowest room; that when he that bade thee cometh, he may say unto thee, Friend, go up higher."

The sister returned to her home, feeling fully persuaded in her own mind that plain, neat Christian attire, accompanied by intelligence and good manners, was no hinderance in good society.

ELSEWHERE in this issue will be found an account of the District Meeting recently held in Texas. The brethren composing this District know what subjects to discuss at their ministerial meetings. Their program is an excellent one.

IF we could only be in the place of those we sometimes censure, what a difference it would make! It will be well for us to now and then imagine ourselves in the place of the unfortunate creatures whom we so severely criticise for their mistakes in life.

JAMES (1: 26) says: "If any man among you seems to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, but deceiveth his own heart, this man's religion is vain." We care not how much religion a man has, if his tongue remains unbridled, his religion can profit him nothing. If he has not religion enough to take care of his tongue, how can he expect to prosper in the Lord's work? This is something worth looking into, and deserves most serious consideration. If there is anything about us that needs special watching it is our tongue.

IF we must spend our time magnifying objects, let it be the magnifying of that which is good, and then study the good. Certainly we will see defects at times, but we should avoid them. That is what defects are for, to be avoided. The person who spends his precious time magnifying other people's faults is cultivating the greater fault of the two. If we point to the evil with the left hand, we should also point out the good with the right hand, and urge the people to flee the evil and cleave to the good. The best way to treat people's defects is to turn away from them, and look for something good.

From Philadelphia to Kansas.

WHEN I last wrote you I was visiting with our dear brother, T. T. Meyers and the church of Philadelphia. After finishing our visit, I started out for a few weeks' sight-seeing in the East.

I first went to New York City, the Metropolis of the New World, and also the modern Gotham. Crossing Brooklyn Bridge I visited Brooklyn on Long Island. This City is called the city of churches, but is not, strictly speaking, a city of church goers. Returning to New York City, I visited the statue of "Liberty Enlightening the World," which is a very fine bronze monument of the friendship which has always existed between America and France. I cannot pause to describe Castle Garden, Trinity church, Harlem Heights and other places of interest, but must hasten on.

I took the steamer, Dean Richards, of the People's Line, for Albany. The trip up the historic Hudson is one well worth taking. Passing the wonderful Palisades we rush on, leaving old historic forts, bluffs, and cities to the right and left; the scenic beauty alone is sufficient to make the trip entrancing. From Albany's new state house one can get a fair view of the Hudson Valley.

I next went to Saratoga Springs. Here I found fashion and popularity to be the chief end of life. Then I went to the great Falls of the Niagara, whose praise is sounded throughout the world. This is God's work, and well represents his power to make sublime and wonderful things. The mighty body of water, rushing over the precipice, falls a distance of 160 feet, with a deafening roar.
